Its production entailed endless work and taxed the capacities of the giant Cines' studio to the uttermost. Practically all of the costumes used were made in the wardrobe department of the plant, while the three blacksmiths regularly employed by Cines were busy for months preparing armor and weapons of the period. The photography throughout is brilliant and flawless and the acting superb. Anthony Novelli, Cines' leading man, whose interpretation of Vinitius in "Quo Vadis" attracted such international attention, plays Antony, while many other favorites of the "Quo Vadis" company are seen in both important and minor rôles. The city of Alexandria, Egypt, was built in stucco and the spectacle of thousands of soldiers swarming up the steps of the palace will make a scene in this mighty picture not soon forgotten. Jeanette Trimble, well known to American picture fans and for years one of Cines' leading women, was especially hired to play Cleopatra. Miss Trimble has not been seen in Cines' film for some time past and her appearance in "Antony and Cleopatra" marks her first venture since her retirement.

CONSCIENCE

3 REEL FEATURE FILM

DON'T MISS THIS WONDERFUL PHOTODRAMA

This is an entertainment that instructs. Visit with us the Haunts of the underworld and feel the pulse of Life in the great Metropolis. Saunter along the Great White Way, dine in the Lobster Palaces, dance the fashionable tangos and witness the wonderful Spanish and Oriental dances in the Cabarets. Watch the feverish Poolroom Gambling. Descend for a moment, Dante like, to the depths of wickedness, and through it all, let "Conscience" teach you a great moral lesson.

This Drama is Sanctioned by the Board of Education of City of New York.

ANNOUNCEMENT

THE HEAVY DEMAND FOR Simplex

projectors has been greater than the supply for the last nine months. In spite of strenuous effort and much overtime on the part of our factory, we have had to keep our good customers waiting from two to four weeks for Simplex machines. Our rule is to fill all orders in the same rotation as that in which they are received. We have no favored customers whose orders are given preference. We treat all alike.

While our output has been greatly increased, the new business at home and abroad has more than kept pace with it. Simplex is now practically as well known in England, Germany, France, Russia and South America as it is in the United States and Canada. Wherever this peerless projector has been introduced, the demand for it has rapidly increased. The adoption of Simplex for Kinemacolor projection all over the world will in itself tax our capacity for we are under contract to deliver several hundred machines of that type within the next ninety days.

For these reasons we most earnestly urge our friends to place their orders early for Simplex projectors and avoid the disappointment of not being able to get them on time. We want to supply everyone who is anxious to adopt the Simplex, but if you wait until the last minute before ordering, it may be impossible to get the machine on time.

Dealers will find it to their advantage to place a standing order and be sure of a dependable supply of a certain number of machines per week.

ANNOUNCEMENT

We are now printing the word "Eastman" on the margin of all our Cine film. We want the exhibitor to know when he is and when he is not getting Eastman film. It will be to his advantage—and ours.

Of course it will take time for such identifiable films to reach the consumer—so don't expect results at once—but it's a step in the right direction—for your interests and ours.

MOTION PICTURE EXHIBITORS' LEAGUE

Illinois State Convention to Be Held in Peoria on September 23rd and 24th

The big Illinois State Convention will be held on Tuesday and Wednesday, September 23 and 24, 1913, in Peoria, at the Jefferson Hotel.

Extensive arrangements are being made to hold the biggest convention ever held in Illinois. It is confidently expected that the state exhibitors will gather in large numbers, and that not less than five hundred will be present.

Mr. Klem Kerr is in Peoria with an able assistant, making arrangements for the convention. The convention will be managed by able, efficient exhibitors, and an itemized statement will be given of every dollar received and every dollar expended, and as the plans are now being arranged there will be a snug little sum turned over to the State's new treasurer to start the Illinois Branch No. 2 on a thorough business basis.

State officers will be elected to fill the vacancies, a constitution and by-laws adopted, and committees appointed. Every exhibitor in the State of Illinois that is eligible to belong to the League is invited whether they belong to the League or not.

Everything is going fine with the League. On the 23rd and 24th the man that can't see beyond the Cook County line will realize that Illinois is a larger state than they have heretofore realized, and that there are some real exhibitors outside of Cook County.

INDIANA STATE CONVENTION

Arrangements have been made to hold a state convention at Indianapolis, Ind., on Tuesday, September 30th, and Wednesday, October 1st, for the purpose of filling the vacancies caused by the recent bolt of some of the officers of Indiana, and to bring the exhibitors together that they may become fully acquainted and hear all of the facts pertaining to the New York Convention.

This will be the largest attended convention ever held in Indiana. Every exhibitor in the state is invited to attend. The session will be held at the Sevron Hotel, the biggest and newest hotel in Indianapolis.

NOTES

Mr. L. J. Ditmeyer called at Mr. Neff's office Friday. Mr. Ditmeyer is interested in the Kinemacolor pictures, and was making arrangements to place a machine for the purpose of censoring his pictures.

Mr. Rayburg, of Dayton, O., who has recently opened a new large theatre on the most prominent street in Dayton, and Dr. Alexandria, another prominent exhibitor, called at Mr. Neff's office on Friday.

Mr. Neff visited Dayton, O., Saturday and Saturday night; was in Columbus Sunday, and in consultation with several members of the League. He met Governor Cox and the Industrial Commission on Monday; left Columbus Monday night at 3 a. m., arriving in Cincinnati Tuesday morning.

Mr. A. J. Wellman, of Ironton, O., a prominent exhibitor, was a visitor at Mr. Neff's office to get information as to building codes and restrictions of the state. He is going to build a fine new theatre in Ironton, O., which will be called the "Scenic." Mr. Jordan accompanied Mr. Wellman. Mr. Jordan is going to put up a large new theatre in Ashland, O.

EASTMAN KODAK COMPANY DEFEATED BY ANSCO COMPANY

Federal Court Holds that Eastman Kodak Company is Infringer in Famous Photographic Film Case

Decision was handed down August 14th by Judge Hazel in the United States District Court of Buffalo, after eleven years of litigation, finding the Eastman Kodak Company guilty of infringement of the patent of Hannibal Goodwin, owned by the Goodwin Film & Camera Company, whose sole trade agent is the Ansco Company of Binghamton. The patent is under this decision given a broad and controlling construction covering the universally used, modern photographic film in all forms, including cartridge film, film packs and Cinematograph film.

The decree under this decision not having been filed at the time of going to press, further comments will be deferred until a future issue.

Respecting the foregoing an officer of the Eastman Company said to our representative:

"We are not issuing any lengthy statement about the Goodwin suit, but wish to call your attention to the fact that the case has been heard in the lower court only, and that court stated that, 'Although the determination of the controversy is in favor of the validity of the patent and accords to the claims a liberal construction, yet such a determination was reached upon record of so contradictory a character that there remained a doubt as to the correctness of the conclusions.'

"Don't place too much importance on the sensational stories appearing in the newspapers. Some of the things that have been published are absolutely false."

M. T. Tobias has just been engaged as district manager for the territory lying east of Pittsburgh. It would seem that Warner's Features, Inc., have secured a valuable man for their organization, as Mr. Tobias has been in the motion picture field for the past seven years, during which time he has been in the employ of the Greater N. Y. Film Rental Company, the Kleine Optical Company, three years with the Actograph Company, manager of the Western Film Exchange, New York City; the Western branch of the Mutual, and the Albany branch of the General Film Co.

F. C. GUNNING TO GO WITH WARNER'S FEATURES

F. C. Gunning has resigned from the American Eclair to become assistant general manager of Warner's Features. He leaves the Eclair greatly to the regret of his associates with whom he was extremely popular, and he has their best wishes for success in the new position he is about to assume.

F. C. GUNNING

During the past year Mr. Gunning has been in charge of the publicity department for the American Eclair and Union Features, and has also officiated as sales manager for the Eclair. He is best known to thousands of exhibitors as "ME" Eclair's publicity man, as he has edited the Eclair's Bulletin under that name. As Mr. Warner will spend most of his time on the road looking after the branch officers, Mr. Gunning will look after the New York office of the Warner's Features. The New York office is being handsomely fitted up, and will occupy the entire floor of the Leavitt building on Forty-sixth street.

Mr. Gunning has had extensive newspaper, editorial and advertising experience. He has been an exhibitor on his own account, and for two years had special sales experience in connection with the Victor Talking Machine. He is thoroughly in touch with conditions and wants of theatre owners. He joins the Warner's Features on September 8th.

"ATLANTIS" HAS BEEN FILMED

Gerhart Hauptmann, the winner of the $10,000 Nobel prize in literature, has sold the moving picture rights of his novel, "Atlantis," to the Great Northern Film Company, and the large monetary consideration was accepted only after persistent urgings. According to the agreement no expense was to be spared in the production, and while Hauptmann took no active part in its direction, he was freely consulted and made many valuable suggestions. A 12,000-ton liner of the Scandinavian-American Line was chartered at a cost of $6,000, and in addition to the officers and crew, there was a passenger list of 500 on board to lend realism to the nine-reel subject. The monster vessel steamed into the North Sea, where many of the more thrilling incidents of the novel are enacted, and another vessel was purchased outright in order to lend realism to the production.

Those who have read Hauptmann's "Atlantis" will realize the amount of detail that must have been gone into in order to accentuate the thrilling features of the story. The principal female role will be played by Madame Orloff, an actress well and favorably known in the principal theatres of Europe. It was at the suggestion of Hauptmann that this distinguished actress was engaged by the Great Northern Company. The role of Arthur Stoss, the "Armless Wonder," which is an important one in the novel, was played in the film version by Unthan, the well-known performer, whom the artist made his type in the novel. The production will be in nine parts, and it is promised that the entire undertaking will prove one of the most sensational and unusual ever attempted. Being the pioneers in the field of features the Great Northern should know how to go about such a gigantic task.

"FROM DUSK TO DAWN"
(Occidental)

There is refreshing crispness in the theme and action of this four-part feature, in that it is written and produced without an attempt to dodge the main issue in approaching a subject that many authors handle most gingerly. Daniel Grayson, a young iron moulder, is too much occupied with affairs of his union and political matters to pay any attention to the women.

FROM DUSK TO DAWN

The foreman and manager at the iron works where he is employed decide Dan is too much of an agitator, and force him to leave the works. An explosion occurs in which several men are killed, including Freddy Wayne, an apprentice boy to whom he had taken a great liking. This precipitates a strike. Dan is injured in a riot, arrested, and taken to the police station, where he meets Carlena Wayne, Freddy's sister, a laundry worker who has also been arrested on a charge of picketing. Following the settlement of the strike, Dan is nominated for governor on the working-class ticket. So popular has he grown that all parties are fused to defeat him. Carlena takes active part in the campaign and they make headway until the "conspiracy" trial is sprung. In this scene Clarence Darrow, the great labor attorney, enacts the actual scene of the trial. The verdict of "Not guilty" brings a wave of enthusiasm and Dan is elected governor, and with him a majority of the legislature. The passage of a "Right to work" bill brings a crisis and Mrs. Alden takes Carlena, and they invade the governor's office to lend assistance to those who are urging Governor Grayson to sign the bill. Powerful influences are brought to prevent the signing. The plea of Carlena arouses old memories, and Grayson signs the bill and trades the pen to Carlena for her hand and they becomes "comrades for life."

State rights will not be sold. A number of companies under the management of Ernest Shipman will tour various parts of the country.

A. Warner, vice-president and general manager of the newly formed Warner's Features, Inc., will leave in about ten days on a business trip which will take him to the Pacific Coast and back. Mr. Warner will go first to Montreal, and then proceed West by way of Toronto, Winnipeg, Vancouver, and so on to Seattle and the Coast cities. The purpose of his trip will be to acquaint himself with conditions as regards the installation of the Warner program.

The Newman Manufacturing Company, 717-721 Sycamore street, Cincinnati, Ohio, and 101-103 Fourth avenue, New York, N. Y., has just added another floor to its Cincinnati plant and has installed additional machinery and equipment. This firm, which manufactures brass frames, brass easels, brass railings, and equipment in general for theatres, found it necessary to make this addition owing to the great increase in its business. The New York factory reports splendid business, and great fall trade is looked forward to. Their complete catalog can be had upon request.

MICHAEL A. TESTA

Although only thirty-two years of age Mr. Testa has been recognized for some time as an authority on motion picture films, having had the management of three large film exchanges in the East, which position he filled with credit to himself. He is well liked by all who have come in contact with him and in handling the Independent film for the several years he has been connected with the trade his customers have always received a square deal. Mr. Testa is now president of the Dante Motion Picture Manufacturing Company and has offices at 1-3 Union Square, New York City.

JUDGE DONNELLY ORDERS THE MANAGEMENT OF THE 48th STREET THEATRE TO REMOVE MISS LOTTIE BRISCOE'S NAME FROM THE PROGRAM

The piece known as "Kiss Me Quick" was produced for one night at Asbury Park, some six weeks ago. From there it went to Boston and played for three weeks. During the time it was in Boston, Miss Lottie Briscoe received information from different sources that the farce was a satire or burlesque of the moving picture business, actors, actresses and directors, and that she was mixed up in it. She consulted her attorney, Mr. Guy T. Murray, of 64 Wall street, New York, who advised her that there was nothing to do but wait till she herself could see it and as it was impossible to get to Boston, she had to wait until "Kiss Me Quick" had its initial production in New York. Acting on her attorney's advice, she came over from Philadelphia, where she is the leading lady with the Lubin plant, and in company with Mr. Murray witnessed the first performance, and found that her name was on the program as one of the characters and that the whole piece ridiculed and satirized moving picture actors and actresses; holding them up to the public as illiterate, ignorant and without the least education or refinement.

The next day, Judge Whitaker, on her application, signed an order to show cause why the management of the Forty-eighth Street Theatre and the author should not be restrained from using her name. The argument was heard on Friday, August 29th, before Judge Donnelly, and the attorneys for the Forty-eighth Street Theatre pressed Judge Donnelly to visit the piece and see for himself. This Judge Donnelly did, and saw the show the same evening. After the first act, Judge Donnelly sent for the attorney to the management and the manager, Mr. Leander Richardson, and ordered them both to remove Miss Lottie Briscoe's name from the program.

Miss Briscoe took this action, not so much for any damage that might be done to herself, but in defense of the profession with which she is associated.

J. W. JOHNSTON

J. W. Johnston, whose portrait is presented on another page, is the leading man for Eclair, and has had years of training in the acting profession. Owing to his histrionic talent his success as an actor was assured from the start. He has traveled extensively and has appeared in many countries.

Mr. Johnston has been in the support of some of America's brightest theatrical stars. His greatest achievements have been in the portrayal of powerful characters in "The Squaw Man," "The Wolf," and "In Old Kentucky," respectively.

He has also had considerable experience in various stock companies. Three years ago he deserted the stage for the photo-drama, and has been in this line of acting ever since, the greater part of this time under engagement to Eclair. The most notable films he has appeared in while with the Eclair company are "The Stronger," "The Superior Law," "The Man Who Dared" and "The Sons of a Soldier." He is seen to special advantage in the title role of "Rob Roy."

Mr. Johnston is of pleasing personality and his knowledge of the world, owing to his extensive travels, makes him a most interesting and entertaining companion. He recently returned from a vacation abroad, during which he visited his mother in Ireland. When asked, on his return, what he would like to do if he could choose, he answered without hesitation—"Give Home Rule to Ireland." Thus he has proved himself a good Irishman as well as a good actor. More power to him!

Ernest Shipman, the well-known Canadian theatrical manager, has secured the Canadian franchise from Warner's Features, Incorporated, for three-reel Canadian releases upon Warner's regular program.

The Canadian studios will be portable, and will have transient locations all the way from the Grand Banks off Newfoundland, and from Evangeline's land in Nova Scotia, to the last frontier of Alaska. Living reproductions of the characters made famous by Sir Gilbert Parker, and Drummond, the Canadian poet, with historic backgrounds in picturesque Quebec, and the lower provinces, will be regular features. The lumberjacks of the backwoods will have their turn, and the world-renowned Northwestern Mounted Police will figure conspicuously in a series of "Law and Outlaw" stories. The Canadian voyageur, the trapper, the half-breed guide, and the Indian hunter, will all in turn play their part in these tremendous three-reel feature stories of the Great Dominion.

The first release will be entitled "The Hero of the Long Soo," a story of life, love, and death along the north shore of Lake Superior, reaching its climax when the faithful Indian guide rescues the white man's bride in his canoe and successfully shoots the rapids of the "Long Sault" only to meet his death in its maelstrom of waters. The story brings out in vivid contrast the intrigues of the Cobalt silver mines, which wiped a number of speculators off the financial map, and brought happiness into the life of a member of the Mounted Police, who dared to speculate with his heart and pocket at the same time, while in government employ.

EDITORIAL COMMENT

The moving picture industry is in its infancy.

* * * *

This is indisputably demonstrated by the evolutions in incorporation and combination.

* * * *

Never has any industry in the history of the world produced so many millionaires in so short a time.

* * * *

What the gold mine of '49 was to that day the moving picture industry is to the adventurers of this day.

* * * *

And the return is more certain from the industry of to-day than it was from the ventures which produced the mining kings.

* * * *

The box office affords a continuous flood of the rivers of gold; each department scoops off a little as the stream flows on into the ocean of the producers' profits.

* * * *

The public must be entertained; it pays out its good money for amusements no matter how hard the times or how pressing the insistent and clamorous creditor may be.

* * * *

Governor James M. Cox, of Ohio, has announced that he will request Ohio's new Board of Censorship for moving pictures, now being appointed under an act of the State Legislature, to disapprove films having to do with the escape, arrest and trial of Harry K. Thaw. If this act of the new board is an example of what is to follow, there will be few if any who can conscientiously criticise this Ohio innovation.

* * * *

We regret the fact that in almost every newspaper we read in which some gruesome sensation or some sensational trial figures the line, "Moving picture men were present" is always displayed. Cinematography has enough troubles to combat without showing on the screen pictures of the Diggs' "White Slavery" trial, the court troubles of Jack Johnson, the escape of Harry K. Thaw, etc. Censorship of such pictures is a benefit to the industry and every effort toward its permanent establishment is to be heartily commended.

* * * *

It is also believed that this new Ohio Board will frown upon near lynchings, too promiscuous display of firearms, suggestive plots, the secular picture, and plots causing heroes to be made of notorious criminals. If this is the case, the Ohio Board of State Censorship will be commended instead of being condemned quite generally. The Governor and his industrial commission, we understand, are taking pains to select men and women of judgment and, best of all, of knowledge of the moving picture art, to compose the Censorship Board, which is another step in the right direction.

* * * *

The idea of state censorship of moving pictures must rise or fall by the judgment displayed by these new officials. Governor Cox's initial policy, as quoted above, augurs well for the Governor, the State of Ohio, and the moving pictures. Governor Cox has given Ohio many needed and popular laws. Maybe his State Board of Moving Picture Censorship will prove another happy idea. If it proves the means of eliminating the suggestive, the disgraceful, the unclean and the unduly sensational in moving pictures shown in Ohio, the Board will not have been organized in vain.

* * * *

William A. Pinkerton, head of the famous detective agency, has been discussing the moving pictures and is quoted as saying that they are a great power for good with one exception, the crime picture. Here is first-hand evidence in support of our constant opposition to the crime play. Pinkerton says the exploiting of heroes of the criminal world casts a glamor of romance, and makes very attractive a hideous business. And he is right. Let the pictures breathe sunshine and not darkness.

PEARL SINDELAR

Pearl Sindelar, whose likeness appears on the front cover, is leading woman of the Pathe Company, and one of the most popular actresses in motion pictures. A year ago Miss Sindelar was unknown to the followers of the screen; to-day her admirers are numbered amongst the hundreds of thousands.

Augustin Daly long ago declared it to be a fact that women of exceptional beauty and charm very rarely possessed inherent histrionic genius, or sufficient aptitude to develop into a really capable performer even with the most careful and skillful of training. The few exceptions to this rule include such beautiful actresses as Peg Woffington, Adelaide Neilson, Mary Anderson and Julia Marlowe—and the name of Pearl Sindelar will soon be added to the list.

To be convinced that Miss Sindelar possesses both brains and beauty one has but to drop into a moving picture house and see a Pathe play in which she appears. Born in a mining camp near Virginia City, Nevada, and brought up with the hardy pioneers of the West, Miss Sindelar had little chance of becoming spoiled. Her father, John Templeton McCarthy, took her to California in 1905, when she was fifteen years old, and from that time to the present she has devoted her life to the study of her chosen profession. Last year she starred under the management of Al. Woods in "The Girl in the Taxi."

As an actress for moving pictures she was successful from the start, with the result that to-day Pearl Sindelar is regarded as one of the most versatile and most finished actresses appearing before the camera in America to-day.

Gaumont release.

J. W. JOHNSTON

Who plays the title-role in "Rob Roy," the three-reel feature to be released by the American Eclair on September 17th.

THREE CLASSIC FEATURES

New Picture-Plays Adapted from Famous Novels.—Mrs. Fiske in "Tess of the D'Urbervilles," Princess Ruspoli in "The Betrothed," and J. W. Johnston in "Rob Roy"

THERE is no better evidence of the popular demand for big features than the placing on view of three important picture-plays during the past week. These picture-plays may be justly characterized as important in the sense that they are all three founded on classic fiction. Furthermore, they furnish food for thought as to whether the pictureplay is not more closely allied to literature than the speaking drama.

Tess of the D'Urbervilles

It were a twice-told tale to reiterate the great success made on the speaking stage by Mrs. Fiske in the title-role of Tess of the d'Urbervilles. It was in this character that she first won recognition from the critics as one of America's greatest actresses.

While her histrionic cleverness suffers to some extent when reduced to the silent methods of pantomimic reproductions, the artistic technique of her acting, both in point of gesture and facial expression, is brought out with striking effect. Never in the course of the entire screen performance of Tess does Mrs. Fiske indulge in a single gesture that is not in keeping with the text or situation, and her facial expression is at all times indicative of the passing mood or requisite emotion.

There appears to be only one scene in which the speaking play has a decided advantage over the pictorial presentment. When Angel Clare tells Tess, after their marriage, of a former fall from grace, his confession is made clear to the audience by the method of the dissolving view—the visualization of his amatory association with a lady addicted to the "easiest way." When Tess proceeds to relate her indiscretion with Alec d'Urberville there is no need of a visualization of the confession, as the episode has already been enacted—still the audience has no means of fully realizing the pathos of the confession, and the pitiful appeal for forgiveness. Facial expression may denote grief, but sobs and burning words alone are capable of conveying a heartrending confession such as that made by Mrs. Fiske in this scene of the drama as presented by her on the speaking stage.

The scenic settings of Tess of the d'Urbervilles as placed on view at the Lyceum Theatre, New York, last Tuesday, afternoon, are indeed a thing of beauty and ought to be a joy forever. Especially beautiful are the rural scenes, which were frequently applauded by those who were present to view the first camera production of Tess of the d'Urbervilles at the invitation of Daniel Frohman and the Famous Players Film Company.

There is no question that this artistic five-reel feature will draw large audiences wherever it is presented.

The Betrothed

Manzoni's novel "I Promessi Sposi"—known in the English translation as "The Betrothed"—is universally conceded to be one of the classics of fiction. The religious motive of the book is sincere, but not exaggerated, and never runs to fanaticism. The novel has been translated into all modern languages, and is probably better known to foreign readers than any other Italian romance. The story has been aptly characterized as being like a heritage of Boccaccio, De Foe and Walter Scott in a single superb panorama of which Salvator Rosa might have been the painter.

ALEC D'URBERVILLE'S SELFISH APPEAL TO TESS

H. J. Streyckmans, general manager The Pasquali-American Company, afforded a News representative an opportunity last Wednesday of seeing the picture-play, founded on Manzoni's great novel, thrown on the screen of the company's projecting room in the World's Tower Building.

"The Betrothed" is a six-reel feature of faultless photography, the beautiful scenic effects having been reproduced in Italy by the process of kinematography, and the producers have every reason to congratulate themselves on having turned out a real work of art.

The interpreting cast, headed by the Princess Ruspoli in the character of Lucia, is made up of actors and actresses who are thoroughly equipped for the respective roles they assume. They succeed in sustaining the romantic illusion of the story from start to finish. Even those who have been entrusted with subordinate roles are always in artistic evidence without overacting or destroying the requisite ensemble work. Especially noticeable in this respect are the pathetic scenes when the plague strikes the city and the people are torn from their loved ones as they are borne to the pest house. Equally effective in its way is the realistic fire scene as the invading soldiers pillage and burn everything in sight.

THE BETROTHED—LUCIA (PRINCESS RUSPOLI) AND RENZO

"The Betrothed" as presented in the Pasquali production is an absorbing tale of the Seventeenth Century. The scene of the story is laid within the country around Milan, and the plot concerns the troubled and impeded but at last happily liberated course of true love between the humble peasant Renzo, and his betrothed, Lucia, the village maiden for whom Don Rodrigo, the chief of a band of outlaws, has laid his villainous snares. On this simple scheme the play introduces a graphic picture of the Italian robber-baron life as represented by the outlawed but law-defying Don Rodrigo and his retainers. It also introduces various phases of the clerical and monastic life, and exhibits with remarkable realism a devastating plague in all its terrors and demoralizing power.

In the opening scene of the play the sun is sinking behind the mountains which form a crown to the blue mirror of the Lake of Como in which are reflected the pretty cottages of a most picturesque village. It is an evening of 1628. Lucia Mondella separates herself from the lively group of working girls and, receiving their parting greetings, hurries off in the direction of home. Lucia was destined no more to return to the factory, being the betrothed bride of Renzo, and the celebration of the longed-for wedding is now approaching.

Suddenly from a cross-road Don Rodrigo and his companion appear. They make a coarse compliment to which the girl does not answer. Thereupon Don Rodrigo makes a bet that he can win the girl for his evil purpose. The bet is accepted. Don Rodrigo, on his return to the castle, learns the identity of the girl whose charms have captivated him. He is also informed that she is in a few days to marry Renzo Tramaglino. Acting on this information Don Rodrigo orders Griso, the chief of his band of bandits, to go to the parish-priest's house at once and forbid him to marry Lucia to Renzo.

Poor Father Abbondio, the parish-priest, who is warned to that effect by Griso, runs home in great fear, and foolishly tells Perpetua, his housekeeper, what had happened, and obtains from her a solemn promise that she will keep the matter secret.

When Renzo goes to the parish-house to arrange the hour of the marriage ceremony Father Abbondio makes a thousand and one pretexts for putting off the wedding. Renzo is just going away, utterly disconsolate, when crossing the orchard he comes across Perpetua. The talkative woman gives him the clue of the whole mystery. Renzo then returns to the parish-priest's study, and learns, by frightening the good Father, that it is Don Rodrigo who has really caused the wedding to be postponed.

Father Christopher on learning what has happened finds words to comfort the unhappy pair and quickly making up his mind he ascends the hill leading to the castle of Don Rodrigo.

Meanwhile Don Rodrigo, is carousing with the lawyer, Lovestrife. An old servant comes to tell his master that a friar is desirous of speaking to him. Father Christopher has an interview with the baron, but appeals to him in vain, in behalf of Lucia, and is ordered out of the house.

Knowing the ill result of Father Christopher's mission, Agnese, Lucia's mother, proposes to the betrothed an ingenious plan for getting the ceremony of the marriage performed, in spite of the opposition of the pusillanimous parish-priest. Renzo provides himself with two witnesses, Tonio and Gervasio. One of them gets into the priest's house at a late hour on the pretext of paying a certain debt which he owes to the priest. By stealth, the betrothed couple, escaping the vigilance of Perpetua, who is effectively detained by the chattering Agnese, get into the room, hiding themselves behind the two witnesses. Unforunately the plan is never carried out, for Father Abbondio overturns with his hand a lamp that is standing upon the table, and screams for help. At this cry for help the bell-ringer, Ambrogio, sounds a peal of bells. All the neighborhood is awakened, and the streets of the town are crowded.

Griso and two other bandits, at Don Rodrigo's orders, meanwhile go to Lucia's house, and favored by the darkness of the night all three enter with the design of kidnapping Lucia, but the girl at that moment is with Renzo and her mother at the parish-priest's house. It is, therefore, an unpleasant surprise for Griso to find the house deserted, and still more to hear the thundering peal of bells. Thus he decides to beat a retreat, and hastens to tell his master of his ill success.

No other course is now open to the betrothed couple than to seek in another quarter the possible performance of a marriage ceremony. On the advice of Father Christopher, Lucia goes to Sister Gertrude, a well-known nun of Monza, and Renzo, in his turn, goes to Milan to the monastery of which Father Buonaventura is the head. Both take with them letters of introduction from Father Christopher.

Sister Gertrude meets Don Rodrigo's cousin in the garden of the convent and when he leaves her he knows that in the convent of Monza is hidden the girl sought for by the evil-minded baron. To accomplish his purpose Don Rodrigo applies to a powerful baron-bandit, whose word is law in the neighborhood, and who is referred to as the "Un-named Man." The latter accepts the outrageous commission of getting Lucia kidnapped by his own band of bandits. Aided by the nun of Monza, Lucia is sent on an errand with a letter to a convent a few miles off. At the crossway of a country road, she is suddenly seized, put in a carriage, and taken to the castle of the "Un-named Man."

That night the "Un-named Man" cannot sleep. The agonizing entreaties of Lucia torment his conscience. The next morning he hears a joyous peal of bells far off—a confused murmuring of voices of people making holiday. He sends a bandit to see what has happened. The bandit shortly afterwards returns and tells his master that on the day before Cardinal Federico Borromeo, the archbishop of Milan, had arrived there, and that all the people are in a state of joy at the arrival of that saintly man. The Cardinal receives the "Un-named Man" and encourages him to give up his evil course.

Lucia has passed a night of anguish in the castle, and makes a vow to give up Renzo if she is allowed to return to her mother without shame or reproach. The door opens and there appears Father Abbondio who has been sent by the Cardinal to take her home.

At this time the German soldiers had spread all over Lombardy, having been summoned at the orders of Cardinal Duke of Richelieu, and had brought the plague in their train. The terrible disease devastated all Lombardy, and thousands and thousands of lives were sacrificed. Despair and death were scattered throughout the streets. At Milan especially, did the infection reach a terrible height.

Lucia, who had come to Milan in the service of Lady Prassede to whom she had been recommended by Cardinal Borronmeo, is following a litter which carries her poor mistress to the lazaretto, which was the antechamber of the grave.

Father Christopher takes his place in the midst of the crowd stricken by the plague, and is seen distributing aid and consolation. Lucia at the lazaretto is weeping over the corpse of her poor mistress, and Renzo having suffered a host of troubles, has arrived at his native village and learns that Lucia has gone to Milan. He goes there to look for his betrothed bride, and, arriving at the lazaretto, he comes across Father Christopher and sees Don Rodrigo in his dying agony.

A few minutes after Don Rodrigo's death Renzo hears a voice which is well known to him. It is that of his Lucia. To his great amazement Lucia tells him that she cannot be his wife on account of the vow she had taken in the castle of the "Un-named Man." But the holy friar, who was beginning to suffer from the first symptoms of the plague, takes upon himself the authority of Him who can unbind all as well as bind, and declares to Lucia that she is absolved from her vow. Just before he dies Father Christopher makes the betrothed couple kneel down at the side of his bed and unites them in the holy bonds of matrimony. Thus does the Church bring order out of tumult. The wicked are punished and love and virtue come to a triumphant reward.

Rob Roy

Rob Roy is an American Eclair feature to be released on September 17th. In making this adaptation of the historical novel of Sir Walter Scott, the Eclair company has succeeded wonderfully well in enhancing the realism of the action with the "atmosphere" of the time. The settings have been carefully chosen and abound in remarkable reproductions of beautiful scenery. The costuming has been given careful attention and in fact the detail of this production is worthy of commendation in every way.

The acting will place this feature very high in the list of Eclair successes. J. W. Johnston impersonates the title role with his usual histrionic cleverness. Will Sherer is also seen to advantage as Sir Frederick Vernon. Other effective impersonations are offered by Nancy Averill as Rob Roy's wife, Milly Bright as Diana Vernon, Robert Frazer as Francis Osbaldistone, Fred Truesdell as Rashleigh Osbaldistone, and Hal Wilson as Jarvie.

The action of the Eclair version of Rob Roy is so well dovetailed for screen purposes that there is not a single dull moment in the course of the three reels. In the initial scene Rob Roy, who is one of the farmers on the estate of the Duke of Montross, is called in by the duke to make an accounting. When the duke questions his figures, Rob Roy resents it and takes one of the duke's flunkies, who tries to get him out of the room, and throws him out of the window. Rob then returns to the duke, who meanwhile has called in some soldiers and they overpower the Scottish giant. While Rob lies in prison the duke burns his home and then releases him so that he may view the ashes.

Bent on revenge, Rob Roy goes to Sir Frederick Vernon, who is secretly conspiring against the English, and offers his assistance. The plotters are interrupted in one of their meetings by the entrance of Rashleigh Osbaldistone, the nephew of the wealthy London banker. Rashleigh offers to give the conspirators a sure means of freeing Scotland providing Sir Frederick will promise him the hand of his daughter Diana who has just demonstrated her dislike for young Osbaldistone. Sir Frederick is so set upon his purpose of bringing freedom to his native land that he forces his daughter to take an oath to marry Rashleigh. Rob Roy witnesses the oath although he is not in favor of forcing the girl into such a marriage.

In London, Francis Osbaldistone, a young man who prefers to write poetry and dream, rather than work in his father's bank, has given up his place in the bank and he leaves to visit at the Vernon castle. Rashleigh, his cousin, hears of his leaving and takes the place made vacant in the bank.

When Francis arrives at the Vernon castle he falls deeply in love with Diana, Sir Frederick's daughter. A few days later the news comes from Jarvie, Sir Osbaldistone's Glasgow representative, that Rashleigh has stolen some very valuable bonds from the bank, and Francis and Jarvie set out to hunt the thief. They meet Rashleigh in the mountains, and Francis and his cousin fight a duel. They are interrupted by Rob Roy, who stops the fight and orders Rashleigh away, thinking the thief is on an important mission to assist the Scots in their fight for freedom. After Rashleigh has departed, Francis explains the theft of the bonds in his father's bank, and then Rob agrees to assist in the pursuit of the thief.

Rashleigh, to avenge himself on Francis and place Sir Frederick in his power, turns traitor and goes to the English headquarters, where he tells of Sir Frederick's plot. The English start for the Vernon castle to make Sir Frederick a prisoner, but a Scottish spy has warned them and Sir Frederick and Diana escape through a secret passage.

Francis and Jarvie, not knowing of Rashleigh's treachery, apply to the English for assistance in tracing the thief of the bonds, and they are also placed under arrest. A Scot who attempts to assist them is arrested and threatened with hanging if he does not disclose the cave where Rob Roy lives. He refuses and is about to be hanged when Rob appears in the distance and signals him to tell. The prisoner then agrees to lead the men to the cave, and they start with a detachment of troops taking Francis and Jarvie along as prisoners.

Rashleigh discovers Rob Roy and pretending to be friendly with the Scottish leader succeeds in securing his sword and then places him under arrest. The English place Rob in a boat and start across the river with him.

The detachment of troops who had been following their guide, find themselves in an ambush, which has been prepared by Rob's wife, and they are most ingloriously defeated in a great battle there in the hills. Rob escapes by jumping in the river from the boat and arrives just as the Scots, headed by his wife, had routed the English.

Francis sets out again in pursuit of Rashleigh and meets Sir Frederick and Diana who are fleeing from the pursuing English. The three go to Rob's cave to get Jarvie and here they are surprised by the English, headed by Rashleigh, and captured. Rashleigh's triumph is short-lived, however, for Rob's men come just in time to put an end to Rashleigh's insults to Diana. Rob fights a vigorous duel with Rashleigh after capturing him, and kills him in fair fight, thus leaving Diana and Francis free to wed. The stolen bonds are found in Rashleigh's coat.

It may be predicted that the Eclair production of Rob Roy is a feature which will delight both young and old.

MOVING PICTURES A SOCIAL FORCE

Here in these moving picture theatres is a titanic engine for popular education. The film should be for the cultivation of the public mind what the telephone has been for business. This tremendous power runs wild in the picture theatres. It is ours to harness it for social ends. Not to do this would be a staggering blunder. The "movies" are the play of the people. In that medium they can be not only amused but educated. Set the best brains to devising these entertainments and you provide a show so much better than the sensational thriller that the business comes of its own accord. This must be the future of the picture shows. The fundamental fact of them is that properly used they are not a diversion at all. They are a mighty social force, like the press.—Boston Transcript.

TIES SELF TO MAN

The motion-picture theatre was well filled yesterday afternoon when a stout woman entered and wedged herself in next to a slender man. For a time both appeared extremely interested in the pictures. Then the woman noticed that one of her shoelaces was undone. After something of a struggle she bent over and finally succeeded in bringing both the laces together. A few minutes later the man arose as though to start for the door. Down he went in the aisle and the woman gave vent to an exclamation. The audience turned from the flickering to the real catastrophe. She had knotted her shoelace with his. It was several minutes before the pair untangled and untied.—Florala (Ala.) News.

For Those Who Worry O'er Plots and Plays

A Long Step Forward

THE Universal Film Manufacturing Company has decided to give deserving authors credit on posters and all advertising matter. It is an important decision and an innovation that will appeal to all pictureplaywrights. It means that the plot of the story has been recognized by Universal as the rock foundation of the picture; it means that credit where credit is due will be proffered; and it will mean to the Universal the opportunity of reading the work of high-class authors. Captain Leslie T. Peacocke, of the Universal Script Department, writes:

> "I know you will be glad to hear that the Universal Co. has decided to give the authors credit on posters and advertising matter, and those authors who write original stories will welcome such publicity, but those who have been in the habit of stealing their plots from magazine stories or films already released, will not be pleased, of course. I have received a vigorous protest from one author of this class, who naturally shuns such publicity, as his methods will be badly shown up if publicity to authors is universally given. This party accuses me of advocating this movement from a purely personal standpoint, in order that I may have the pleasure of seeing my own name on posters and on the screen, but I assure you that such is not the case. I do not hanker after notoriety, but I am very anxious to have a stop put to the too frequent plagiarism that we witness on the screen. Any author who writes really original scenarios will be only too glad to get the legitimate credit that is his or her due. But the pirates of other people's brains will naturally shun such publicity. Motion picture photoplay 'schools' should be banished from the field. They are all a form of petty graft. The Universal does not consider or read any scenarios submitted from any of these so-called 'schools,' or teachers of scenario writing, and I know that scenario editors of other companies are equally opposed to these grafters."

We have been urging credit to authors on posters and screen for two years. We are certainly glad to hear that Universal has blazed the pathway which will sooner or later be followed by other companies who wish to preserve their share of first readings. We have also been accused of selfishness in urging poster credit. Anyone who starts something in favor of the army of writers is sure to be accused of ulterior motives. The fact is that we have repeatedly refused to permit our name to be used in connection with our work. This applies to both industrial and the regular run of picture plays. Captain Peacocke and other experienced writers, with some few exceptions, have also taken similar action and will continue to do so. We believe that credit to deserving authors will prove a source of encouragement and pride to them and will result in higher-class work all around. For that reason, and from the standpoint of ethics, we have urged poster and screen credit and believe that if Universal will stick to the innovation that it will not be long before other manufacturers will be compelled to follow suit.

Some "Expert" Advice

C. E. Horton writes and encloses a sample of "expert" advice that is being handed to aspiring writers through the medium of certain newspaper syndicate photoplay pages. Here is the inquiry and the answer and we bet Editor McCloskey, of Lubin, will grab a baseball bat in righteous wrath when he sees what is being circulated in an Eastern newspaper syndicate. "Editor Photoplay Column: I see by the papers they want plays written for moving pictures. Now I have never written a real play because I felt I might be laughed at. You folks are right in line, and know the game, while I am only a young man working in a store at Luella Junction. Before I wrote the play out I want you to tell me your honest opinion. I want you to be fair as if dealing with your own son. How would it be to have a man and his wife happily married. Then along comes one of those gum-shoe, sneaking curs who always takes a man's wife away from him while he is at work. It is the story of a broken heart. I have this all right because my own wife has left me and gone away, I think, with a traveling salesman for an automobile concern. What do you think of such a plot? And who had I better see about buying it when I write it out in earnest?" And now the reply: "There is a great demand for real live photoplays and if the scenario, etc., are practical you might be able to dispose of their sensational productions by writing J. H. Lubin, Eighth St., Philadelphia, Pa."

Throw him down, McCloskey! Maybe one "J. H. Lubin, Eighth Street," would be tickled to death to read the "sensational production," but if Editor McCloskey, of the Lubin Mfg. Co., ever gets his hands on that syndicate editor there will certainly be weeping, wailing and the gnashing of teeth. All jokes aside, this fund of misinformation disseminated by syndicate "experts" has never descended from the sublime to the ridiculous. It is invariably the latter.

A Much Needed Work

There is a suggestion of Washington Irving and Poe with a flavor of Addison in the style of E. W. Sargent. His diction is terse and clear with little embellishment, but enough to make his text appealing. In the "Technique of the Photoplay," second edition, information vital to the success of the ambitious photoplaywright is written in what might be termed the old-fashioned method, with finish and polish and style. It is a scholarly and authoritative treatise on the art of writing pictureplay plots and should be on the working table of every photoplay writer. In the first chapter is a statement that should be digested by everyone ambitious to succeed. Here it is: "The writing of photoplays is no short cut on the road of success nor is it a pastime lightly to be taken up when the spirit moves. It is not possible to read any course or book and at once write scripts that will sell. Success is to be gained, save in exceptional instances, only through close study, hard work and long practice. It is not possible to sell many if any scripts the first year, but photoplay writing is a pleasant avocation, if not a profitable vocation, and careful study and hard work may lead to studio connections and good renumeration. The amateur of yesterday is the expert of today and without exception they are the ones who were willing to study and work hard." The book consists of one hundred and seventy-six pages of actual text and covers every line of endeavor from needed visits to moving picture theatres, to technical terms and sample working scripts. We were the first to write a text-book for photoplay writers. This work appeared three years ago. Since that time the number of writers has grown to a veritable army, new forms of construction and new needs have come and the appearance of Mr. Sargent's treatise is opportune and it promises to long remain standard. Textbooks come and textbooks go, particularly those copied by one Nelson of many cities. However, we have seen but one text-book that is worthy of criticism and compliment and that is the work just issued by Mr. Sargent. This is a voluntary notice, unrequested, but nevertheless appreciative. We congratulate our conferee upon his valuable contribution to photoplay lore and we also congratulate the toilers in the vineyard upon their opportunity to acquire a book that is indispensable to the completeness of the literary workers' library.—In cloth, two dollars. Full leather, three dollars. Chalmers Pub. Co., New York City.

Editorial Etchings

George Terwilliger, of the Lubin script force, is being dubbed "The Shakespeare of the Silent Drama." If anyone deserves the name George does.

Mrs. Breuil, recently resigned as editress of Vitagraph, will criticise manuscripts and write two and three-reel productions at present. She may enter a new field as a Consulting Editress.

Giles R. Warren, managing editor of the Apollo Film Co., releasing through Warner's features, will produce only three-reel pictures. He is now working on a mammoth production of "Rob Roy." Needless to assert that Filmland will eagerly await the "Rob Roy" release.

Annette Kellerman is coming over to star in "The Mermaid" the book of which opera has recently been completed by Captain Leslie T. Peacocke, member of the Universal editorial staff. Captain Peacocke is widely known as a script writer and recently finished the first script for Florence Lawrence under Universal direction. He is also not unknown as a writer for the stage. The hero of "The Mermaid" is a naval officer, Miss Kellermann as The Mermaid is the wife of Neptune. We are going to organize a theatre party of script editors and authors and give Captain Peacocke a cordial greeting when the show is "tried out on the dog."

And now cometh Miss F. Marion Brandon who draws a deserved write-up in the moving picture syndicate lore. She is script editoress of Eclair Film Co. and is competent to perform the duties at that. She has produced a vaudeville sketch, a one-act play that will appear shortly, and a photoplay, "The Last of the Madisons," (not the "Last of the Mohicans") has just been released by Universal. In 1911, F. Marion drew one thousand "iron men" in the John Wanamaker "American Home" contest with 20,000 competitors and then some. Miss Brandon is a thing of beauty and a joy forever, and that group photo taken by Henry W. Mattoni at the Palace of Liberal Arts is the only grudge we hold against either of them. F. Marion is a comer, and she has promised to keep us right up to date on Eclair script needs.

Curbstone Philosophy

Matt Mereness has oiled up the machine and has started forth on the winter's coal. He writes: "The other day you had a very interesting adventure of a man by the name of Jones, and then of a fellow who was very much discouraged. How many times have I asked myself: 'Are you through with writing?' And then 'what for?' Just because a story, or two or four, or six do not sell how do you know the next one won't be a winner? I've sworn that if that didn't sell it would be my last. It wasn't the last and I'm pounding them out yet. 'Don't give up the ship,' a brave man once said. I quit school when only fifteen years of age and went to work. Never wrote a thing for publication until I got it into my head to write photoplays. The first one I ever wrote was accepted. The first five I sold were written on a typewriter that cost $2.98. That was three years ago. Sold more then than I do now. If I can sell stories under the conditions I have worked the last three years, with no education to brag of, there is no reason why others should not sell. A story that sold last year will not sell now. It must be better than last year's story. No one told me this. I found it out myself. I often receive letters from other writers. They nearly all breathe discouragement. The writers of the letters are those who have tried and think they have failed. But the secret is that they have not really tried. Some have been writing three months or a little longer. Photoplaywriting cannot be learned in three months. Write, you will always learn something. It took me over a year before I could write away from 'similar theme done before.' My greatest trouble now is 'plot too slight.' I'll get them so they will walk alone after a while." We like to publish letters like the above, for we believe they stimulate others to further endeavor. Mereness has discovered, if nothing else, that the story that sold a year ago is not the story that will pass muster to-day. Great advances have been made in Cinematography in a twelve month and a higher standard has been reached.

Pertinent Pointers

Practice makes perfect.

Keeping everlastingly at it wins success.

Avoid secular plots. Keep religion out of your scripts.

Try and evolve a plot that is sunny. There are too many stories released having a continuous series of deathbed scenes and like mournfulness. Don't search for all the horrors of life. Try and give us something of the brighter side.

It is possible to write a consistent three-reel plot despite opinions to the contrary so freely expressed. Because you have seen multiple reel features that consisted of just a string of incidents, is no reason that the multiple reel plot is not frequent. It is possible to have two or three full reels of plot.

Only two or three persons will read your script, hence do not prepare your manuscript for reading purposes but for seeing purposes. Brilliancy of style and diction gets you nowhere. It is the ability of causing the editor and director to see and understand your action so clearly that they think others can do likewise that will readily sell your work.

A publication devoted to the interests of script writers asserts that "now is the time to work out that Christmas scenario that has been stored up in your brain." You may have a Christmas plot stored in your brain all right, but our advice is to alter the plot so that it will be good any other time. Nothing is gained in the long run by writing the holiday scripts whether the plot be for Memorial Day, Fourth of July, or Christmas. Many of these plots come and few are chosen. Write your stories for all the year and you will increase your chances to sell. If you write the Christmas plot and submit it to one concern the chances are that by the time it is considered and rejected that it will be too late to submit to any other editor so that it can be produced seasonably.

Remember that editors are busy men. Remember that your submission is probably one among three hundred. Remember that he has no time to read long personal letters accompanying scripts, and that he frequently can ascertain that it is your very first effort without you taking up two pages of note paper to so inform him. Remember, also, that he hopes the scripts will suit his purpose as much as you and that this overworked statement sent in with scripts is not at all welcome. Let your work speak for itself, and it is the only voice that will command any attention in any event.

"The Stolen Story" is coming to the fore once more. Above everything do not get the idea that your plot is stolen because a scene or two in some pictures seem familiar, or the title to a picture is similar to one of your own. Stories repeat. You may not know it but in nearly every mail plots startlingly similar in thought and action are received. Each writer is positive that the idea is original and cannot be made to appreciate that most plots invented are old as the hills and that it is not the plot in itself but the new angle to an old plot that sells the effort. Duplications of common themes are many and commonplace. Select an original theme, tell it in a clear straightforward way, do not send the story to several companies at once, play the game fairly and honestly, and you will be treated likewise. No one will steal your plots.

Kindly leave magazine and book stories alone. Don't try and deceive film editorial departments. You can rarely do it. Despite all that has been said and done there are a certain number of writers who are persisting in revamping stories from old numbers of magazines. It's a dangerous practice. You will soon get on the company's black books, and other than this fact, you lose your self-respect and maybe some time will get into real trouble. Have pride enough to be original and do not steal the brains of another.

Reading and Writing

E. M. Wickes, in the Writer's Magazine, has the following: "During a recent discussion a prominent photoplaywright maintained that in order to win success one should devote considerable time to reading. Constant reading will prove beneficial provided the reading is done in an intelligent and systematic way. To merely skim over the pages without trying to analyze the plot and see how each scene and action overlaps the other, or how one is the logical effect of a certain cause, would not be very productive. Read by all means; read good books, the masters, and learn how they worked, and then try and apply your knowledge to your task. It is pitiful to read some scripts that have been prepared by deluded persons who are unable to construct a simple sentence correctly." Yes, everyone should have a knowledge of the world's best literature. The would-be author should not only read but should write—write all the time at something or other, for this practice brings familiarity with the tools of the trade.

The Sliding Scale

Marc Jones took a crack in type at the correspondence schools the other day, and one "Professor" came back with an intimation to the advertising department of the publication. Jones claims to be free from all interference and he follows up his preliminary attack with the following which will do:

"The quarrel in the schools is not alone over the merits of the course they offer. Of a school of this kind we demand; (1) a competent course, with instruction by a successful pictureplaywright, or, in other words, by a man thoroughly informed in the subject which he undertakes to teach; (2) absolute honesty with the pupil—which is to say that if a correspondence course in electrical engineering would not undertake to "graduate" a pupil who does not show by his work that he can become an electrical engineer, neither should the photoplay schools undertake to "graduate" every pupil that enrolls, irrespective of his work; and (3) absolute business honesty, in the sense that we have come to employ the phrase "business honesty" in the last few years. By this last is meant the holding out of inducements that do not exist, the making of an appeal to those who cannot succeed and accepting their enrollment, and the use of a sliding scale of prices and other tactics that have been employed by a number of the photoplay schools."

Since completing the new studios, the American Film Mfg. Co. is in better shape than ever to stage their productions.

Director Ricketts is soon to put on a two-reel drama of unusual merit of a psychological nature. In this picture a scene from "Faust" will be staged supposedly on the Metropolitan Theatre in New York, and there will also be a scene from "Carmen."

Miss Winifred Greenwood recently joined this company, and Mr. Ricketts feels that he has around him the talent that will manifest itself in improved productions. Everybody is working toward this end. "Where the Road Forks" is the title of this forthcoming picture, and "The Ghost of the Hacienda," already produced and shortly to be released, is a forerunner of what may be expected from Mr. Ricketts and his talented company of artists.

"Baby Helen" of the "Flying A" has been doing some exceedingly clever work in pictures of late. Although only a baby of three and one-half years, she is so earnest in the portrayals of her parts that the following illustration will show how deeply her mind is affected by her work: One night about eleven o'clock in the home of Helen a noise was heard in the library, and upon further investigation it proved to be the violent rocking of a chair. Helen was seated in the chair fast asleep with a favorite doll clasped tightly to her breast. The spectators of this silent midnight drama stood spellbound in the doorway when Helen shouted at the top of her voice. "Action! Go!" She immediately clutched more wildly at her doll and started the rocking, moaning meanwhile, "Oh, my baby, my baby! Will you please save my baby?" And promptly afterwards came the words, "End it. Fifty feet." This wee bit of femininity was doing the work of both player and director in her strenuous little mind.

A company of Vitagraph players has just returned from Niagara Falls, where some remarkable scenes of thrilling rescues in the Niagara River, a dash over the Falls and through the Rapids were made. Little Florence Foley, the Vitagraph child actress, was saved from a watery grave by Mlle. Ideal, showing her wonderful skill as a swimmer and how to save a drowning person. Earle Williams, Rose Tapley, Gladys Dupell and other Vitagraph players, under the direction of Captain Lambert, will be seen in the forthcoming Vitagraph release, entitled "The Diver." It will be a remarkable film, the closing scenes of which were made on Friday, August 22d, in the Vitagraph open-air studios in Brooklyn, N. Y. The picture is not only a spectacular and sensational one, but will be extremely picturesque in scenic splendor and magnificence of settings.

While producing the two part drama, "The Clown's Daughter" Edgar Lewis and a company of Reliance players spent several days with Sig. Sautelle's Circus and all hands seem to have enjoyed the experience immensely. The circus performers were just as interested in acting before the camera as the Reliance actors were in being members of the Big Show. And as Edgar Lewis is an old hand at anything connected with the canvas and sawdust some excellent results were obtained during the making of the picture.

Norma Phillips tried her luck as a "Circus Rider" called for by her part, which was that of the Clown's wife. George Siegman found out that he is a good "Spieler" and was given ample opportunity to practice spell-binding on a sure-enough circus crowd. Little Runa Hodges was the pet of the "Show Folks" and had the time of her four-years-long life feeding the animals and riding the ponies.

For the past month vacations have been in order at the Lubin plant. The executive players and directors have in turn been taking little outings from six to ten days, returning to their posts much the better for the rest.

When he started the production "For the Crown," Director Johnston, who has conceived a great affection for Baby Helen, the youngest member of his company, and whom he calls the Sarah Bernhardt of the "Flying A," promised her a diamond ring if she worked satisfactorily. Helen obeyed the director implicitly and her work would reflect credit on performers of more mature years. As the King she maintained her majestic dignity throughout the entire production, whether clothed in the court costumes or the rags of the mountain hovel. Mr. Johnston made good his promise, and Baby Helen prizes her ring with genuine feminine pride.

Sunday was a thrilling day for Silver City, N. M., people. The Lubin Stock Company enacted a drama at the smelter below the town, blew up the narrow gauge railroad bridge and two large water tanks, and incidentally furnished amusement for 2,000 people scattered over the surrounding hills watching the interesting events. A riot scene, in which 200 men dressed in old clothes took part, preceded the explosion. Mason Kelly and E. A. Blevins were pressed into service as labor agitators, after which the entire crew rushed up to the water tanks, set fire to them and then, as they rushed down the hill, the tanks blew up. The sight was a beautiful one, the tanks being shot fully 200 feet in the air and the rioters and spectators were covered with a shower of splinters and rocks. No one was injured. The dynamite had to be shot off with a gun as the cap and fuse refused to do the work. On Monday the old oil house at the smelter was blown up as a part of the same scene.

Mr. Fielding, it is said, finds the country around here the richest in material of any section he has visited so far, and he is surely making the best use of it. Nothing escapes his keen, penetrating observation and everything seemingly is grist that comes to his mill, which proves the genius of the man.

The moving picture as a means of education, primarily for children, is to have its first trial in Los Angeles. The company will be composed of from fifty to seventy-five members, exclusively children ranging from fifteen years downward. This little company is to be used in the production of old fairy tales, classic comedies and some drama. The company is to be known as the "juvenile motion picture company." Such an adventure with the movies should prove a howling success and at the same time be instructive both to those taking part and the observer. Such endeavors indicate the rise of the movies into a realm of wide possibilities.

Out in Hollywood, Cal., at the Tom Evans studio, Harry C. Matthews is making a great picture of "Aladdin and His Lamp." Stephen S. Norton is putting some of his trick photography, and Madame La Rue is providing some gorgeous costumes. The photoplay is a sumptuous one, and is scheduled to appear at an early date on the program of Warner's Features. Allen Forrest is an ideal "Aladdin," Elsie Albert is looking her prettiest as the "Princess," and Joe Burke and Jefferson Osbourne do fine as the genii of the lamp and the ring.

Lorimer Johnston, one of the American "Flying A" directors, is now producing a two-part feature under title "In the Days of Trajan," written by himself with the atmosphere of the first century of the Christian era during the reign of the Roman Emperor Trajanus. The natural settings of beautiful Santa Barbara have made it possible to furnish the environment requisite to portray the splendor and artistic temperament of the age.

The costumes are absolutely correct and were used by the recent Redwood "Jinks" given by the Bohemian Club of San Francisco.

Warren Kerrigan will have a part vastly different from any he has ever attempted and his many admirers will have an opportunity of seeing him in the regally magnificent costume of a Prince of Dacia.

ONLY TWO HUNTERS OF BIG GAME NOW ACTIVE

R. T. Cunningham, big game hunter, late with Colonel Roosevelt in Africa, has retired, weary of risking his life in the dangerous pursuit.

W. Kenyon has lately returned from Norway to London, for the purpose of outfitting for his last expedition into Central Africa.

Arthur J. Aylesworth is already hundreds of miles on his way North from Edmonton into the unknown reaches of the Mackenzie Basin, with an equipment of everything from cook department to sleeping bags, and 5,000 rounds of ammunition. Ten pack horses, guides, cooks, assistants, three camera men, a director, and 30,000 feet of film are a part of the equipment, and will permit Aylesworth to get everything from hunt pictures to dramatic stories of the frozen North.

The expedition will, in part, follow the outposts of the Hudson Bay Trading Company, for which one of the most noted French-Canadian voyageurs and guides has been secured.

Mr. Aylesworth upholds the claim of Wiljhalmur Stefannson, the Arctic explorer, that there is a tribe of blonde eskimos, whiter than white men, numbering over 300, and they will be recorded in film before this intrepid nimrod again stalks south of 53!

The Canadian Government and game wardens of Western States have fortified Aylesworth with documentary permission to depict the life, habits, and method of killing, one specimen of each of the big game of North America, now rapidly becoming extinct.

Offices for the exploiting of this variety of Far North pictures have been opened upon the ninth floor of the World's Tower Building, 110 West Fortieth street, with Ernest Shipman, who is interested in the enterprise, in charge of its business affairs.

A trio of remarkable releases will constitute the first week's program of Warner's Features, Incorporated, to be launched this month. Exclusive United States and Canadian rights have been secured for "The Living Corpse" in four reels, adapted from the famous play of the same name by the late Count Leo Tolstoi. The principal characters in this highly dramatic photoplay are taken by experienced European actors, and the supporting cast is a very strong one. The Gene Gauntier Feature Players will present "In the Power of a Hypnotist" in three reels—an offering that is based upon an unusual theme. Miss Gauntier has never done better work than she exhibits in this remarkable play. The third feature, "Francesca da Rimini," was made in California amid settings of picturesque beauty. It is based upon D'Annunzio's version of "Dante's" masterpiece, and is capably interpreted by Constance Crawley and Arthur Maude, the celebrated English artists.

Another forthcoming picture from the Hollywood studio is "Life's Lesson," by Richard Willis. It is being produced by J. Farrell Macdonald with infinite care and attention to detail. It is a problem story, and will be received as such the world over.

Sometimes we are inclined to firmly believe that life is just a moving picture and that the film often breaks just at the interesting place.

What we cannot understand is why William Jennings Bryan, being so hard up, does not say "pooh, pooh" to the Chautauqua circuit and pose in moving pictures.

A resolution was passed at the National Exhibitors' League convention asking that manufacturers do away with cigarette smoking in the production of pictures. However, the barroom scenes may be expected to continue.

Three reels of moving pictures are certainly a plenty for five cents. Two reels are full value received. Those exhibitors who run four and five reels of pictures for a nickel are injuring their own business in the end. They are educating the public to ask for something for nothing.

Somebody writes over from England asking why American manufacturers do not make further excursions into the realms of American literature. Poe's "Gold Bug" and "Black Cat" are mentioned. Original themes for photoplays can be uncovered in many a classic if the producer knows just where to look for them. We were in a certain director's home the other day and there was a well-filled bookcase in almost every apartment in the house. He is a successful director and will be a headliner before so very long. Can you guess why?

* * * *

Let us have peace! No more unfortunate affair has occurred in Cinematography in the past ten years than the break that marred the National Exhibitors' League convention in New York. Several states seceded from the parent organization. New York state was the ringleader. President Neff may have made mistakes; we all do. However, he is the right man in the right place just now, was re-elected fairly and squarely, and the sportsmanlike thing to do is to accept the will of the majority. The majority rules in this country; not the minority. Right at this juncture it is important that the exhibitors remain harmonious. A house divided against itself often falls. Forget all difficulties and return to the fold.

* * * *

Several critics are bewailing the lack of good plays suitable for the moving picture screen and are worrying as to what shall be done. There is no lack of good plays. The realms of literature have scarcely been touched. The Bible alone holds hundreds of plots that can be utilized for moving pictures. Nearly every kind of emotion and situation is depicted in the Book of Books. The trouble is that many producers are either too busy to delve into literature for ideas or they do not know where to look. It is useless to urge the "filming of present day problems." Who shall write these plots? The star writer of yesterday is the "potboiler" of to-day. Ideas once so abundant are no longer so. They have been reshaped time and time again. Until the new era of authorship shall dawn, the works of the old literary masters must be studied. There is another time coming when new blood will enter the photoplay writing field with fresh ideas, absence of know-it-allism, and new plots. Then will "present-day problems" be rehearsed convincingly. Certain scribes and directors are too actively engaged in fighting the Civil War over again, and pursuing the savages of the Western plains, to write of present-day problems. The fact is they have lost all power to write the psychological or domestic study. Charlie Van Loan, in the Saturday Evening Post, has caught the idea and is shooting shafts of sarcasm at certain writers and directors in his "movie" stories. Wonder if these cock-sure personages can detect the harpoons? Probably not! probably not!

KLEINE-CINES RELEASE USES REAL WAR SCENES

Some local theatres are now showing a Kleine-Cines film entitled "High Treason," which was made by the Cines Company, of Rome, under unique circumstances.

The story centers about a government wireless operator who finds his salary too small to meet the demands of his wife. A banker, speculating on the decline of stocks in the event of war, bribes the operator to change the government message, announcing the success of the peace negotiations, to read that a declaration of war is inevitable, so that his Board of Trade operation would prove successful. The wireless operator accepts the bribe and perverts a message. All that follows shows a nation in the throes of a great war. The entire operation of getting out a war "extra" from the time the false message is received in the editorial rooms until the street urchins and old women get the "extra" on the street, is shown. The excitement of the stoic compositors in the composing rooms setting the "scare head," and even the haste of the "devil" in racing to and from editorial offices to composing room, is very realistic and interesting. Much of the film was made on the day that Italy declared war against Turkey, and the Cines people swept the streets of Rome with their cameras, gathering some splendid views of the "war-mad" thousands as they thronged the big thoroughfares, shouting and waving papers, and carrying stump orators around on their shoulders. To further carry out the thread of the story, the Cines Company made use of some splendid pictures taken during the Balkan War, of the big thirteen-inch disappearing guns, and many inspiring cavalry charges and infantry engagements.

As a punishment, the only son of the wireless operator, whose traitorous action created the war, is killed by the burst of a bomb in one of the first battles. This was the only battle scene the Cines Company found it necessary to stage. Incidentally, one of the features of the story includes a three-minute scene from the opera "Aida," showing about a thousand people watching the performance, with the stage with its multifarious costumes in the distance.

All this material has been worked into an especially pretty story. The casual picture goer will wonder how the picture company managed to get such realistic scenes and such crowds of people.

CALAMITY ANNE, HEROINE

Louise Lester appears again in her inimitable character of Calamity Anne, and this time she poses as the heroine in a dramatic farce. Miss Lester has won laurels in numerous other productions, but takes particular pride in this series which so readily lends itself to complete metamorphoses. Whether the action called for is pathetic or sublime, tragic or comic, vociferous or humble, she throws her whole soul into it and succeeds in bringing out the best possible results. That her efforts are not in vain is attested by the numerous letters of tesimony sent her from all points of the compass.

As a heroine she returns to the sorrowing mother her child, kidnapped by two vagrants, takes the perpetrators of this crime into custody, and with the reward she receives makes two young lovers happy by furnishing the funds to feather the nest. Much extemporaneous amusement is worked into the subject, and it will meet with the same spontanenous applause as previous subjects of this series which are released by the American Film Company.

Richard Harding Davis' latest comedy entitled "Who's Who," in which William Collier opens at the Criterion Theatre, deals with the adventures of an amateur cowboy whose gorgeous costume makes him the target of the moving picture camera. Shortly afterward he is robbed of his raiment by a real "bad man," who proceeds to hold up a stage with his silver-plated pistols—whereby the amateur acquires such a desperate reputation that he has to hide under an alias to keep out of prison. A lawyer comes to tell him that he has fallen heir to a large fortune, but fearing that this is a detective ruse, the hero hides until he is identified by means of the moving picture. Kinemacolor furnishes the films, and Mr. Collier the comedy—so it may be called a "KinemaCollier."

ROBERT DROUET

Robert Drouet is a new and doubtless valuable acquisition to the Lubin Stock Companies. As Mr. Drouet has been before the public for many years it is hardly necessary to print a lengthy biography. Suffice, as a leading man he has supported Mrs. Patrick Campbell, Viola Allen, Mary Mannering, Blanche Walsh and a half dozen other popular stars. In "The Conflict" he was himself a star and won distinction. He has written six plays that have achieved success and claims to have many more on file ready for prospective producers. He is a born American of French and Irish parentage. A young giant in stature he is a typical moving picture leading man and doubtless will attract the attention of the fans.

MIATT-PATENTS DEPARTMENT

Recent Inventions, Letters Patent, Trade-Marks, Designs, Copyrights, Etc., Relating to the Art, Digested and Reported Exclusively for the Moving Picture News by Geo. Wm. Miatt, Patent Lawyer and Expert, Temple Court, cor. of Nassau and Beekman Streets, New York City

A decision involving millions of dollars, and one of a special interest to those interested practically in the Art of Cinematography, is that of Judge Hazel, of the United States District Court for the Western District of New York, in the case of the Goodwin Film and Camera Company v. the Eastman Kodak Company. A flexible film made on paper coated with a gelatine bromide which became the negative, and which was readily removed from the paper, was made by Geo. Eastman in 1885, but this stripping film was objectionable on account of the appearance of the grain of the paper in the picture, and because of the difficulty of manipulating a film of such thinness. This paper-supported film was soon superseded by a transparent flexible nitro-cellulous support upon which the sensitive emulsion was flowed, introduced upon the market by the Eastman Company, but claimed by Hannibal Goodwin as his invention. Goodwin's application for patent met with considerable opposition in the Patent Office. The application was finally rejected by the Primary Examiner in 1898, but upon appeal the Board of Examiners in Chief favored the issue of the patent, substantially adopting the view that the prior state of the art did not disclose means for successfully producing a photographic film of the kind specified in the Goodwin application and claims. During the prosecution of the case in the Patent Office Goodwin's application became involved in an interference with an application filed by Reichenbach. Reichenbach disclaimed the issue of the interference and canceled his broad claims. Subsequently letters patent were granted to Reichenbach, covering his specific process, namely, a solution of nitro-cellulose and camphor in methyl or wood alcohol with a quantity of fusel oil and amyl acetate added. Presuming that his broad claim had been allowed, Goodwin practically conceded priority to Reichenbach's specific process, and consequently his successor in title was estopped from asserting infringement by film supports made in strict accordance with Reichenbach's formula. After its issuance the Reichenbach patent was cited as anticipatory of Goodwin's broad claim, until on appeal to the Commissioner of Patents, it was held that such a patent being later than Goodwin's application, it was not a proper citation. The Eastman Company claimed the protection of the Reichenbach patent in its manufacture of films. The court held that "in departing from the specific formula of its own patent, the defendant utilized the equivalent of the method specified by Goodwin in his patent and achieved the same result; that the two processes 'are not distinguishable in principle.' The improvement in the film support is due to the combination of equivalent high and low boilers, and, therefore, the departure in its production is merely within the scope of the claims." Of course the case will be appealed, but if the Goodwin Patent is finally sustained the owners thereof will be entitled to millions in compensation, and the results in the trade will be far-reaching in effect.

"Diaphonite" is a new preparation made by the Sanitus Company of Berlin, one of the leading X-ray establishments of Germany. Diaphonite is opaque to the rays, and when swallowed it renders the stomach and other digestive organs impervious to the rays so that such organs may be photographed about the same as the bony structure of the human body,—the results being of the greatest of value in medical or surgical examination of the body, as might be expected, since it is now possible to see at a glance just where all the organs are situated, and whether any of them are out of their usual position or have any unusual size or shape.

Out of a total issue of 832 patents, trade-marks, etc., for the current week, New York State receives 121 or over one-sixth. New York City (Greater) alone received 70, of which 6 related to the Art of Photography.

Projecting apparatus for use in conjunction with "color photography" is the subject of Patent No. 1,070,699 issued to Isador Kitsee, of Philadelphia, Pa., the accompanying perspective showing the light and film mechanism. The film has thereon a series of picture units, neighboring picture units being of different color values; and as each picture unit is presented for exposure a source of light of corresponding color is energized. When through the movement of the shaft, the sprocket is moved, thereby bringing to view a picture, then one of the commutator-segments is brought in contact with one of the brushes, thereby connecting one of the lights into the circuit. It is now supposed that during one revolution of the sprocket wheel three pictures are brought successively to view, and it is taken for granted that the commutator (positioned on the same shaft) is also making one revolution during one revolution of the sprocket wheel, and that thereby successively all of the three segments come in contact with their respective brushes, and it is also taken for granted that the first segment closes the circuit, including the lamp giving out red rays, the second segment with the lamp giving out yellow rays, and the third segment with the lamp giving out blue rays. If now the sprocket wheel rapidly revolves, the resultant effect will not only be a change from one color to a second color, but also a graduation of this change through the persistence of the glow of one lamp at the time that the succeeding lamp commences to give out light rays of its own color. It is obvious that instead of entirely breaking the lamp circuit, a resistance of high value may be thrown in this circuit. This resistance will reduce the flow of current in the circuit to such a mimimum that the lamp will only glow and the degree of this glow can then be regulated, and is in reverse proportion to the value of the resistance. Instead, therefore, of extinguishing the light, the intensity of the light may only be reduced. In the case where the glow of one lamp persists until or after the beginning of the glow of the next lamp the color values of the correspondingly presented picture units are correspondingly modified by the picture taking or camera apparatus. Claim is made to the combination with a film comprising a plurality of picture units of a plurality of sources of light of different colors, means for moving said film with respect to said sources of light, and means for extinguishing and energizing said light sources in succession, one light source continuing to produce light an interval of time after the beginning of light delivery by a succeeding source of light.

Mobile pictures are to be used by the Government to entertain workmen and their families in the camp established for irrigation and other engineering projects in the Western reclamation service. To keep the workmen happy and contented while they are in the isolated camps, meeting halls, books and papers, lectures, and other means of entertainment have been supplied by the Federal authorities. The Government purchased several thousand feet of films to be exhibited in the various camps as a part of this scheme of entertainment.

The Compagnie Generale des Establissements Pathe Freres, Phonographe et Cinematographe, Paris, France, has applied for registration of ACETOID as a trade-mark for Kinematographic Films and Plates, claiming use since March 18, 1913.

A burner for use as a substitute for the calcium light for stereopticon and motion picture machines is the subject of Patent No. 1,070,002, issued to Francis W. Bell, of Nunica, Mich., Fig. 1 showing an elevation of the burner, and Fig. 2 being a diagrammatic view showing the positions of the mantles A, A, B, as related to the lens E,—the object being to employ a plurality of incandescent mantles in such manner as to project a large unbroken field of light of uniform intensity. The burner is adapted to support two inverted mantles A, A, and an upright mantle B arranged in alignment with the space between said inverted mantles. The upright mantle is slightly in rear of the inverted mantles, but this arrangement may be reversed if desired. The upright mantle is of such size as to overlap the space between the inverted mantles, thereby providing a combined field of light from the three mantles which is unbroken and substantially circular. The upward taper of the upright mantle corresponds in a sense to the downward curvature of the inverted mantles, so that the overlap is not sufficient to detract perceptibly from the intensity of the light from the rear mantle. Gas may be supplied to all three mantles through a single connecting tube attached to the end of the pipe C. This pipe may be provided with two branches D, D', leading, respectively, to the inverted mantles in front and to the upright mantle at the rear. The branch D, is arched, as at d, so as to reach above the upper end of the upright mantle, and at the same time bring said inverted mantles down about midway between the top and bottom of said upright mantle in order to produce the substantially circular field of light before mentioned.

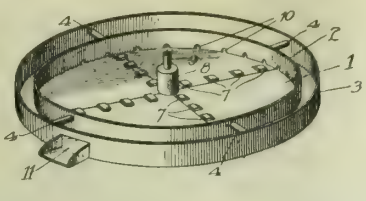
The accompanying perspective view shows a print washer invented by Albert G. McGregor, of Chicago, Ill., Patent No. 1,070,711. The device comprises an inner and outer receptacle, the former having a series of water inlets discharging water along the bottom of the receptacle, and having a series of water inlets at its margin discharging water into the outer receptacle from which the water finally escapes through a single outlet. The water being supplied through the chambers 8 and 6, flows through all of the conduits 5 from whence the water is discharged, and enters the receptacle through the inlets or openings 7. The prints or plates are placed within the inner receptacle and obviously in the path of the fresh water discharged thereinto. Owing to the current of water in the same direction, and from a plurality of discharge openings, the prints are kept sufficiently agitated and moreover are prevented from bunching together or clinging to any part of the washer with the result that the prints are thoroughly washed.



The Chicago Ferrotype Company, of Chicago, Ill., has applied for registration of MANDELETTE as a trade-mark for cameras, claiming use since June 1, 1913; also for MODELETTE for cameras, claiming use since July 10, 1913.

Geo. Wm. Miatt

Perry N. Vekroff, scenario editor of the Kinemacolor Company, is highly pleased with the results of his first production at the Whitestone, L. I., studios. The comedy is entitled "Playmates," and deals with the adventures of two children—a lonely little orphan girl, who has every material luxury that wealthy grandparents can buy, but lacks companionship and sympathy of those of her age. A bright little newsboy, who finds her crying in the park, becomes her champion, and is eventually adopted by the grandparents.

This little romance of childhood is rendered charmingly realistic by the acting of Joseph and Florence Moore, brother and sister in real life, who play the principal parts with naïvete and naturalness. The picture will probably become a running mate to that other Kinemacolor favorite with the little folks—"Other People's Children."

Fame still pursues our old favorite, John Bunny. A new theatre is to be opened at 147th street and Broadway, New York City, on the 15th of October, bearing the name of "Bunny." By a strange coincidence, Mr. Schultz, of "Foxy Grandpa and Bunny" fame, is to be the manager. John Bunny has been invited to open this theatre, which seats 1,400 people, 800 on the main floor and 600 in the galleries. It promises to be one of the most magnificent and largest moving picture palaces in New York City.

THE HILLS OF STRIFE (2 Reels) (Sept. 11).—A long-existing and bitter feud between two clans of the Kentucky hills culminates in a fierce battle, the factions being headed by Bill Knox and Pete Harris. Knox's wife, fleeing from her burning cabin, is hit by a stray bullet, and falls with her baby in her arms. The young child of Harris has also been killed, and the mother, in mad fury, has found a rifle and joined in the battle. She chances upon the dead Knox women, and her rage melts away as she takes up the motherless baby. Harris is killed in the fight and Jane Harris rears the baby as her own at first with the idea of working a splendid revenge upon the Knox clan by making the boy a deadly enemy of his own blood, but later forgetting this motive as she comes to love the boy, whom she names Tom, devotedly. Tom grows up a kindly, lovable youth, without the fierce and warlike instincts of the other mountaineers. He meets by chance Mary, a girl of the Knox faction, who is really a distant cousin of his, and the two fall in love, though their courtship is necessarily secret and dangerous, the feud having suddenly flared up again. Bill Knox, growing old, but more savage than in his youth, learns that Mary is meeting one of the enemy, and determines to ambush Tom. The boy's foster-mother learns of old Bill's plans, and reaches the ambushed trysting place just in time to throw herself in front of Tom and with her own body stop Bill's bullet. Before the old man can fire again he is disarmed by Tom, whose swift vengeance is stopped just in time by the wounded woman who, before she dies, tells them that Tom is old Bill's son. Though old Bill endeavors to keep his new-found son, Tom hates this fierce and bloody land, and with Mary turns his back forever on the mountains, passing down into the peaceful valleys.

GAUMONT

AN ACTOR'S ADVENTURE (Sept. 9).—A break in the mundane round of an actor's life causes considerable perturbation to Jean Loupin, a vaudeville artist. Having purchased a second-hand coat Jean proceeds to try it on, and while so engaged he feels something in the lining of the coat. Upon closer investigation this proves to be a note calling for help—William Burgon and his sister are prisoners in "The Retreat" at Arkell. Romantic feelings are aroused in the breast of the actor and he sets forth on what he feels may prove a very interesting and exciting adventure.

Arrived at "The Retreat," Jean sends in a note craving an interview, but although the interview is granted Loupin is everywhere regarded with deep suspicion, and looks of grave distrust are leveled at him. He goes away apparently satisfied, but in the dead of night secretes himself in the spacious grounds of "The Retreat" and effects an entrance to the house. A slight mishap in failing to draw the library curtains proves the cause of his undoing, and the intrepid Jean Loupin soon finds himself in a most unpleasant position—bound like a trussed fowl and condemned to die by the nauseating and asphyxiating odors of coal-gas. He struggles to burst his bonds, ineffectually at first, but eventually smashes a window and uses the broken glass wherewith to cut the ropes that bind him. And then Jean takes his revenge. Striking a match, he applies it to the gas-laden air at the moment his woud-be murderers rush into the room, and the instantaneous explosion exterminates the whole vile gang.

It is only a matter of moments before Jean has the unhappy William and Ethel Burgon freed from their position of danger in the burning house, and the subsequent interrogatory at the police-station leaves us convinced that the erstwhile hapless pair will soon come into their own again, now that their cousin's evil machinations have been effectually squelched. And we can well imagine that so brave a rescuer as Jean Loupin will assure his new-found friends that their lasting friendship is all the reward he seeks.

LOVE ME, LOVE MY ANIMALS (Sept. 11).—Simple Simon's Auntie Jane asks him to keep house while she and Uncle Tom are away on a short vacation, enjoining Simon to "be good to the animals—love them as you love me!" Simon is thoroughness personified and carries out his Auntie Jane's instructions so literally that the animals have one great time. Simon is certainly "good to the animals," and in every conceivable way endeavors to love them as he loves his Auntie. The resultant chaotic condition of things at Auntie's ménage can better be viewed than described, but it includes pigs and horses in the front parlor, the brindled cow in Auntie's own bed, and such like reversions of the ordinary trend of farm life.

George, the gardener, considers it his duty to inform Auntie by letter that she had better return home at once—"You will find yor house in a lovly state, bleeve me yors truly George"—and Simple Simon is only saved from severe castigation at his uncle's hands by the kindly intervention of Cousin Gertie, who loves Simon because he has such a kind heart.

RED SWEENEY'S DEFEAT (Sept. 13).—Justice tempered with mercy is a time-honored maxim that has been frequently practiced by stern old Judge Halcolm. Annie's past record has caused her to be known as "Slim-Fingered Annie." Her present appearance at the bar of justice is no different from similar occasions in the past, but the the judge not wishing to further blight the girl's life by sentencing her to penal servitude gives her a chance to start life anew in a more favorable environment where the faces are new and none know her failing and she need not fear the finger of scorn.

Annie accepts the kindly interest of the judge and the crime-seared conscience is actuated by a new interest in life as she boards the train for the Far West.

Arriving at her destination she establishes herself as the "ranch laundress," and her honest efforts soon win her the lasting friendship of her patrons. When now and then some of the boys become too marked in their attentions big Red Sweeney promptly clears the coast. That his task is self-appointed is quite apparent, for Annie demonstrates that she is well able to care for herself, and even his presence is not especially desirable, much to the delight of his vanquished foes. The free and open manner of these two principals draws them to each other like a magnetic force and both readily succumb to the attacks of Cupid.

In Sweeney's honest efforts to protect the "ranch laundress" he has incurred the lasting animosity of a Mexican, who in his desire to seek vengeance accidentally causes his own death.

Sweeney is taken in charge by the boys, and must pay the penalty imposed by Judge Lynch, when Annie comes to his rescue in a rather spectacular and thrilling manner.

Sweeney wants to skip the country, but is this time "held up" by Annie, who now insists that she go with him, that both may enjoy a new and better life.

CALAMITY ANNE, HEROINE (Sept. 15).—Hungry and weary, Calamity Anne is trudging along the country road with her burro in tow. Tommy gets stubborn and refuses to travel further until he gets something to eat. The tactics amuse an auto party passing along and a little girl of the party furnishes a banana for Tommy. Calamity and the girl become friends, and upon receiving the card from the girl's father Calamity promises to call at the home.

The automobile party passes two tramps who are camping by the wayside, and who recognize the millionaire and his daughter, whom they have contemplated kidnapping. They follow the auto and kidnap the child from her home, while the maid and her lover are engrossed in their lovemaking. Discovering the child gone, they rush to the house and inform the parents. Father informs sheriff, offers a big reward and starts a searching party.

In the meantime Calamity, jogging along, finds the tramps' camp and enjoys their untouched meal. After being refreshed she journeys on and meets the young lover in search of the child. She recognizes him as an old friend. He tells his trouble, and Calamity finds it is the little girl she has learned to love. She hurries to the home of the girl, and seeing the mother comforts her, tells her she will find the boy and starts out.

Tramps hide the child in an old deserted barn. Calamity, worn out, enters same barn to rest, hears child's voice, rescues her and captures the tramps. On her way back she meets the father, who is still searching, returns the child and receives the reward. The child wants Calamity to stay with her, but the beautiful home is too much for poor Calamity. She climbs out of the window to find out how poor Tommy is and spies the lovers in distress because they haven't the money to get married. She puts her arms around them, gives them her reward and tells them to be happy. Going into the garage she finds Tommy with trapping still on, and quietly steals out with him bound for home.

A FALL INTO LUCK (Sept. 18).—Living alone in the hills with her crippled brother Harry, Janes Edwards finds life pretty hard. An unkempt stranger, showing marks of a hard life, receiving food at their door, is not satisfied, but attempts to insult the girl; her brother, trying to drive him off, is knocked down and abused when the timely arrival of a young prospector, who is driving in the hills, drives off the renegade. On the hillside the prospector at work is attacked from behind and thrown over a cliff. The renegade, thinking he has fallen to the bottom or was killed, goes on. The prospector, stunned and landing on a projection not far from the top, is seen by the girl, who goes to his rescue with a rope. Seeing the lowered rope beside him he starts to climb up, and in his ascent he discovers traces of gold. To get his claim in working shape he must suspend himself with a rope around his waist. The renegade, thinking of the girl unprotected, turns back and finds the rope fastened at the top of the cliff; looking over he sees the prospector at work. Harry, the cripple, sees the renegade stoop to cut the rope, and shoots, while the prospector is surprised to hear the shot, and on ascending finds the dead man. A sheriff with a few deputies is scouring the hills for the renegade, for whom a large reward has been offered. Harry is thanked by the prospector as the sheriff arrives who hands the prospector a notice offering a reward for an escaped outlaw, dead or alive. With a smile on his face the prospector hands it to Harry, who, recognizing the picture, leads the sheriff away to the body while the prospector and Jane decide to join hands as life partners.

TRUE FEATURES

THE HOLE IN THE NET (3 Reels).—Jack Ward had always been the black sheep of the family, and finally was sent to prison for forging his brother's name. Upon his release he disappeared from the ken of his family. Many years have passed; his brother has become a millionaire, a widower with one lovely daughter. Pride had kept the old man from telling his daughter of his brother's infamy, and she knows only that her uncle is in some far-off country. As a matter of fact he is in London, making a living by his nimble, unscrupulous wits.

On his deathbed the dying millionaire tells his lawyer the whole story, and expresses the fear that the younger brother will return, when he learns of his death, in order to get the fortune. He beseeches the lawyer to protect his daughter, but for the honor of the family not to disclose his brother's villainous career. Having finished the story, he sends for his daughter, gives her his last blessing and dies.

The adventurer soon learns of his brother's death, and calls on his niece, introducing himself, and accounting for his long absence by various explanations. He is graciously received and invited to make the house his stopping place as long as he pleases. But the evil mind has already conceived a plan to do away with the innocent girl, and thus become the sole claimant for the immense estate. He is a member of the "Black League," a club of blackguards, and he calls on some of them to aid him. By means of a specially constructed secret door it is intended to kidnap the heiress.

The girl by accident hears a mysterious creaking, and tells her lawyer guardian of it. His suspicions are aroused, and he calls in Detective Duggan. Through the ingenuity of the detective and his shrewd boy assistant the conspirators are foiled, and the villainy of the uncle unveiled. And while this is in progress the heiress and Duggan have a chance to get very well acquainted, and have learned to love each other. And after he has rescued her from the clutches of her relative he tells her of his love and they are affianced.

THE TWISTED BAR (2 Reels).—The exploits of a mysterious burglar and robber have filled the newspapers for some time. Nothing is known of him save the fect that his right ear is strangely twisted and deformed. This has been noticed by several of his victims, and by reason of this he has been generally known as "Twisted Ear." The police are entirely at sea.

While driving with her fiance, Senator Rogers' daughter drops a glove, which is found and restored to her by a handsome young stranger, who at the same time presents his card to her fiancé. The Baron von Osten, for that is the name on the card, is presented to Miss Rogers, and the two seem strongly attracted to each other. Permission to call is granted and the acquaintance soon ripens into friendship, with her as well as her entire family. The Baron, a fashionable gentleman of leisure, is always a welcome guest at the Senator's house.

One night the household is awakened by the screams of Miss Rogers. A burglar has broken into the room and taken her priceless pearl necklace. She has caught but a glimpse of the man as he left, but recognized the notorious twisted ear. A servant who sought to stay the escape of the burglar was severely beaten.

Some days later the Baron gives a dinner to his friends. The champagne flows freely and the host drinks none too sparingly. To add to the gayety of the occasion an "Apache" dance, as danced by the criminal classes, is proposed. The Baron enters into it with a zest. He dishevels his hair, rearranges his clothes, and dances with an abandon hardly to be expected from so refined an aristocrat. The dance over, he rests, and, befuddled by the wine, absentmindedly fusses with his ear, twisting it out of shape. No one but the girl sees. She is fascinated, and as the ear remains twisted and deformed she recognizes the burglar. The Baron has fallen into a drunken sleep; the alarm is given, and he is arrested as the long-sought desperado.

But not until his sweetheart of his burglar self, jealous of his affection for Miss Rogers, turns against him and betrays him are the judges able to convict him. The scene ends with a court-room turmoil, the false Baron seeking to kill the informer, but held back by the strong arms of the police.

VITAGRAPH

SAUCE FOR THE GOOSE (Sept. 12).—Greatly peeved at her husband's constant falls from grace, Mabel Wise resolves to teach him a lesson. She threatens that if Jim ever goes out on "a bat" again she will retaliate in kind. Jim solemnly promises to behave himself and to give up the friends that are leading him astray.

Jim's friends come to the office the next afternoon and drag him out to have "just one." After the "one" they tell him of a French Ball for that evening and ask him to come along. He 'phones home to tell his wife of the engagement, and, if possible, to get her permission. Receiving no answer he concludes she is out, and rushes home to change his clothes before she can return.

On getting back to the house Mabel sees that Jim has been home, and resolves to have a surprise for him on his return at night. Later on she receives a 'phone call from him, telling her where he is. She tells him he must hurry home, as she wants him to come on an outing with her, purely imaginary on her part. He presses her for details, but she hangs up the receiver, leaving him wondering where she is going.

Mabel fixes up the room so that it will appear as if a gay party has held revel there and then goes out by herself. Jim, fearful of what Mabel may say to him, returns home early to find the house deserted but sees the signs of a "large evening." He is greatly worried by the absence of his wife and sits down to wait for her. She comes in soon, apparently with a beautifud "jag." She plays the part to perfection and has him almost crazy. When she is satisfied that she has kept it up long enough she enlightens him as to the truth. Jim is entirely penitent and again promises to remain on his good behavior, a promise that she compels him to keep ever afterwards.

CASTE (2 Parts) (Sept. 12).—Eccles, a profligate old drunkard, is the father of two beautiful girls, Esther and Polly. George D'Alroy, a young officer in the British Army who is infatuated with Esther, brings his friend Captain Hawktree to call. The Captain is greatly taken with the lively Polly, who makes him carry the teakettle about and generally dance attendance to her, to the emphatic disgust of Sam Gerridge, an ardent suitor for Polly's hand. Meanwhile Esther shows George a letter from an impresario offering her an engagement on the stage. The offer seems a veritable godsend to the girl, but she changes her mind when George asks her to be his wife instead.

A few months after they are married George receives the unpleasant news that he must sail for India with his regiment. Owing to her ultra-aristocratic ideas, George has not dared to tell his mother, the Marchioness D'Alroy, that he has married a girl of common origin, and he is in a quandary as to what provision he should make for Esther.

The farewell scene between husband and wife at D'Alroy's city residence is broken by the appearance of the aristocratic mother, come to bid her son Godspeed on his way. Her astonishment and disgust may be imagined when a lowly ballet girl is introduced as her son's wife! To cap the climax, old Eccles, in his customary state of saturation, enters and greets his newly-discovered relative.

The Marchioness departs in a huff, refusing to recognize her daughter-in-law, and George sails for India. Shortly after his arrival he is seriously wounded in an engagement and the news of his death is sent to England. Esther, with her young baby, leaves her husband's house and goes back to her family. Here she is soon in destitute circumstances. Old Eccles, sniffling with pity over his sad fate, soon spends all her money and then steals the necklace of his "poo lil grandson."

The Marchioness calls and haughtily offers to take the child and give Esther an allowance. To Eccles' horrified disgust. Esther refuses to be separated from her child.

Happily enough D'Alroy is not really dead. He returns home and effects a reconciliation between aristocracy and democracy which gives the picture a satisfactory finish.

THE ISLAND OF PERVERSITY (Sept. 15).—Stella Dale, a pretty young girl, has two lovers. One, Harry Brigham, an artist, is her favorite and the other, a fellow called Smith, is the choice of her father.

Whenever Mr. Dale finds Stella and the artist alone he tries to break up the party. On one occasion when he turns up with Smith and finds the girl posing for Harry, he sends her away with Smith and intimates to the artist that Smith is his choice.

Once he intercepts a letter of Harry's and finds it is to make an engagement for a boating party. He gets Smith and they plan that instead Smith, Stella and the governess shall go. Smith, a poor oarsman, "catches a crab" and after drifting for some time they get stranded on an island with no means of getting back. The governess, despite Smith's protests, takes the whiskey bottle and, puting a message in it, throws it out to sea. Later the bottle is found by Harry and, catching sight of the empty boat, he gets a rescue party together.

In the meantime the castaways have rigged up a tent of the steamer rug and are without any provisions but a few clams which Stella gets and which Smith cannot eat. Smith on the whole makes himself rather disagreeable, and Stella is wishing someone would come and rescue them. Smith and the governess become very friendly, and poor Stella is left almost entirely out in the cold.

She is almost in despair when she sees a speck on the sea. She watches it very closely, and to her delight it comes nearer, and as it does takes the form of a row-boat. Soon she recognizes her father and then Harry. At last they have arrived within hailing distance and in a few moments their keel grounds on the sand. The father jumps out and is rejoiced to see his daughter safe and sound, then to his amazement Smith explains that the attraction for him is in the direction of the governess. Harry and Mr. Dale come to an understanding and, with Stella in his arms, the artist is firmly convinced that "All's well that ends well."

SELIG

AROUND BATTLE TREE (Sept. 10).—The battle tree, one of the historic landmarks in the smaller towns, has been ruthlessly sacrificed to modern progress. For many years the youth of the town had gathered around it, etc. To Hilton, a workaday old bachelor in the city, this notice of a country paper brought back memories of the old crowd, mostly lost to sight, that there was an intention of reassembling at a certain date, some good Samaritan having sent out notices for the reunion, trusting that they would find response. An invitation also comes to Constance, who has wearied of the dreary grind of teaching the piano to young Americans who had neither tuneful ears nor sense of harmony, and she concludes that she will go back to the old, sweet town, quiet and restful.

This lady finds herself a guest of honor at Hilton's right, and they make right merry with quips and reminiscences of the good old days that are no more, the group including many who have achieved more or less fame in the battle with the big world. As the shades of evening fall, Constance quietly leaves the loquacious group and steals away to visit the "Old Battle Tree" and the carved bench under it where her initials were carved by her boyish lover in the long ago. She hears in the distance the singing of "Auld Lang Syne," then the shadow of a man deepens under the branches of the old tree. Hilton comes to see if the old carving is still intact. There he finds Constance and they renew the troth that they made in the youthful days of long ago.

RELIANCE

THE GLOW WORM (3 Reels) (Sept. 6).—Crane, a young mining engineer, goes West for his company. He meets Kip Crannige and his sister, Electra. Kip is addicted to gambling, and one night, during a game, Crane receives a bullet intended for Kip. Electra cares for him until he recovers. Then she begs him to take her brother away. Crane consents, and when he returns East, Kip goes with him. In New York Crane introduces his new friend to the president of a bank and gets him a responsible position.

one day Crane delivers a loan to Kip for his bank and receives from him a forged receipt. Kip pockets the money, $1,000,000, and sails for Isle de Ore, which is a gorgeous little island, owned by a South American, who runs a large hotel and caters to gamblers. The island is out of the jurisdiction of the law, so a great many swindlers manage to get there.

Kip, before going there, writes to Crane, asking him not to tell Electra what he has done and begs him to do his best to shield him. Crane, as soon as he hears of the theft, decides to go after Kip, before explaining to the bank officials, thinking he can get the money back from Kip and straighten things out. He sees Electra, who refuses to think her brother is guilty, and even hints that Crane is the guilty one. Crane, of course, is as much to blame in the eyes of the officials, as he has gone away and he had the money to hand to Kip.

A beautiful and brilliant woman detective named Miss Mallory is put on the case. She learns that Crane and Kip have gone to the Isle de Ore and follows them.

When Crane arrives at the isle he is kept in ignorance of Kip's whereabouts, the proprietor being anxious to get the money away from Kip. By gambling he has won half of it already and so Kip keeps out of Crane's sight until he has won some of it back. Crane is getting discouraged when he meets Miss Mallory. She and Crane become acquainted and she gets at the bottom of the business. She learns of Crane's innocence and Kip's guilt. She decides to help Crane and get Kip and what money he has before telling the newspapers the truth. She is greatly taken with Crane and Crane has great regard for her.

Miss Mallory meets the wife of the proprietor, who is a beautiful South American known as the Glow Worm. She is kept on the island much to her dislike, and hates the man who took her there. Miss Mallory gains her confidence and learns about Kip and the proprietor, and also that Kip is beginning to win some of the money back. The Glow Worm and her husband, Kip and another friend, and also Miss Mallory, are to go for a sail on the yacht which belongs to the proprietor. Miss Mallory tells Crane to go on board unseen and when away from the land he can make his appearance and get the money from Kip. The Glow Worm helps with the scheme in the hope of being able to sail to the mainland to get away from her husband, who does not treat her right.

Crane goes aboard unseen, and shortly after the whole party arrive. After dinner the men play cards and Kip wins a great deal. Miss Mallory yatches her chance to give a sign, by knocking on the deck for Crane to come up. As the men are playing she knocks and Crane, who has locked the servants below, comes up and, at a pistol point, demands an interview. He succeeds in getting the $1,000,000 from Kip. The proprietor recognizes the hand of the Glow Worm and is about to knock her down when he falls, striking his head, and is instantly killed. Kip begs Crane's pardon, which, upon the boy's promise to keep straight in the future, he grants. The Glow Worm, relieved of Rey's influence, finds refuge in Kip's arms. Crane returns the money and Miss Mallory reports to the paper with her story. And after all business has been executed, a pretty love story is evolved.

ESCAPED FROM THE ASYLUM (2 Reels) (Sept. 18).—Based upon a life story that has, for the past few years, attracted world-wide attention through the peculiar and heart-stirring circumstances that surrounded it, Escaped From the Asylum is a two-reel feature story that will reach the hearts and sympathies of every one who is fortunate to see it. The acting, staging and the compiling of the various incidents in continuous form is unusually efficient.

Richard Walton, a well-to-do husband, learns of the attention paid to his wife by a wealthy clubman. Walton's jealousy is aroused. He meets the club man face to face, and a fight ensues. The clubman is killed.

Walton is taken to the tombs. At the trial the alienists testify that Walton is insane; he is taken to the asylum to remain for life. During his stay there, his mother and wife visit him. He realizes the sad mistake he has made, and hopes to better his life.

He plans to escape. Through the window of his room in the asylum he throws out some bed-sheets tied to the bars of the window, and is about to descend from the third story, when the guards learning of the attempt, immediately capture him and return him to his room.

Five years elapse. Walton determines to prove his sanity, so with good behavior, he is permitted to entertain special privileges.

In the meantime Walton's accomplices, unknown to outsiders, plan to release him from his stay at the asylum. These men bribe the vegetable man, who delivers Walton a note stating the exact time and place that his escape can be managed.

The next day, by a clever ruse, Walton succeeds in making a successful escape from his room, through the corridor, past the sleeping guard, and through the partly open gates of the carelessly attended asylum.

Once out of the hands of the authorities, Walton and his men jump into a waiting auto and after a speedy travel cross the state line.

That evening Walton falls into the arms of his patient, loving mother.

CRYSTAL

MISPLACED LOVE (Sept. 21).—"Slip" Hines and "Long" Jim, two crooks working confidence games, are forced by Detective Mallory to desist. "Slip" leaves town. He goes to a farmhouse in the country and is taken in as a boarder. Mr. Simmons, the honest farmer, his wife, and pretty daughter Rose are attracted by the gentle manner of the crook. He makes love to Rose. She believes in him. Mr. Simmons catches him hugging Rose and orders him from the house. Rose decides to go with him and leaves a note that she has gone to the city to be married to him. She goes and they take a room in a boarding house. There he proposes immediate marriage. He goes out and gets his friend to masquerade as a minister and perform a mock marriage ceremony. The landlady's daughter proposes getting another witness and goes out for one. By chance she meets her friend Detective Mallory, who recognizes the two crooks. Slip escapes by jumping through the window. Rose, heartbroken, writes to her father, asking forgiveness and asking also, to be taken home. Her father tears up the letter. Time passes and Rose is forced to eke out a livelihood as a stenographer. She is employed in that capacity in the office of Frank Hammond, a wealthy stock speculator. He becomes very much attached to her. She goes out one day and to her surprise, upon her return she finds "Slip" in deep conference with Frank. He is playing the part of a smooth man of the world and is trying to inveigle Frank into buying some worthless stocks. They recognize each other. He writes a note on a card threatening to kill her if she exposes him. She goes out and telephones the police. Detective Mallory is sent and after a struggle "Slip" is arrested. Frank is grateful to Rose for her help in saving his investment and the affection he held for her ripens into love. She accepts his proposal and they get married. Rose hankers to see the old home again, and she induces Frank to go up with her on a visit. They are just in time to witness a scene whereby the sheriff is about to dispossess the old couple for non-payment of a mortgage and Frank is just in time to save the old homestead. Rose is reconciled to her parents and her folly in placing her faith with the crook is forgotten.

KLEINE-CINES

THE SIGN OF THE BLACK LILY (Sept. 2).—Mr. A. Duncan traveled in the best society and was generally a gentleman of high esteem among the fashionable element of the city. Mr. Duncan met Mr. Castlemain and the latter told him that he proposed leaving for his villa for a brief stay at the seashore. Oddly enough, Castlemain had no sooner left his home than thieves entered and looted the place. Kitty Castlemain, returning from the depot in her motor, suffered the inconvenience of a breakdown, and was met and assisted home by Mr. Duncan, a coincidence which explained itself to Kitty some days later.

James Fox, a private detective of renown, was called and the news soon spread to the stronghold of "The Black Lily Gang" that Fox was after them. Hence, Kitty received an anonymous note, suggesting that if she would like to regain her jewels, to send someone in whom she had confidence to the Aqueduct. This note she gave to Fox, who sent his assistant to shadow the bearer of the note back to the stronghold of the gang.

A sensational motor-car race followed and the important capture of one of the gang by Fox, who, with assistants, made his way to the secret meeting-place of the gang, and by dint of much effort managed to find the secret spring that opened the door. Exultingly, Fox stepped into the room, the walls of which suddenly rose before him, revealing a dozen of the gang, revolvers in hands. Suddenly the very floor beneath his feet gave way and the detective was precipitated into a deep pit, which, at the pressing of a button on the part of one of the gang, began rapidly to fill with water. Meanwhile the police were active. They also discovered the secret button marked by the sign of a black lily, and, after a valiant fight, managed to overpower the criminals.

Meanwhile one of the gang had taken a message to Duncan. The messenger was shadowed by an assistant of Fox, who returned to the gang headquarters with the information that Duncan was really the leader of the band. Fox then disguised himself as one of the important lieutenants of Duncan, and, going to the Castlemain villa, where a reception was being held, managed to convey a message to Duncan. The old man stepped into the garden and then Fox, with his evidence complete, revealed the wary old criminal as the real head of "The Black Lily Gang."

THE MYSTERIOUS MAN (Sept. 9).—Professor Mortimer and his daughter Helen go to a health resort for a short stay. Before leaving Helen says good-bye to Robert Marsh, her sweetheart, who promises to join her in the course of a few days.

At Clear Springs they meet old acquaintances and engage in the varied sports of a big resort. Several days later Robert Marsh, Helen's sweetheart (who is a detective), arrives for a little visit with Helen.

One night Count Desbro, who, with his wife and daughter, have been occupying rooms at the resort, is amazed to find a note upon the floor of his room threatening him with the loss of his daughter unless he places in the shrubbery at the corner of the terrace the sum of $2,000.00. The note was signed "The Mysterious Man." Loving his daughter above all things, the Count thought it safe to yield to the blackmailer, and that night "the mysterious man," a slender, well-built fellow, wearing a wide hat and heavy beard, crept into the terrace and slipped away with the money. In the morning Desbro related his experience to the guests, and with his wife and daughter hurriedly left the resort.

Some time later, "The Mysterious Man" sought out a fresh victim. Finding a stray boy on the street, "The Mysterious Man" gave him a threatening note to the aged and wealthy Greville. When the old gentleman received the note, he promtly telephoned the police, who set upon the track of the boy at once. Convinced of the child's innocence, the police were nonplussed. Meanwhile Greville is deliberately shot by "The Mysterious Man" in the grounds about the big hotel.

Robert Marsh found many happy moments alone with Helen, until finally the news of these outrages impressed him and he confided his intentions to her of running down the guilty party. Most of the guests left the resort. Marsh's intention to take up the case was accentuated by the conduct of Professor Mortimer, when he found Marsh making love to Helen.

Calling at police headquarters, Marsh closely examined the two threatening notes written to Count Desbro and Greville. His quick mind discovered a peculiarity in these notes, namely, that the writer was evidently in the habit of not crossing his "T's." With this scant clew, Marsh took his way back to the hotel.

In the meantime Helen and her father had a stormy interview and he made her write a letter to Marsh, asking him not to attempt to see her again. To this note Mortimer himself appended a brisk line of warning against Marsh attempting to see his daughter. When Marsh received the note, despite his sorrow, he was amazed to find that Mortimer had failed to cross his "T's." Although tortured by a terrible suspicion, Detective Marsh prepared a trap for the unknown criminal. With the chief of police and an assistant, he wrote a letter to Professor Mortimer commanding that the sum of one thousand dollars be placed on his desk that night under pain of death for refusal. This the trio signed "The Mysterious Man." When Mortimer received this note his teeth chattered with terror and his courage almost failed him. Determined to find out who had learned his secret, he arrayed himself in his wide black hat, long coat and beard, and, revolver in hand, took up his vigil behind the desk.

That night Marsh and his two assistants, hooded and masked, greeted "The Mysterious Man" in his own lair. A hand-to-hand fight followed, in which Marsh tore off the disguise of "The Mysterious Man," showing him as none other than Professor Mortimer. Behind the door Helen watched with mingled feelings. Her shriek brought Marsh to her side, thus proving that while Helen had lost a dangerous and worthless father, she had gained a better and stronger protector.

ESSANAY

BRONCHO BILLY REFORMS (Sept. 13).—"Broncho Billy" and his pals plot to rob the general store. Broncho Billy is selected to go into the store and engage the proprietor in conversation while the others enter the rear door and rob the till. A beautiful young girl comes out to wait on Broncho Billy and he is attracted by her beauty and sweetness, and goes back to his pals and declines to have anything to do with the robbery. His pals attack him, tie his hands and feet and go off on their horses to do the hold-up job without him. Broncho Billy manages to free himself, mounts his horse and goes after the bandits. Broncho Billy arrives on the scene just in time to prevent the robbery, and routs his erstwhile pals. The girl thanks him, and as he leaves, looks after him and sighs. He looks longingly at the girl as he mounts his horse, and thinks what happiness life would hold for him if he had led an upright and honest life.

PATHE

PATHE'S WEEKLY (Sept. 8).

SLEUFOOT'S SEVENTH SUICIDE (Sept. 9).—The love affair of Mandy Coquette and Sleufoot Shine, her dusky lover, was the scandal of the Blacktown villagers. Six times Sleufoot had offered his heart and hand to Mandy, six times Mandy had refused and six times Sleufoot had vowed to end it all. But he always reconsidered his decision, that's what made his friends sore, and that's why they decided, after Sleufoot's seventh notice that he was going to leave for parts unknown, to teach him a lesson. Sleufoot's friends, made up as imps of Satan, caught the would-be suicide in the dead of night. Not only did they scare the wits out of Sleufoot, but they nearly made his suicide a reality until Mandy stepped in and declared that hereafter she would be known as Mrs. Sleufoot Shine, which made everybody happy. The film will make everyone that sees it happy, too.

ACROSS THE CHASM (Sept. 10).—Dan Crockett's descendants still tell the story of their ancestor's first encounter with the Rocky Mountain Indians. A young warrior, because Dan would not supply him with "firewater," stole Dan's infant son and, when pursued, used a lariat, which Dan had given him, to span a yawning chasm and, with the baby tied to his back, moved hand over hand on his perilous journey across the abyss, while Dan and his wife, their hearts aching, stood and watched, fearing and powerless to do aught else than hope and pray. Too, they tell in a reverential whisper of how the warrior's sweetheart, coming upon her lover after he had safely crossed the chasm, felt her mother instinct strongly stirred, gave the Crocketts back their child, even though to do so cost her lover's life. A film that is pathetic and, in addition, is one continuous thrill.

PATHE'S WEEKLY (Sept. 11).

THE ACCIDENTAL SHOT (Sept. 11).—John Flagg, a revenue officer, fell in love with Rose Watkins the moment he saw her, but when his duty told him to arrest Rose's mother he did not let love interefere, neither did Rose let love interefere when duty told her to protect her mother. By clever manœuvring the girl got Flagg's gun away from him, and when he persisted in arresting Mrs. Watkins, Rose shot him. Rose's mother went to jail all right, but there Flagg's duty ended and rather than punish the girl he loved for her loyalty to her mother, Flagg freed her of all responsibility with the simple declaration to the police that he was wounded by an accidental shot.

YOUNG HEARTS AND OLD (Sept. 12).—Horace Willoughby marries Julia Sinnett, a girl of lower station in life, which greatly vexes Horace's uncle and guardian. Uncle Josh refuses to see Horace and his bride when they call, but Mrs. Watson, Uncle Josh's housekeeper, has an idea. The idea is put into practice and as a result Julia, the bride, melts the heart of old Uncle Josh and he finally admits the wisdom of his nephew's choice. A delightfully charming romance.

A JUNGLE FLIRTATION (Sept. 13).—Another of the animated cartoon films which will score a great success. The story deals with the love affairs of Lovesicko the Monk, and his adventures with the ladies of his choice have been pronounced by all "the funniest picture ever devised." The film is full of action and the situations cause spontaneous outbursts of laughter. If you want to give your patrons a real treat, book this film. It's a sure winner.

On the same reel.

TAHITI, THE PICTURESQUE.—A personally conducted tour through an island of wondrous beauty in the South Seas, opening with a view of Peete, the island's harbor, journeying up the road to the town where we see the market at five o'clock in the morning a scene of surprising industry. The film shows the costumes and customs of the natives, the principal points of interest, the Falls of Fautana with a drop of 680 feet, beautiful lagoons which dot the island and a thrilling view of the national sport, surf-riding.

SOLAX

INVISIBLE INK (Sept. 17).—Billy was flirtatious. At the summer hotel he planned to outwit Ruth's father, and wrote her a letter in invisible ink planning to elope that night. Writings in this invisible ink had to be heated before the symbols would appear. By an interesting chain of circumstances, the lovesick old maid, Flora, got the letter. Enraged at the sight of the blank paper, she angrily set a match to it, and the words of love appeared. The romantic soul thought they were meant for her and she was in such a trepidation of realized love that when Ruth and her father unexpectedly came in the room, the letter fell unnoticed from her belt. Ruth's father found it, and thought it had been dropped by his daughter. That night he locked her in her room, but when Billy signalled with his auto horn, and Flora ran out, he thought Ruth had escaped and followed on horseback. Ruth was awakened by the commotion and thinking Billy perfidious, she climbed out of the window and followed on a motorcycle. Billy and Flora were being married when Ruth's father appeared. And then the men discovered Flora's identity. She expressed her love for Billy and threw her arms around his neck; Ruth entered at this compromising situation. She would not listen to Billy's explanations, and indignantly strutted off. Flora turned to Billy—"I am still here, Cutey," but Billy rudely repulsed her, and she fell fainting in the arms of the disconcerted minister.

WESTERN LOVE (Sept. 19).—Young Richard Henderson, the son of a wealthy ranch owner, meets a siren at a wayside inn. Henderson soon surrenders to the spell of this fascinating creature's charms and for a long time is at her very mercy. He does not know her past, nor does he know that she earns her living by dancing in country taverns. His love for her not only blinds him to her frailties and immoral past, but also to the suffering love which Dawn White secretly cherishes for him in her bosom. Events shape themselves in time so that Richard is forcibly brought face to face with conditions as they exist in reality and his love for the dancer turns to hate. However, he cannot cast off the spell of his enchantress, and her spirit seems to pervade the very atmosphere which he breathes; even when he proposes to Dawn, the figure of Dawn fades from his view and he imagines he is placing the engagement ring on the finger of the dancer. This freak of imagination almost drives him insane, but by a happy turn of events he is saved from himself and eventually marries the girl who really loves him and whom he soon learns to love and cherish.

AMERICAN ECLAIR

ROB ROY (Three Parts).—In making this adaptation of the great novel of Sir Walter Scott, the Eclair company has succeeded wonderfully well in enveloping the action with the "atmosphere" of the time. The settings have been carefully chosen and really take you to Scotland, mentally. The costuming has been given careful attention and, in fact, the detail of this production is above reproach in every way. The acting has placed this feature very high in the list of Eclair successes. The story is one which will interest all and the action is so well fitted and dovetailed that there is not a single dull moment in the three reels.

Rob Roy, who is one of the farmers on the estate of the Duke of Montrose, is called in by the Duke to make an accounting. When the Duke questions Rob's figures, that worthy resents it and takes one of the Duke's flunkies, who tries to get him out of the room, and throws him out of a window. Rob then returns to the Duke, but the Duke has called in some soldiers and they overpower the Scotch giant. While Rob lies in prison the Duke burns his home and then releases him so that he may see only the ashes.

Bent on revenge, Rob Roy goes to Sir Frederick Vernon, who is secretly conspiring against the English, and offers his assistance. The plotters are interrupted in one of their meetings by the entrance of Rashleigh Osbaldistone, the nephew of the wealthy London banker, Sir Osbaldistone. Rashleigh offers to give the conspirators a sure means of freeing Scotland, providing Sir Frederick will promise him the hand of his daughter, Diana, who has just demonstrated her dislike for young Osbaldistone. Sir Frederick is so set upon his purpose of bringing freedom to his land that he forces his daughter to take an oath to marry Rashleigh. Rob Roy witnesses the taking of this oath although he is not in favor of forcing the girl into such a marriage.

In London, Francis Osbaldistone, a young man who prefers to write poetry and dream rather than work in his father's bank, has given up his place in the bank and he leaves to visit at the Vernon castle. Rashleigh, his cousin, hears of his leaving and takes the place made vacant in the bank.

When Francis arrives at the Vernon castle he is deep in love with Diana, Sir Frederick's daughter, almost before he knows it. A few days later the news comes, by Jarvie, Sir Osbaldistone's Glasgow representative, that Rashleigh has stolen some very valuable bonds from the bank and Francis and Jarvie set out to hunt down the thief. They meet Rashleigh in the mountains and Francis and his cousin fight a duel. They are interrupted by Rob Roy, who stops the fight and orders Rashleigh away. He thinks the thief is on an important mission to assist the Scots in their fight for freedom. After Rashleigh has departed Francis explains the theft of the bonds in his father's bank and then Rob agrees to assist in the pursuit of the thief.

Rashleigh, to revenge himself on Francis and place Sir Frederick in his power, turns traitor and goes to the English headquarters, where he tells of Sir Frederick's plot. The English start for the Vernon castle to make Sir Frederick a prisoner, but a Scotch spy has been before them and Sir Frederick and Diana escape through a secret passage.

Francis and Jarvie, not knowing of Rashleigh's treachery, apply to the English for assistance in tracing the thief of the bonds, and they are also placed under arrest. A Scot who attempts to assist them is arrested and threatened with hanging if he does not disclose the cave where Rob Roy lives. He refuses and is about to be hung when Rob appears in the distance and signals him to tell The prisoner then agrees to lead the men and they start with a detachment of troops, taking Francis and Jarvie along as prisoners.

Rashleigh discovers Rob Roy and, pretending to be friendly with the Scot leader, he succeeds in securing his sword and then places him under arrest. The English place Rob in a boat and start across the river with him.

The detachment of troops who had been following their guide found themselves in an ambush, which had been prepared by Rob's wife, and they were most ingloriously defeated in a great battle there in the hills. Rob escaped by jumping into the river from the boat and arrived just as the Scots, headed by his wife, had routed the English.

Francis set out again in pursuit of Rashleigh and met Sir Frederick and Diana, who were fleeing from the pursuing English. The three went to Rob's cave to get Jarvie and here they were surprised by the English, headed by Rashleigh, and captured. Rashleigh's triumph was shortlived, however, for Rob's men came in just in time to put an end to Rashleigh's insults to Diana. Rob fought a fair duel with Rashleigh after capturing him and killed him in fair fight, thus leaving Diana and Francis free to wed. The stolen bonds were found in Rashleigh's coat.

The Eclair production of Rob Roy is a feature which will delight both young and old. It is enacted in the Adirondacks and abounds with beautiful settings. The story is filled with action and there are several "big" scenes as well as many punches. It will pack every theatre where it is booked. See to it that your exchange is getting every Eclair.

GREAT NORTHERN

THE GIRL GRADUATE (Sept. 6).—This is an amusing comedy creation in which Elsie Frolich and Carl Alstrup are featured in the leading roles. It savors a trifle of the suffragette theme, but not sufficient to make it distinctly a "votes for women" entertainment. Mr. Burton, a manufacturer, has arranged to entertain Charles Groves, a young engineer. Upon his arrival he is greeted by the two daughters of the manufacturer. Doris is a pretty and engaging girl and her sister Ruth is of the more modern type, fond of athletics and mannish in her attire and demeanor. Groves admired her spirit and grit for the time being, but his thoughts soon returned to the less demonstrative sister. But the latter is not in love with Groves and simply seeks to cure her girl graduate sister of her mannish ways. At a ball which is given a week later, Groves and Doris pretend to be deeply attached to each other and the mannish Ruth acts the part of a "wallflower." The plan works out excellently and instead of attending a meeting of the "Women's Protective Society" she consents to accompany Groves on a boat ride. During the short excursion on the river Ruth decides that she will renounce the ranks of "man haters." That evening, in her own home, she is discovered by her fond parents sewing a button on Groves' coat. A prick from a needle and a kiss on the injured finger completed the cure.

There are many beautiful scenes enacted in the comedy and they are up to the Great Northern standard of excellence. The acting of Elsie Frolich and Carl Alstrup is calculated to prove a source of delight to those who view this film.

REX

THE WALL OF MONEY (Sept. 21).—Mr. McQuarrie, a rich, old factory owner, living alone in his large mansion while his son is away at college, has become miserly and works his men night and day, paying them the lowest wages possible. Daily accidents occur at the factory, due to the old, defective machinery used. The men have become very discontented and rumors of a strike begin to pass around among them.

Young Neilan, who has spent his spare hours designing machinery protected against accidents, after many weeks of hard work completes his plans, and at a meeting of the men they decide to send a committee to the monopolist to present the plans and request that the ideas be used to safeguard them against possible accidents. A meeting is arranged.

The monopolist, expecting trouble, has requested two detectives to be present in an adjoining room, and just before the committee arrives his son Wallace returns from college. The father explains the presence of the detectives, and asks the son to leave the room while he interviews the committee.

The committee is announced, and Neilan, as spokesman, states their request, producing his plans. McQuarrie refuses their demands and the men freely express their opinion of him. Lloyd becomes threatening, when the detectives come on and order the men out.

Wallace overhears the entire conversation in the adjoining room, and expecting some day to step in and take his father's place, he asks him for permission to work in the factory and study the conditions that prevail there. The father, however, has different ideas for his son's future and tells him to go to the sea-shore instead and spend his vacation there.

Wallace agrees, but instead of going to the sea-shore he goes to the factory, unknown to his father, and secures work. Here he is introduced to Neilan, who, thinking him a brother workman, invites him to come to his home to live with him and his sister Pauline, to help keep the little home going. Wallace meets Pauline. They become interested in each other, to the delight of Neilan, who has taken a liking to Wallace.

Neilan's sweetheart, Toddles, is the daughter of old Lloyd, a co-worker. Lloyd's son, Bart, a young lad, is also employed at the factory, and a week later is injured in an accident caused by defective machinery. The injury proves fatal, and the father, who is wrapped up in the boy, is almost driven crazy with grief.

Wallace, who has witnessed the accident, realizes the mistake his father is making in denying the demands of the men. He determines to go to his father and convince him wherein he is wrong. Rossin, a factory employee, who has suspected Wallace since the very beginning of being a spy employed by the monopolist, follows Wallace to his father's house. Seeing him enter the house, Rossin returns and tells Neilan, and to prove his assertion, takes Neilan to McQuarrie's home, where they see Wallace coming from the house.

Wallace is unable to make his father change the existing conditions in the factory and returns to devise some way of winning him over. Neilan, not knowing Wallace's relationship to the monopolist, now also suspects him of being a spy and refuses him entrance to his house. Pauline, when told of what has occurred, does not believe Wallace guilty, but is convinced when she sees him going into his father's home.

Old man Lloyd becomes insane with grief over his son's death and determines to revenge himself on McQuarrie. Just as he is about to leave the house with dynamite and fuse, Toddles intercepts him and, discovering his purpose, pleads with him not to commit murder. He locks her in a closet and leaves.

Neilan and Pauline, coming to see Toddles, hear the noise in the closet. Neilan releases her and she tells of her father's intentions. Pauline admitting her love for Wallace, pleads with Neilan to go and save McQuarrie. Neilan hurries to the house in time to put out the fuse. Aroused at the attitude of the monopolist, Neilan enters the house to denounce him and Wallace.

He enters the room just after Wallace has succeeded in winning his father's consent to let him run the factory to suit himself. Wallace explains the situation to Neilan and tells him he will be made assistant manager. Neilan, overjoyed, asks forgiveness for mistrusting Wallace, and the two young men hurry away to their sweethearts to tell them the good news. Wallace takes charge of the factory, raises the men's wages, installs safe machinery and gives them their Saturday afternoon holiday.

FEATURE FILM NOTES

Interested in New England and New York State respectively, W. E. Greene, and his associates Hiram Abrams and Art Schmidt, of the Victor Film Exchange, of Buffalo, called on the Candler Building hustlers early this week.

* * * *

Interesting in the annals of feature salesmanship, is the record of Joseph R. Miles, general manager of the Exclusive Supply Corporation, through whom these features are disposed, in selling nine prints without having even a herald or a poster to aid him.

* * * *

An exchange-man from Greensborough, N. C., was in New York the latter part of last week, and discussed with officers of the Exclusive Supply Corporation a proposition to supply a co-operative league of exhibitors in North and South Carolina and Tennessee.

* * * *

The Warner Feature Film Company, of New York, was granted a preliminary injunction by Judge Barratt restraining the Pekin Film Company, the Monarch Picture Film Company and Alexander R. Boyd, of the Bijou Dream, 1205 Market street, from producing a motion picture, "The Clue to the Broken Finger," under the title of "Horrors of the Night."

The Warner Company declares that it has the exclusive right to "The Clue to the Broken Finger," and, despite the change of name made by the defendants, the pictures are identical.

* * * *

Exhibitors and moving picture fans will be glad to know that one of the early releases on the Warner program will be "Back to Life," a drama of society, the equal in every way of "Her Supreme Sacrifice," whose emotionalism and superior photography demonstrated the fact that the Pyramid Film Company is peculiarly fitted to produce three-reel features with a "punch."

Another early release will be "A Florentine Tragedy," after the play by Oscar Wilde. The settings for this emotional drama were secured in California, and the acting of the principals, Constance Crawley and Arthur Maude, is of the very highest type.

Still another early release will be "In the Power of a Hypnotist," introducing the international favorites, Gene Gauntier and Jack J. Clark. This pictureplay, written by Miss Gauntier, is absolutely unique in the history of moving pictures. Sidney Olcott plays the part of Gondorza, the traveling hypnotist, and his interpretation of the role is most convincing. A huge snake plays an important part in this unusual feature. His Snakeship coils about the neck and arms of Miss Gauntier in a way that is truly hair-raising.

* * * *

Joseph Hopp, during a few days' stay in New York in which he completed arrangements for the sale of his exchange interests in Chicago, signed a contract with the Exclusive Supply Corporation for the handling of the Exclusive program in his territory. Joseph R. Miles, general manager, and Harry R. Raver, secretary and treasurer, acted for the Exclusive.

The General Feature Film Company, with offices at No. 112 North La Salle street, Chicago, is the name of the new company.

Mr. Hopp is a firm believer in the present and the future of the Feature program, and his years of experience in the moving picture business substantiates his faith in such brands as Great Northern, Solax, Blache American Features, Film Releases of America and Itala.

Herbert Blache, president of the Exclusive Supply Corporation and identified with his wife in the Solax Company, and also the head of the newly projected Blache American Features, is taking a well-earned fortnight's vacation in the Pocono Mountains in Pennsylvania.

Presumed to be an aftermath of an accident some months ago in which Mr. Blache was severely burned while directing a picture, he has had considerable trouble with a poisoned arm. It is with the purpose of getting into good trim for the active fall campaign that Mr. Blache has gone away to seek recuperation in the recreations of tennis, boating, fishing, etc

While he is absent he will also write several scenarios for forthcoming features, and whip "A Fight for Millions" and "The Prisoner in the Harem" into shape on paper.

* * * *

All releases of the Ramo Company, beginning September 1st, will go through the Exclusive Supply Corporation. Contract putting the Ramo subjects on the Exclusive program was signed at the Exclusive offices in the Candler Building, New York City, Acting for the Ramo Company were: Horace A. Snow, president; A. G. Leonard, secretary, and C. Lang Cobb, general manager; Harry R. Raver, secretary, and Joseph R. Miles, general manager, represented the Exclusive.

The Ramo single releases will be discontinued and the Ramo Company will confine themselves exclusively to making two three-reel features monthly.

Arthur N. Smallwood, general manager of the United States Film Company of New Jersey, with offices in the Flatiron Building, New York, has just returned from a business-getting trip covering two weeks in which he visited seventeen cities searching for industrial contracts.

The United States Film Company specializes in making local pictures for exhibitors and civic organizations. This company will shortly begin the making of historical pageants featuring the early history of the various cities in which the pictures will be made. These films are made with large casts in which local people alone will be used. These local features will be played on percentage in various cities where they are made.

* * * *

Rita Sacchette, the famous actress, danseuse and mimic, will be seen in the near future in a Great Northern feature production entitled, "During the Plague." The film is said to be powerful in many respects, and the appearance of Madame Sacchette for first time in moving pictures may be regarded as an achievement on the part of the pioneers in the field of features.

* * * *

General Manager Oes, of the Great Northern Film Company, is planning an elaborate private exhibition of Hauptmann's "Atlantis" in the near future. From all accounts this big nine-reel feature will prove one of the season's film sensations.

* * * *

Warner's Features, Incorporated, have contracted with The Great West Moving Picture Company, of California, for three-reel Western dramas for their feature program. The contract expressly stipulates that Indian scrimmages, the everlasting tiresome chase pictures, and red men versus white men scraps, be entirely eliminated, as the market is glutted with them. Real Western stories will be made, such as the "Cowboy and the Lady" series, the "Mountaineers vs. the Plainsmen," the "Border Riders," "The Mexican and the Gringo"; the ever prevalent Jap will be interwoven into big heart throbs, with the proverbial punch in every reel.

Joseph Shipman, of Los Angeles, general manager of the Great West Company, a California corporation, has already secured a choice location for studios, and enrolled some of the most noted players and producers in the West.

The first release will be entitled "The Fugitive Law" and re-enacts the tragic death of Madero, and the escape of sympathetic Americans, through the interior of Mexico, and their final escape from the danger zone by means of the aeroplanes which were identified with the attack upon the gunboats of the federal government in the harbor of Guaymas, in the Gulf of Lower California. The story opens with the "One-Armed Sheriff of Tucson" who mysteriously disappears when in charge of the captured airships which were seized as contraband of war upon the frontier, but later successfully got over the lines; and closes with a thrilling dramatic scene in Sonoratown, Los Angeles, where the vengeance of the defeated powers pursues the fugitives under the outstretched wings of the American eagle.

Frank S. Jonas, of the Kinemacolor film service department, has gone on an inspection tour through New York State and Pennsylvania to award contracts to the better class theatres. Kinemacolor has many applications for service, but always inspects the houses and awards exclusive service to the theatre which caters to the best clientèle and has a live manager. Mr. Jonas has built railroads in Bolivia, so is not likely to get lost.

Motion Pictures as Historical and Human Documents

The progress of the motion picture as an educational medium has been remarkable during the past few years. While the pictureplay is the form of motion picture that is most popular, the travel pictures and the illustrated weekly films are creating more interest each year. These pictures allow many people to escape the narrow environment in which they are confined and give them an opportunity to see, more clearly than ever before, the life of the world in many countries and many climes.

The motion picture has already entered the class rooms of our schools and colleges and one does not need the eye of a prophet to see that the field there has only been scratched in that line. Only recently a great religious educational association meeting in a New England city endorsed a plan for a film produced under its auspices that should show the great events in religious history from the creation. This association endorsed the motion picture as a powerful aid in religious instruction.

The concern which is even photographing our own city (Newburyport) is getting together the most wonderful and valuable collection of civic motion pictures ever attempted and the uses to which these pictures can be put are unlimited. A set of the film may, it is reported, be deposited with the local historical society. If this is done the film would provide a historical document without a superior.

There seems to be little doubt that many homes will soon be provided with motion picture apparatus. In fact a home outfit is already upon the market and has been for a year or more. The old photograph album has been one of the family's most precious relics for years, but the thought of moving and even talking pictures of the dear ones who have passed on must appeal to everyone. And it is a pleasure that the immediate future holds in store.—Newburyport (Mass.) Herald.

Chat With Mrs. Langtry

In a chat with a representative of The Bioscope Mrs. Langtry (Lady de Bathe), who is the latest famous actress to have her art immortalized by the cinematograph, said: "I enjoyed immensely my first experience of picture acting, and, moreover, I found it extremely interesting. Obviously, of course, everything in a cinematograph play must be told by gestures, which have to be more forcible and more elaborate than on the ordinary stage. In view of this fact, I was surprised, when seeing myself on the screen—a delightfully novel sensation—to find how natural my gestures appeared; they did not seem at all exaggerated, although I had feared they might do so. Watching oneself act is, in itself, a complete education. Oh, I think there is no doubt at all but that cinematography has a great and a wonderful future before it. Its educational possibilities must be almost unlimited, and then it is so fascinating, regarded as a means of perpetuating the art of the actor. I think that all fine actors ought to be 'filmed.' If we only had some record of Henry Irving, for instance, how invaluable it would be! It would be so interesting to compare new schools of acting with old ones—and I think that there would be a good many useful lessons to be learned from so doing. I was very glad to hear that Forbes-Robertson had had his wonderful 'Hamlet' preserved in this way for future generations. I admire him immensely * * * Yes. I certainly hope to appear again before the camera, as I have been very pleased with this first experiment. I have a contract with Mr. Frohman for a year."

Record Rate of Taking Pictures

Moving pictures have been made at the rate of 100,000 a second in contrast with the rate of fifteen or twenty a second, which is enough when reproduced on a screen to give the eye the impression of a continuous picture. The only thing that moves fast enough to make such tremendous speed worth using is a bullet, and some extraordinary pictures of bullets have been taken at this rate, seventy-two pictures being taken of a revolver bullet as it moved ten inches from the muzzle.—Saturday Evening Post.

Over $80,000,000 Invested in Motion Pictures

In comparatively a few years the moving picture interests have developed into a great and thriving business. It has spread over the whole country, and more than $80,000,000 is invested in it. Outside of the writers of scenarios there are 250,000 people employed in it—film makers, "managers," troupes of actors employed just for this purpose, electricians, mechanics and others of less prominent potentiality, such as ticket sellers, doorkeeps, etc.

Thus it is easy to see how many people make their living in this new industry.

That it is a money-maker, in spite of the low charge at the gate, is proved by the fact that during the last twelve months $319,000,000 was paid for entrance fees.

These moving pictures are entering into every phase of life; rich people have weddings thus produced; they are used in the operating room to perpetuate for study the work of certain great surgeons; the schoolroom, and even the Sabbath school are being invaded and improved by this way of teaching history and science.

In many of the large cities some of the best theatres have been given up to this species of amusement. In New York it is said that no less than twenty playhouses will next season become moving picture shows.

It is a wonderful invention, this process of "reeling off" pictures that have the movement and seeming vitality of people who are alive. Even the facial changes are noted on the canvas.

Every age has its new interests and demands, but there are few things that have made the progress in public favor and financial success of this new industry of moving pictures.—Memphis (Tenn.) Com. Appeal.

Moving Pictures Everywhere

Of course, the United States leads in motion picture manufacture and motion picture consumption, but—really, all nations are "doing" the movies.

New York has slightly more than 480 picture theatres. Nine of the largest cities in the United States have 1,400. Paris has 200 motion picture theatres that are visited by 100,000 persons daily. London has 400 such theatres and in all the rest of England there are 2,400. It is declared 8,000,000 persons visit the "movie" theatres in Great Britain every week.

In Germany's 33 largest cities there are 500 motion picture play parlors. Berlin has 260, and throughout the German empire there are 3,000. The "movies" are the principal form of entertainment and amusement in malicious Mexico. There theatres and theatrical companies are scarce and pictures are shown in the bull ring. The "movies" are as much liked in the Orient as in other parts of the world. The Malays, Chinese and Japs are enthusiastic about them and Shanghai, China, has three thriving picture theatres.

There are about a dozen "movie" theatres in Bombay, India and Rangoon. Burma has its quota. There is a Federated Picture Showmen's Association in Australia, and the school authorities have installed moving pictures in the public schools of Greece.

All the world loves a "movie"!—Toledo Blade.

Popularity of Picture Entertainments

It looks as though the moving picture business was to invade more "big" theatres than ever the coming theatrical season, and as though the field for the actors themselves was to be, perhaps, more restricted than ever. Announcements are already being sent to newspapers over the country telling how representatives of the stories of famous novels, and reproductions of famous old plays, are to be put on and pictured and the pictures sent broadcast the country over before the season closes. More and more time and effort seem to be given to making picture plays, while announcements of new plays are not numerous and of new stars almost nothing is heard. The idea seems to be to give up time in certain theatres to plays already successful, or to new works by authors who have already made their mark; and to depend in many other big houses, formerly homes of the drama, on the moving picture films to provide entertainment, going constantly into new fields and working out new ideas. The smaller cities must look for their entertainment almost entirely to the pictures, to low-priced vaudeville and to stock companies.—Norwich (Conn.) Record.

Is "Quo Vadis" Copyrighted?

Since the recent start made by Cohen & Harris and the attorneys for the Polish author, Sienkiewicz, to investigate the apparently unlawful use of his story of "Quo Vadis" for stage and moving picture use, there have come to light some papers in the matter which promise to raise havoc among those who were guilty of using the story without authorization.

It seems that when "Quo Vadis" was originally dramatized the matter of copyright in this country was taken up, and, not unlike the case of "The Merry Widow," there was a slip in the cog somewhere. The play was pirated in the most shameful manner and the author secured little or nothing from the producers of America.

The papers in the copyright matter were recently sought out by Cohan & Harris when they purchased the booking rights of George Kleine's eight-reel production of "Quo Vadis," and it now seems that those who have entered the field with unauthorized and poor imitations will find themselves debtors in various sums, for it is said that they can be held as soon as the copyright in the matter is cleared up. The royalties on the authorized version of "Quo Vadis" will be enormous, and the attorneys for the author are preparing to go after the pirates in lively fashion, as they believe they have the goods on them.—San Francisco Chronicle.

Is "Nick Carter" a Trade-Mark?

Nick Carter, the hero of many "yellow back" novels and worshiped by three generations of small boys, is to be considered by the Supreme Court. Nick was about to appear upon the moving picture stage, when a New York firm of publishers last week claimed that Nick Carter was born in their imagination about twenty-three years ago, and had risen to fame as a leading character in their detective stories.

A St. Louis moving picture company believed that Nick was destined to be a drawing card and so they prepared and advertised a "detective" film with an attractive title. In their advertisement they declared "we have struck oil b'gosh." The matter got into court. The New York firm claimed the moving picture company was infringing a trade-mark they possessed to Nick Carter. After going through the Federal Court of Appeals for the eighth circuit the matter was appealed by the publishing company to the Supreme Court.—Waterbury American.

Limiting Size of Audiences

The new motion picture ordinance which recently passed the New York Board of Aldermen and was signed by Mayor Gaynor, went into effect last week. The new law provides that 600 people, and not 300 as at present, shall be the numerical limit of onlookers permitted in a motion picture house during a performance, provided the building is at least twenty feet in width.

The main floor of all motion picture show houses, under the new measure, must be on a level with the street, "with no steps leading thereto, ascending or descending.

No provision is made in the ordinance for the censorship of pictures other than that which has all along existed in the city's right to prevent the display of immoral, indecent, or otherwise illegal productions.

Seeing Themselves Act

Charles Frohman, one of the greatest theatre men in the country, has made a new use for the picture "movies" that may revolutionize the art of acting. He has caused moving pictures to be made of a company in rehearsal in order that the players may see themselves act. The painter can view his picture dispassionately, the novelist can read what he himself has written and the musician can listen with trained ear to his own composition but the player has not been able to see himself act. Now the "bad" actors had better brace up and be "good" or they will be relegated to the tall timber.

Commercial Films

The first interior moving picture scenes ever taken in Milwaukee were those made at the Crystal Theatre recently by the Monarch Film Company. The scenes completed pleted a most interesting and instructive film which the Monarch people have been making for a hosiery company, and which will showw al the steps in the manufacture of harvested cotton to the arrival of the finished product at the home of the retail buyer. The Milwaukee picture company is the first to devote itself exclusively to commercial work of this character, and the hosiery picture is but the first of a series that are now being made.

NOTES

Kansas City's new passenger station is to have a motion picture show to entertain persons waiting for trains.

* * * *

Information was formerly measured by the page; it may soon be computed by the foot. One motion picture firm is sending out letters announcing that it has in stock 10,000 feet of architecture, 30,000 feet of science, and 90,000 feet of geography.—The World's Work.

* * * *

A somewhat novel idea was introduced recently at the Cinema Picture Hall, of Bristol, England. It consisted of a Picture Actors' Contest, run on original lines. The Vitagraph film, "A Woman," was chosen as the subject, two particular scenes therefrom being acted by the competitors. The lady and gentleman winning each evening acted the scenes again to the camera, and at the Saturday performance the pictures were shown on the screen for the final judgment.

OUR MOTTO—ONE FOR ALL, ALL FOR ONE

The non-appearance of the Chat in the last issue of the M. P. News was commented upon and the following is the explanation of its absence. Several pages of matter were to be changed just before going to press, and in making up the forms a mistake was made, which cut out the page containing the Chat. This was accidental and not intentional.

The regular meeting on Monday, September 1, 1913, of the M. P. M. O. U. No. 1 was well attended and matters of general interest to all operators were discussed. The meeting closed at 4.30 a.m. and was adjourned until the next regular meeting.

MEETING NOTICE

The next regular meeting of the M. P. M. O. U., No. 1, will take place on Monday, September 15, 1913, at 12 o'clock at the meeting rooms, Teutonia Hall, 66 Essex Street. At this meeting a full report will be given by the committee on its meeting with the officials of the A. F. of L., therefore each and every member of the M. P. M. O. U., No. 1, who is vitally interested in his welfare for the present and the future good of all concerned is required to be present at this meeting on Monday, September 15, 1913, without fail.

INDIANA STATE CONVENTION

The Indiana State Convention of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of America will be held at the new Severin Hotel on September 30th and October 1st. It will be the largest gathering of motion picture exhibitors ever assembled in Indiana.

The exhibitors all over the State are enthusiastic, and their slogan is "Stand by the M. P. E. L. of A. and the Flag."

Mr. Neff visited Indiana Sunday and perfected arrangements for the big assembly hall at the Severin Hotel, and arrangements for the exhibition that will take place.

A big banquet will be served on the night of September 30th in the large, beautiful dining room of the Severin Hotel. Every motion picture exhibitor will be welcome whether they are members of the league or not.

Many names are being received at headquarters, stating their intention of attending the convention, and wishing the league "God speed."

All the national officers are expected to attend both the Illinois and Indiana State conventions. Both States will be reorganized under the old charters and new officers elected, and a thorough working league established.

ILLINOIS STATE CONVENTION

Big preparations are being made for the Peoria convention. Clem Kerr is on the ground, and will be ready to take pictures of the convention and views of Peoria and the convention.

Chicago will be represented with not less than twenty-five and possibly fifty members of the league. The State of Illinois, outside of Chicago, is very enthusiastic, and will be in Peoria on September 23rd and 24th in large numbers.

Mr. Thomas Leonard, president of the Southern Illinois Local No. 1, writes that Southern Illinois will be represented by a large delegation.

Applications for membership are coming in unsolicited from Illinois daily to President Neff's office. Mr. Geo. M. Westley, State organizer for Illinois, is taking in new members every day.

The Peoria convention will be one great, grand, big, harmonious convention. A banquet will be served on Wednesday night to all the members and their wives and sweethearts.

It is confidently expected that not less than 250 and possibly 300 exhibitors will be in attendance at the convention.

The convention will be called to order in the assembly room of the Jefferson Hotel at 10.30 a. m., Tuesday morning, September 23rd.

LEAGUE NOTES

Mr. W. H. Seymour, who owned the See-More Theatre at Lockland, O., who attended the New York Convention, died August 25th, and was buried in his home town, Lockland, O., on August 27th. Cincinnati Local assembled and passed resolutions of regret and sympathy.

The See-More Theatre will be opened in a few days.

Mr. Seymour was one of the old members of the Ohio State Branch, No. 1, of the M. P. E. L. of A., and was a true, faithful worker for the cause of the League.

The big outing given at Chester Park by the Cincinnati Local, No. 2, of the M. P. E. L. of A. was a grand success. The park was crowded and everybody enjoyed the outing.

The Cincinnati Local has been successful in reaching a permanent agreement and all arrangements complete and being carried out. Three reels for 5 cents are being run, and not to exceed 5 reels at any price. Every exhibitor in Cincinnati, with the exception of three, belongs to the League. Cincinnati Local has 81 members. All the exchanges and exhibitors coöperate together for the uplift and protection of the business.

* * * *

Mr. L. J. Ditmeyer will send the Kinemacolor machine to Mr. J. A. Maddox, of Columbus, for the purpose of running the Kinemacolor for the Censor Board. Cleveland, Sandusky, Columbus, Dayton and Cincinnati have all made arrangements and are coöperating, and are running only 3 reels for 5 cents and not to exceed 5 reels at any price.

* * * *

Toledo Local, No. 3, will hold a special meeting at 9 a. m. the morning of Tuesday, September 16th. President Neff will attend, as matters of importance directly affecting the Toledo Local will be taken up. Sandusky Local, No. 7, will meet at Fremont, O., on September 16th. Mr. Neff will leave Toledo at 12:30, going to Fremont, where he will attend the Sandusky Local meeting, returning home by the way of Columbus.

* * * *

Since the New York Convention, Milwaukee, Wis., has passed an order, which is now in effect, and all of the exhibitors have to pay $30 a year license where heretofore there was no license charged. Milwaukee council, it is said, will pass a local censor board. Chicago is having its ups and downs with the city administration, as the authorities have decided to force every picture theatre in Chicago to put in a ventilating system which will cost every theatre not less than $900. Indianapolis, Ind., has had a great deal of trouble owing to the union operators' strike.

* * * *

The Ohio Censor Board has been appointed. Mr. J. A. Maddox, former president of the Columbus Local, No. 4, now a member of the Ohio State Branch, No. 1, was appointed for one year. Mr. H. E. Vestal, of Ada, O., who runs the Lyric Theatre, and who is an enthusiastic member of the Ohio State Branch, was appointed on the board for three years. Mrs. M. M. Miller, who is a newspaper woman of broad experience, was appointed for two years. As evidence that the board will not be a political one, Mr. Maddox and Mr. Vestal are both Republicans. Of course, Governor Cox is a Democrat, and so is the president of the League. The board was appointed strictly from the standpoint of capability, regardless of political affiliation.

The salary of each member is $1,500 a year. A secretary will be appointed, and the board is entitled to employ sufficient assistants to carry out the law.

The Conscience Film Company has opened offices in the World's Tower Building, 110 West 40th Street, New York City.

DAVID HORSLEY RELATES HIS IMPRESSIONS OF TRADE CONDITIONS IN EUROPE

At the Hotel Astor, on Wednesday evening, Mr. David Horsley entertained representatives of the motion picture trade papers and talked in an interesting manner of his trip throughout Europe, giving his views of the conditions in the various branches of the film industry as he saw it while touring abroad with his family.

Sailing on the Celtic, June 26th, Mr. Horsley spent three weeks in England, one week in Paris, visiting Italy, Switzerland, Germany, Monte Carlo and Mediterranean points, with side automobile tours to every point of interest. Mr. Horsley found a marked demand for educational and scenic film subjects, and also found that sensational drama and comedy as well as half reels are very popular and the audiences very demonstrative.

In the making of big productions he said Europe is in the lead, and the best talent is available at a compensation far below the big salaries paid to American actors. The Milano Company has a wonderful organization, and is the foremost company in Europe to manufacture big productions. The leading companies have glass studios, some one hundred feet square, and the operator works in the daylight and open air. Plenty of time is given to productions, and money spent freely; also, details are carefully observed. Unlike the American companies, they have no regular releases. Eighty per cent of the program on the Continent is made up of American releases. Pathe and Gaumont have practically a monopoly of the foreign-made pictures.

Most foreign manufacturers guard the secrets of their trade very carefully, have the best of machinery, and employ the most capable photographers, which enables them to produce the best pictures. The Italians are the most enterprising.

At Brussels, American pictures are featured. Western and cowboy pictures are in great demand. The Vitagraph releases have an enormous sale throughout the Continent. Mr. Horsley visited the new offices of Tibbets, at London, situated on Oxford Street. This enterprising concern is representing the Universal program.

Throughout Mr. Horsley's informal talk he was thoroughly optimistic as to the prospects for the American manufacturer in Europe. His trip was in every sense for pleasure and rest, and he returned to America on the Olympic, September 10th. Mr. Horsley announced that he will be interested in the establishment of a chain of theatres throughout the United States in which the best of regular and feature releases will be presented, and it is his intention to thoroughly eliminate all undesirable pictures and those having gruesome themes. His experience as a manufacturer for about six years, and as a pioneer in the film business, eminently fit him to conduct such an important enterprise.

Mr. Horsley proved himself to be a prince of entertainers, and his informal dinner and talk were thoroughly enjoyed by all who were privileged to attend. The following were present as guests of Mr. Horsley: Arthur Leslie, "Syndicate Publishing Co."; George F. Blaisdell, "Moving Picture World"; George D. Proctor, "Morning Telegraph"; Fred Beecroft, "Dramatic Mirror"; Joe Farnham, "Billboard"; W. P. Milligan, "Morning Telegraph"; Earl J. Hudson and Roland E. Blaisdell, "Standard Moving Picture Co."; W. A. Johnston, "Exhibitors' Times"; and Wm. M. Petingale, "Moving Picture News."

The house of Gaumont, ever moving with the swift trend of time, has evidently decided to invade the American field in a more earnest manner than has hitherto been the case, and instead of relying entirely upon European productions we now find them announcing American releases. The first of these will be released on September 15th, entitled "The Faithful Servitor," acted and photographed entirely in California scenes of rare beauty. The narrative concerns the undying devotion of a native servant, Machudo, who hovers like a good spirit around the person of the lovely Esmeralda Gabora, shielding her from harm and rescuing the young Spanish senorita from the unwelcome embraces of a scoundrel who kidnaps her. "The Faithful Servitor" is full of interest and pathos and local color, and if this is to be regarded as a sample of "Gaumont American" we can only say they will be very welcome indeed.

DEATH OF MAYOR GAYNOR

As we go to press, the death of Hon. William J. Gaynor, Mayor of the city of New York, has been recorded by wireless from the White Star steamship, the "Baltic." Mayor Gaynor was on his way to Europe to recuperate from his exacting official duties. He was an exceptional character in many respects, and was widely known throughout the country.

Mayor Gaynor was fair-minded and did what he could to further the best interests of moving pictures in New York, with a view to protecting both the exhibitor and the spectator. While opposed to immoral and harmful films, he was by no means in favor of indiscriminate censorship. Only recently he signed an ordinance limiting the numerical limit of spectators in a moving picture house during a performance to 600 people instead of 300, provided that the building is at least twenty feet in width.

One of Mayor Gaynor's characteristic utterances was to the effect that, although he had had a pretty hard time for four years, at least he had been Mayor. While his drastic methods of reform naturally made him many enemies, he also won thereby a host of friends, by whom his death will be greatly deplored.

The Denver, Colorado, office of the Mutual Film Corporation is in receipt of a number of communications from their exhibitors in western Kansas, stating that a Mr. Graham has been in that territory inspecting machines and attempting to sell supplies on the strength of being a representative of the Colorado Mutual Film Corporation. For the benefit of exhibitors, will state that Mr. Graham is an impostor; neither the office nor the Kansas City Mutual has ever had anyone in its employ by the name of Graham.

The extent to which writers of reputation are entering the moving picture field is illustrated by a list of the authors responsible for recent Reliance offerings. "Peg of the Polly P" and "The Social Secretary" are both by Forrest Halsey, perhaps the most prolific scenario writer among the regular contributors of magazine stories. "Feeney's Social Experiment" is by Vaughn Kester, author of "The Prodigal Judge" and other well-known novels. "The Glow Worm" is by Will Levington Comfort, who is known to all magazine readers. "The Disguise" is by E. R. Carpenter, while "The Stolen Woman" is by Eleanor Ingram, another large contributor to magazines, and "The Hardest Way" is from the pen of George Hennessy.

A good look backward may produce a strong step forward.

* * * *

There are more graduates, under Experience as teacher, than from all the institutions of learning combined.

* * * *

The advertisement promised for the next issue does not contribute toward the support of the current number. Performance is an improvement on promise.

* * * *

In Ohio no pictures can be shown after November 4th unless previously approved by the State Board of Moving Picture Censors.

* * * *

It ought to be so in every State in the Union, and the censorship ought to mean something. If Ohio can eliminate the grafting opportunity and invoke the needed protection, a wholesome reform is accomplished.

* * * *

It might be a good idea to show films to teach the proper manner of running automobiles. Every Monday morning newspaper contains accounts of Sunday's sacrifice of human lives by the automobile route.

* * * *

M. A. Neff, president of the Moving Picture Exhibitors' League, landed his man on the Ohio Censorship Board. The man who does things is the man who counts. We congratulate the State, its Governor and Mr. Neff.

* * * *

Films for farmers are the latest innovation. This class of pictures promises to become most important. If moving pictures can be put out by the Agricultural Department showing the many fields of endeavor in soil tilling it will be a great achievement. The Granges, Farmers' Institutes, Chautauquas, etc., would warmly welcome such moving pictures. Let them come soon!

We congratulate such of our contemporaries as, in common with us, had the self-respect, not to say ordinary decency, to refuse to accept advertising for the nauseous Thaw pictures of an escape and a recapture. This thing has reached the point where the contemptibly vulgar encroaches upon the positively indecent, and it should be expunged from further public proclamation in print or picture.

An esteemed trade publication not long ago gave much space to an article which predicted, with many a verbal chuckle, that war was again threatening the moving picture interests. It seemed a good joke to the particular writer referred to. What Sherman said about war is as applicable to Cinematography as elsewhere. There have been too many wars and rumors of wars in moving picture land. Let us have peace.

A reader writes the Editor wanting to know if the classics help the moving pictures. Do the classics help us? The answer lies in one little word, art. The classics, according to Henry D. Sedgwick, more than any modern literature, teach us art, and art is the conscious purpose of man to make this world more beautiful. Philip Sidney says that the object of poetry is to make this too-much-loved world more lovely; we would extend his definition a little further and say that the object of art is to make this world more lovely, more enjoyable and more loved. Classics not only help the moving pictures, they give refinement, send out an appeal to those not partial to "blood and thunder"; in fact, furnish the art without which Cinematography would soon be but a memory.

The revival of the Gilbert and Sullivan operettas, so long promised, seems slow in coming. It is to be regretted that these operettas ever disappeared, for they were universally enjoyed. They were made of tuneful music and innocent drama, and were a delight to all. In this, the heyday of the multiple-reel picture when everything in stageland is undergoing a course of "revival," why is it that the Gilbert and Sullivan operettas are so strangely overlooked? The plots, alone, are worth filming, even if the music were not. The younger generation to whom "The Mascot," "Pinafore," "Pirates of Penzance," etc., etc., are unfamiliar would take to a film revival of the Gilbert and Sullivan comic operas like a duck to water. And what fond memories the filming of these operettas would awaken in the minds of the older folks!

MARIAN SWAYNE

Marian Swayne, whose portrait appears elsewhere, is the daughter of an Alaskan millionaire. She is said to be in the moving pictures "just for fun," but the excellence of her acting proves that her father's wealth has never affected her ambition to succeed in her chosen career.

Miss Swayne has had some experience on the speaking stage, but much prefers to act for moving pictures, as that kind of acting affords her greater personal and artistic satisfaction. The Solax films are the only moving pictures in which she has appeared. She recently acted the part of Miss Harrington in "A Fight for Millions," one of the Blaché American Features that is about to be released from the Solax studio.

REVIEW OF NEW FEATURES

"In the Days of Robin Hood," "The Mystery of the Yellow Room," and "A Fight for Millions"

THE notable features of the past week exhibited for the benefit of the press and others include a romantic drama, a dramatized detective story, and a thrilling melodrama replete with exciting incidents.

Let us first consider the romantic drama, "In the Days of Robin Hood." This is a screen version of the legendary order which is about to be released by the American Kinemacolor Company. The films were taken in England, and the scenic effects actually bear the atmosphere of Nottingham and its vicinity, not omitting views of Sherwood Forest, where the noted outlaw held sway according to legendary chronology at some remote period—presumably between the twelfth and fourtenth centuries.

The ballads which have come down to us about Robin Hood and his band of outlaws number about forty. The oldest are the best, as many of the later ones are rough, doggerel rhymes devoid of spirit or imagination. Robin Hood is, of course, the predominating figure in these ballads. There are also numerous plays and tales about him and his band of outlaws who ranged through the forest of Sherwood in Nottingham and the southern region of Yorkshire.

Robin, according to all accounts, was an excellent archer and skilful with the quarterstaff. It is said to have been characteristic of him to plunder the rich only and give his surplus to the poor, which has made him a popular hero in the folklore of England.

The general conception of Robin Hood and his merry men is well set forth in "Ivanhoe," where Scott gives a fascinating description of their jovial life in the greenwood. To what extent Robin Hood was an actual historical character has been much debated. According to one view he was a twelfth century nobleman of Anglo-Norman ancestry. Others maintain that he was Robert, Earl of Huntington. There is also a theory that he gave his name to a gang of desperadoes known as Robertmen, who roamed about England in the fourteenth century.

The Robin Hood plays acted at one time all over England were associated with the Maypole ceremonies and the Whitsuntide festivities. In the ancient May games Robin Hood personifies the Spirit of Spring, and Maid Marian appears to be the allegorical Queen of the May.

In the various plays, ballads and tales it is duly set forth that Robin Hood had fled to the freedom of the forest, where with cool daring and thrilling effrontery he laughed to scorn the harsh forest laws of the King, and waged war upon rich lords and proud prelates who, in his opinion, were the enemies of humble folk. There is no question as to his proclivities for robbery, but he is also accredited with the redeeming features of gentleness and generosity. Moreover, he was always good-humored and genial, and his courteous dignity is said to have lifted him above the rough manners of his time. Then, too, he treated women with marked gallantry, and would not harm them under any circumstances.

Thus in the popular mind he is considered as gallant and generous a hero as any to be found in English literature, and, while delight in the greenwood and love of wild things continue to grow in the hearts of young and old, Robin Hood and his outlaws will always be welcome.

Many of the character types associated with the famous outlaw are also endowed with enduring charm. Among these we might cite a fat clerical rogue—the Lord Bishop of Hereford. Nor can we omit to mention a fellow with a sour temper and a grim look—the worshipful Sheriff of Nottingham. Then there is a great tall, daring fellow that roamed the greenwood and sat beside the Sheriff at merry feasts—the great crusader, Richard of the Lion's Heart. Besides we have Little John, Friar Tuck, Will Scarlett, Maid Marian, and hosts of knights, priests, burghers, yeomen, pages, ladies, lasses, beggars and what not—all living the merriest of merry lives where flowers bloom and birds are always singing, where every fellow has a merry catch, and where ale and wine flow like water in a brook.

The Kinemacolor will take you into this fanciful land of the forest with various episodes, extracted from an old ballad and other sources, and presented as a pictureplay that reproduces, so far as possible, the mediæval atmosphere with romantic effect.

In the opening secene Will Scarlett asks the Sheriff of Nottingham for the hand of his daughter in marriage, whereupon the Sheriff almost has an apoplectic fit, so enraged is he at the audacity of the young man in daring to aspire to be his son-in-law, and forthwith orders him banished from the county.

What more natural, therefore, than for this gorgeously-clad youth to place the unsmooth course of his love affair before Robin Hood?

> And when he came bold Robin before,
> Robin asked him courteously,
> "Oh, hast thou any money to spare
> For my merry men and me?"
> "I have no money," the young man said,
> "But five shillings and a ring;
> And that I have kept this seven long years,
> To have it at my wedding.
> "Yesterday I should have married a maid,
> But she soon from me was ta'en,
> And chosen to be an old knight's delight,
> Whereby my poor heart is slain."

To drop poetry (so-called) for prose (for the nonce) we find, from a continued view of the screen pictures, that the Sheriff promises the heart of his daughter, much against her inclination, to Sir Tristram Goldsborough for 20,000 pieces of gold. The young lady gives Sir Tristram precious little encouragement, but he proves very persistent, and moreover has the sinews of war to clinch his amatory case with the mercenary Sheriff.

Will Scarlett, meanwhile, becomes a member of Robin Hood's band. A number of picturesque scenes in Sherwood Forest are introduced, and the memorable contest between Robin Hood and Little John is duly enacted.

Then Will Scarlett sets out with Little John to abduct his lady love. On arriving in Nottingham an arrow is shot into the room of the young lady. Attached to the arrow is this message: "Send thou for the pilgrim at the gate, who will give thee more than religious condolence." The young lady prevails upon the nurse to admit the passing pilgrim, who when they are alone reveals himself, as she surmised, as her faithful lover.

The attendant, however, having spied upon the couple, warns the Sheriff, and trouble ensues. Will Scarlett is overpowered, thrown into a dungeon, and sentenced to be hanged the next day. By a ruse a delay in the proceedings is effected to give Robin Hood time to rescue the condemned youth.

After the rescue Robin Hood and his followers hasten to the church, where Sir Tristram and his prospective bride are about to be united in holy wedlock. Robin pulls off the Bishop's robes and chases Sir Tristram from the altar. Will Scarlett takes his place as the bridegroom, and Friar Tuck performs the marriage ceremony. Thus are the happy lovers united, while the Sheriff and his men are kept back at the arrow's point.

> And thus having end of this merry wedding,
> The bride looked like a queen;
> And so they return'd to the merry greenwood,
> Amongst the leaves of green.

"The Mystery of the Yellow Room" is a Union Feature to be released on September 17th. The story is by Gaston Leroux, the well-known French author of mystery stories, who is much in vogue at the present time.

The pictureplay derived from this source abounds in dramatic situations, and this new feature, therefore, is bound to appeal to all those who enjoy the unravelling of detective plots, especially when worked out with the cleverness of a Gaston Leroux.

The incidents of the plot dramatized for screen purposes follow the story in all but unessential details. In the course of the screen version we learn that when Professor Stangerson asks Mathilda, his charming daughter, to accept Robert Darzac she is stunned for a few moments. Her mind flashes back to ten years previously when, on a visit to England, she had secretly married Jean Roussel against her father's wishes. Before their wedding certificate could be filed Roussel had been apprehended and arrested for passing counterfeit money, and Mathilda had returned to her quiet home near Paris with no one the wiser but herself.

Mathilda puts the horror of the secret marriage out of her mind and, thinking Roussel must surely be dead, consents to the announcement of her betrothal to Darzac. Roussel, again located in Paris, sees the engagement announced and becomes obsessed with the idea that he must see her to stop the wedding. He contrives to have a note placed in her hand, begging her to write and say she will go to America with him. In the note he pretends that he still loves her. Mathilda dares not answer the note, and in a fury of jealousy Roussel determines to force an interview. So, taking the precaution of disguising his footprints, he enters and hides in the yellow room, occupied by Mathilda.

The professor, his daughter and Darzac return from a long walk, somewhat tired. Mathilda goes to her room. As the door closes Roussel springs forward to enjoin silence. Mathilda becomes hysterical, and to stop her screams he chokes her, finally leaving the girl for dead.

That evening Mathilda rejoins her father, very pale, with lace wound about her throat to hide the bruises caused by the brutal hands of Roussel. She is still trembling with excitement and is urged to retire early. Later, as her father is about to retire also, the report of a revolver and unearthly screams are heard in her room. When the oaken door yields to an axe they find Mathilda on the floor, terribly bruised and unconscious. But there is no sign of her assailant, and every window and door is bolted from the inside.

Rouletabille, a noted journalist and amateur detective, and Inspector Larson receive orders to solve the mystery. They are given adjoining rooms in the Stangerson Castle, so that they may aid each other. Rouletabille is provoked at Larson's insisting on the palpably false footsteps as an important clue. Continuing his investigation, Rouletabille finds a hair, of peculiar brown shade, under the bed, and a bloody handkerchief.

Mathilda, frightened by a second note from Roussel, vacates the yellow room for another apartment. Rouletabille, hearing someone in that room at midnight, stations Larson and the professor at either end of the gallery, but no one is found. The journalist concludes that the bearded man he caught a glimpse of must be in the house, and notices, with surprise, that Larson's hair is just like that which he has found.

Still another mysterious note, asking for a final rendezvous, reaches Mathilda. Fearing Rouletabille's surveillance, Larson—who is none other than Roussel—invites him to supper in his room. Rouletabille is secretly comparing the hair he had found in the yellow room with that on the inspector's head when he catches a glimpse of a gaping wound in Larson's right palm. Then he suddenly loses consciousness, for Larson had drugged his wine.

SCENE FROM "THE MYSTERY OF THE YELLOW ROOM"

Shortly before midnight the journalist's assistant discovers and arouses Rouletabille in time to prevent Larson from revisiting the girl; thereupon the marriage document is forced from Larson. After deliberately giving Larson an opportunity to escape, Rouletabille gives Mathilda the unrecorded marriage document, the destruction of which means that she is free to marry Darzac.

"But what about the mystery of the yellow room?" asked the journalist's assistant, after the hue and cry for Larson has quieted down.

"Ah," answers the journalist, "very simple; very simple, indeed! When Roussel choked her that afternoon she must have stabbed him in the hand. Then, dreaming of the horrible incident in a nightmare, she doubtless discharged the revolver in self-defense, alarming the household, and the terrible gash in her head came as she struck the marble-topped table in falling."

"Marvelous!" is the comment of the assistant. This explanation, as given in the novel, is of course enacted in the pictureplay, with only a brief sub-title to make matters clear to the spectators.

Thus is the mystery of the yellow room solved to the satisfaction of all concerned, and Mathilda's first unfortunate marriage remains a secret.

The Blaché American Features, Inc., gave a press view this week of "A Fight for Millions," a four-reel sensational drama presenting in pictorial form the adventures of a gentleman burglar of the Raffles type. The production was staged under the expert direction of Herbert Blaché at the Solax studio.

The scenes live up to the published announcement, as they are, indeed, short and snappy, and there's a climax and a punch in every reel. While the play is not of striking originality, it answers its purpose of sustaining an absorbing interest in the sensational episodes that follow each other with startling rapidity. The main action takes place in the suburbs of New York, and a dock scene is reproduced with commendable realism in the most exciting climax of the production.

The cast is made up of exceptionally competent performers. Barney Gilmore is seen to special advantage as the detective, Delaney. Darwin Karr enacts the part of the heroic lover with histrionic cleverness, and Joseph Levering makes the most of the role of Sorenti, the master mind of the Raffles type. Effective characterizations are also offered by George Paxton as Mr. Harrington, the millionaire banker; James O'Neil as the Chief of Police and James Johnston as the butler. Marian Swain looks and acts the role of Miss Harrington with characteristic charm and histrionic efficiency, and Vinnie Burns does equally well in the part of Miss Harrington's friend.

The plot presents a battle of wits between Detective Delaney and Sorenti. Sorenti is calculating, ingenious and crafty, and through his acquaintance with Miss Harrington, the millionaire's daughter, gains access to a desk where valuable property has been foolishly locked up. Sorenti and his confederates have a well-trained organization and an original equipment. The band, it seems, uses a double house, one side of which is furnished elaborately as a luxurious household establishment, while the other side is fully equipped with the paraphernalia of an organized criminal establishment. The thick party walls that divide the two houses are provided with secret passages known only to the gang leader.

The banker, Harrington, disappears most mysteriously. After the Harrington household has been robbed suspicion is fastened by Sorenti on Miss Harrington's lover. He is set upon by the gang, and gives them a great fight, but is finally overcome. Mr. Harrington's watch and other valuables are placed in his pocket after he is left almost dead. Then the police arrest him and he is thrown into a cell.

At the instigation of Miss Harrington the famous detective, Delaney, is engaged to fasten the kidnapping and the subsequent theft on the real culprit. Delaney pretends to fall into a trap that Sorenti has set for him. The "master mind," after notifying his gang, engages in a game of cards with Delaney, and the detective pretends to have fallen a victim to drugged wine. This gives Delaney the opportunity to be locked up in the gang's quarters, which gives him the necessary clue.

By an ingenious advertisement inserted in the papers Sorenti and his gang are induced to return to the Harrington household for more plunder. There they are surprised by the police. Most of them, however, make a quick exit, and put for the river front. A sensational round-up of the gang is made with the use of "Defiance," which is said to be one of the speediest motorboats in the country.

Again the pictorial presentment lives up to the announcement that the race to capture the gang "is thrilling and sensational, and ends with the spectacular explosion of the engine in which the gang tries to escape." Of course, Miss Harrington is delighted at the release of her father and lover and all ends happily, as it usually does in sensational melodrama.

"A Fight for Millions" is an unquestionable thriller, and if you like that sort of thing—why, that's just the sort of thing you like. You should worry. ALBERT ELLERY BERGH.

SORENTI AND HIS GANG

The New York Motion Picture Corporation has announced that the new brand of Naval and Puritan productions will be known as Domino Films. These pictures were first advertised as Empire, and then later changed to Peerless, but owing to copyright laws, they will be called Domino.

He Didn't Want the Part

"Smiling" Billy Mason, of the Essanay Film Manufacturing Co., who gets brainstorms ever so often, has hit upon a novel and eccentric idea for a plot to be used in a photoplay. And here it is, listen—but first let's tell you how he submitted it:

Scenario Editor: "Gee, here's five thousand scenarios and nothing to do till tomorrow."

Mason enters excitedly, rushes up to editor and says: "Listen, I've got a swell idea for a picture. Let me tell you about it."

Editor: "All right, be quick and brief."

Mason: "How would it be to have a young fellow from the country get a position in the city as window washer, washing windows of an office on the eighteenth floor. The rope around his belt snaps and he falls one story, the hook catching on a steel projection which the ironworkers have just put into the brick wall, same to be used for fire escape which is about to be constructed. The man dangles in the air, hanging by the belt around his waist, crying frantically for help. A passerby sees the dangerous predicament of the window washer, rushes into the building, takes the elevator and goes to the roof. Of course, the building is to be situated near the lake and——"

Editor: "Well, go on, tell us something new now."

Mason: "Well, this fellow gets to the top of the building, sees a huge umbrella, such as they use on wagons during the Summer, grabs this and jumps from the top of the building, passes the window washer in mid-air, cuts the rope, grabs the fellow by the coat and takes him safely to the street, where the howling mob proclaims him a hero."

Editor: "That sounds pretty good, Mason. You are elected right here and now to play the role of window washer."

Mason: "Say, I'm only tellin' you this. I don't want to be appointed to nothin'. Besides, I'm going to be married next Monday, and I just took out a $10,000 life insurance policy today. Do you think I want Alice to be a merry widow? I guess not."—Cleveland Plaindealer.

The Royal Box

Chris Lane, head of the scenario department at the Selig plant, has just completed a pictorialization of "The Royal Box," a play from the pen of the late Charles Coghlan, in which that distinguished actor appeared several years prior to his death. Mr. Lane has devised over a hundred scenes for this work, and the leading part will be taken by Gertrude Coghlan, the daughter of the dramatist.

STUDIO GOSSIP

Carlyle Blackwell, formerly with Kalem Co., is to appear in "Flying A" subjects as leading man. Mr. Blackwell is already very popular and needs no introduction. His new environment will emphasize his inherent ability as an actor and his numerous friends look forward to his first appearance in "Flying A" subjects with great interest.

Mr. S. S. Hutchinson, president of the American Film Mfg. Co., has purchased for the company a plot of land which practically doubles its holdings in Santa Barbara, Cal. There will be erected an outdoor studio and a large corral will be provided. There is now ample room for at least four stage settings at the same time.

Miss Vivian Rich, playing leads for the American, is a native of no country. Captain Rich, her father, was owner of a trading ship and frequently took his wife and family with him. Miss Rich was born at sea, and under the Southern Cross, far from the protecting Stars and Stripes. However, as her parents are American born, Miss Rich claims the United States as her native land.

The new studios and laboratories of the American Film Mfg. Co. at Santa Barbara being completed, the work of paving the streets is under way. Quartz secured from the mountains is used for the foundation over which will be laid a thick coating of paving cement. The quartz assays several dollars to the ton, according to tests made by a local assayer. Thus the American's "City Beautiful" will be paved with streets of gold.

Gabriel Pollock, the scenic director, of the big Selig plant in Chicago, who is never at a loss to provide the most difficult and elaborate scenic surroundings for photoplays, has arranged a series of most striking scenes of the infernal regions, equalling those that sprang from the fantastic imagination of Gustav Dore. These remarkable scenes and interesting accessories will be utilized in a big Selig sensation.

Miss Margaret Prussing, who, several years ago, amazed the smart set, disdaining teas and toasts for the study of the stage, after several seasons' experience, early last summer became associated with the Selig Polyscope Company. Although she retained her fashionable residence at the Virginia Hotel, she was always up at the Selig Studio, on Western avenue, Middle West time, 8:30 a. m., ready for orders from Director Oscar Eagle.

Is the number 13 unlucky? Ask Allen Curtis of the Universal, director of comedies, and he will tell you "no." On Saturday while en route to Gardenia, he and his company occupied two auto loads numbering 13 and the leading auto plunged over a 13-foot embankment to avoid a collision with a traction car. No one was injured and the car was virtually undamaged, but there were 13 hearts in 13 mouths and the number on the conductor's cap was 1313.

"In appreciation of the work done by the employees under my management," is the way Isidore Bernstein, the general manager of the Universal Western Studios headed his statement that a holiday, with full pay, would be allotted to everyone connected with the studios on Labor Day. It was appreciated too. Good business.

Report comes from the Famous Players Film Co. that Mary Pickford, whose work for the Famous Players was recently interrupted by a serious attack of appendicitis, is convalescing rapidly. Miss Pickford was operated upon Thursday, September 4th, at the Polyclinic Hospital, and since then has shown remarkable improvement. It is expected that she will be about in two weeks.

Henry McRae, of the Universal, is putting on another big animal picture which features tigers and alligators as well as some intricate British Army maneuvers, including the formation of a "square." It is an intensely exciting story. William Clifford, Phyllis Gordon, Sherman Bainbridge, Val Paul, Clarence Burton and Captain Dalton all have good parts.

Frank Ormston, the "Boss of Construction" at the Universal, has a new car, a Ford. As he was about to drive it away he had to withstand the usual fire of chaff from the interested actors and actresses and to listen to Max Asher's dissertation on its merits. "That," explains Asher, "is der little handle which stardts der vun horse powder wot runs der chimenery, etc." By the way Director Henry McRae has a splendid new seven-passenger Chalmers car.

The Indians and cowboys of the New York Motion Picture Corporation Kay-Bee outfit proved real heroes last week in the Topanzo Canyon of the Santa Monica Mountains. Two hundred of them by fast and furious work got under control and extinguished a burning brush fire covering sixteen square miles. The fire approached to within three miles of the camp of the Kay-Bee outfit. Several Indians were badly scorched about the face and hands but none were seriously injured. A holiday was given all hands by Thomas H. Ince, and a fish dinner enjoyed at the Kay-Bee camp in Santa Ynez Canyon.

It is generally believed that motion picture directors, when casting plays, favor relatives and friends, and this is sometimes the case, but there are exceptions.

Jack Adolfi, one of the New Majestic's producers, is a conscientious and energetic director, and has done much towards bringing the Majestic plays up to their present high standard. I private life he is a very devoted husband, but all who know his pretty little wife agree that he doesn't deserve very much credit.

Mrs. Adolfi, whose stage name is Florence Crawford, has played many prominent parts in Majestic plays with distinct success, and whenever Manager Lucius Henderson and Director Hale need a clever little actress for an important role, why, they cast Florence Crawford.

But Mrs. Adolfi has a grievance.

"I always get my good parts with Mr. Henderson or Mr. Hale," she complains. "Jack never gives me a chance, just because he is my husband."

Such is the penalty for being Director Adolfi's wife!

It is not generally known that little Helen Badgley, the "Thanhouser Kidlet," would have been a passenger on the Bar Harbor Express that was wrecked by the New York, New Haven & Hartford Railroad last week, with a great loss of life, if the baby in charge of Mr. and Mrs. Frank Zimmerman, of the Thanhouser studio, had paid a visit to friends in Portland, Me., from Saturday to Monday. They intended leaving Portland by rail Monday night on the fatal train, but Mr. Zimmerman reached the ticket window too late to secure accommodations, and even the winning smile of the "Kidlet" didn't move the man at the window. Every berth had been booked by the crowd returning to New York from the Labor Day holiday. So the "Kidlet" and her escorts took the train to Boston and left there on the midnight express for Manhattan. While in Boston Monday evening the baby photoplayer was accorded a reception by Manager Alland and attaches of the Pastime Theatre.

MAURICE COSTELLO

A native of Pittsburgh, Penn., his early stage experiences were gained in stock companies. This stock repertoire experience is the best kind of training for the ambitious actor or actress. So it has been in Mr. Costello's case, for subsequently he filled leads in a number of well-known stock theatrical companies in various parts of the country, including New York City. He was so successful on the speaking stage that his work attracted the attention of the Vitagraph Company, who secured him for their stock company. He now plays leading parts in the Vitagraph "Life Portrayals," and is popular with those with whom he is associated, as well as with those who see his counterfeit presentment on the moving picture screen.

Mr. Costello is still a young man, and as he has a handsome stage presence and is a most finished and experienced actor, he has every reason to look forward to many years of continued success in the picture drama. He accompanied the Vitagraph globe-trotters in their tour of the world. Mr. Costello is one of the Vitagraph directors and produces a great many of the pictures in which he is featured.

MRS. CARTER'S CAMPAIGN

American Release

The question of suffragism has given rise to a number of rather perplexing situations.

In the instance depicted in this picture the franchise to vote appeared to be fraught with no particular danger. And as long as the privilege seemed to satisfy the wild clamoring of the female contingent the price of peace was considered cheap. That popular opinion had miscalculated was soon made evident. The oratorical fireworks display of rival parties was immense, but the women would have lost were it not for a little harmless stunt they pulled and which changed the political map of Cartersville.

There is lots of action in this picture. It appears that the entire population of Santa Barbara participated. The photographic quality is excellent and as a whole the picture will meet with unqualified approval. It is anticipated to follow this production with a sequel, "The Mayoralty Troubles of Mrs. Carter," release date to be announced later.

GERTRUDE McCOY

Gertrude McCoy, whose picture appears on the front cover of this issue, is one of the most valued members of the Edison Company, and has attained her present popularity through hard work and close attention to every detail connected with it. Nature has been most kind to this talented young actress in endowing her with more than ordinary beauty, and this, added to her charming personality, has brought her to a well-deserved place in the foremost ranks of picture favorites.

NEW GREAT NORTHERN FAVORITE

One of the latest acquisitions to the acting staff of the Great Northern players is Betty Nansen, who has won distinction in the dramatic profession during her connection with the stage in many of the European capitals. She has played many roles and was induced to enter the moving picture realm only after its wonderful possibilities were made quite clear to her by the Great Northern directorate. Miss Nansen, as may be judged from the accompanying portrait, is winsome and attractive, and during her connection with the Great Northern Co. she has experienced little difficulty in demonstrating that her stage training has been responsible for making her one of the most talented and popular actresses appearing in moving picture productions.

It is the purpose of the Great Northern Co. to have Miss Nansen appear in a series of multiple reel subjects, for which she is particularly fitted. Miss Nansen comes of an old family of histrions and appeared on the stage at an early age. After many years of experience she decided that tragedy was the field which best suited her, and at present she is regarded as the "Bernhardt of Scandinavia." She has appeared in the royal theatres of Copenhagen, Christiania and Stockholm and in other European capitals, and is sure to make a decided impression before the camera.

The demand for Western subjects of the original "American" type has become so pronounced in many quarters that the company has had a number of scenarios especially written, calling for exceptionally thrilling incidents. The best talent was selected and a number of very promising subjects are already completed. At the offices of the company the following titles were mentioned as being the first to be released: "The Flirt and the Bandit," Sept. 29th; "Badge of Honor," Oct. 2nd; "Taming a Cowboy," Oct. 10th. Other subjects are in hand and will be released from time to time.

For Those Who Worry O'er Plots and Plays

The Newspaper Plot

NECESSARY ingredients for the newspaper plot: One big room cluttered up with typewriters, newspapers scattered over the floor, a lot of proofs hanging on a nail somewhere, one city editor humped over a desk, evidently engaged in drawing pictures, several bright-looking young men smoking pipes. Then, of course, there is the brave girl reporter, the corrupt politicians, etc. Final scene: Girl rushes into city room just before press time. Flings herself on typewriter and commences to beat out a "big one." City editor saunters over to machine, starts after looking at the copy and exclaims: "Boys, here is the big story!" Boys gather around as girl works frantically, and the editor sends sheet after sheet of copy downstairs without even using the blue pencil once. These newspaper plots went over two years ago, but they do so no more. Thev have been rehashed time and time again until now, when one sees a newspaper story on the screen, one knows just what is coming with very few variations. We were among the first to "grab off" the newspaper plot. We wrote a dozen before we stopped, and they sold. From the time, two years ago, when Giles R. Warren sent us a hurry call for a plot "showing a girl breaking up a form of type," until the last variation of the brave g-u-r-l stealing the incriminating papers from the Corrupt Boss's secretary and publishing them to save her father, we have seen these Fourth Estate stories come and go. Cut out the newspaper plot unless you have a good one. Chances are nine to one that you have not. Like every other sort of plot, you must know newspaper life to write about it authoritatively. One reason this form of story has caused such laughter among newspapermen is that the majority of directors and authors were never in a newspaper office and gather their inspiration for such stories from "Frank Merriwell," or some other romantic potboiler. Remember that reporters do not gather around to watch someone write their story, papers are not strewn all over the floors of well-regulated newspaper offices, and the brave girl more often is engaged in taking the names of those who attended Mrs. Jones' reception than stealing papers from political bosses. Romances of newspaper life were once attractive, but they have been done to death in the moving picture world. Try something else. One editor informs us that he received thirteen such plots in one mail. They are all asking for mercy!

Reaching the Limit

According to the editor of the New York Motion Picture Corporation, a man entered his office, demanded an immediate audience, and, this being granted, he produced a script which he declared would make a great broncho feature. The overworked editor scanned it and found that among the minor details it called for the use of the Panama Canal, the New York public library and the United States mint. The man was considerably surprised when the script was returned to him. Too many writers are too ambitious with their scene plots. Animal stories calling for a procession of goats; airships, locomotives, steamships and the Tower of London are all gladsomely called for in a thousand feet of action. Use simple environment. Do not call for expensive or impossible locations in your scripts. Your action will read better devoid of impossible details.

A Line from the Captain

Captain Leslie T. Peacocke, of the Universal script staff, is busily engaged right now in putting on the finishing touches to the comic opera plot he has written for Annette Kellerman, but nevertheless he finds time to contribute something of value to photoplaywrights. We quote from a recent letter: "The helpful advice you give to other writers must prove, I should think, a veritable boon to many. One of the most important points for scenario writers to observe is to make the synopsis as brief as possible—brief and pithy—bringing out the main point of the story strongly, so that the script editor and studio readers can grasp the plot at a glance. As several hundred scripts are received at the principal scenario departments every day, the work of reading them entails time and trouble and a brief, well-explained synopsis always stands a better chance of gaining sympathy from the reader. So many manuscripts are received in an impossible condition that they are condemned before they leave the author's hands. However, nearly all the companies now employ a staff of trained script writers, and the free-lance writer has little chance of selling scripts, except a very original plot is submitted, which is rare, and getting rarer each day. Fully nine-tenths of the plots we receive are rehashed magazine stories or old film releases worked over in slightly different form. However, if authors are given credit on the posters, a lot of this piracy will be stopped and the film-producing companies will feel safer in purchasing stories from free-lance writers than they do at present. I have the honor of writing Miss Florence Lawrence's first production since her return to Universal, on which she is at present working. It is 'The Bride's Key.'"

One attractive qualification possessed by Captain Peacocke is that he does not hesitate to describe the script situation just as he finds it, without fear or favor. When we were virtually fighting along to secure poster credit to authors, along comes the Captain with a short-arm swing in support of our contention, and now the result is that Universal has resolved to be among the first to give credit where credit is due. Then another important statement comes from Captain Peacocke. He steps to the home plate with the assertion that nine-tenths of the scripts received by Universal are rehashed magazine stories or old film releases worked over. The Universal script staff reads hundreds of contributions weekly. That nine-tenths are steals is a condition we term alarming. For years trade-journal department editors have been sounding the note of warning to writers. The minority has been urged to turn from the devious way and to submit strictly original scripts. Because a certain minority persist in rehashing magazine and other stories and trying to market them as original product, many editors have learned to assume an attitude of suspicion and cynicism toward the free-lance. Those who have been and are dishonest in their literary work have and are injuring the opportunities of honest writers who wish to succeed by the aid of their own brains and by hard labor. Edison, some time ago, engaged the services of a reader who does nothing but keep up-to-date in current literature so as to be qualified to detect plagiarism. Unfortunate it is that such a functionary became necessary. It is this sort of thing that keeps the contract and staff writer product to the fore. Editors do not wish to invite damage or infringement suits, and when so many rank steals are sent along every day to the editors none can blame them for feeling chary of free-lance work. We think the free-lance writer a necessity. In the future he must be depended upon to furnish the original stuff, for the hack work of many a contract writer is becoming very monotonous at present. However, in order to create the demand for his work, the free-lance must play the game fairly and honestly and build up a reputation for truthfulness and decency, and not a reputation for "ways that are dark and tricks that are vain."

Editorial Etchings

Ben P. Schulberg, editor of Famous Players, recently refused an offer to live in dear old England and work for another company.

Editor C. B. Hoadley, of the Universal staff, recently completed a story with a great big plot in which Florence Lawrence will star. It is a heart-interest romance of the hills of Tennessee.

George Edwards Hall, well-known script writer, may sail the bounding billows soon and join Director Brenon, of the Universal in England, and write stories for King Baggott.

Richard Goodall is to produce pictures for Eclair, and we predict that if his pictures are as good as his scripts they will be par excellence.

Calder Johnson, editor-in-chief of the Universal script department, has done such good work recently that writers are glad to submit their best stuff to the company. Johnson, Hoadley and Peacocke make a trustworthy team and one in sympathy with the writer.

The Marchioness Townshend is writing scripts for the Clarendon Company of England. Lady Troubridge is also writing them. Next thing we know Lloyd George and the Prince of Wales will be dashing off plots. Hall Caine is doing it and Rud Kipling may be expected to enter the list soon.

The Wrong Advice

A writer asserts that one should stick to a script of certain type, his most successful kind, except upon order or special occasions. We do not think so. Epes W. Sargent, for instance, has specialized in comedy, but is now devoting his talents to two- and three-reel drama. In our own experience we have written comedy, drama and commercial stuff with equal success. We doubt if it would be wise for a photoplaywright to become too completely identified with one kind of work. Versatility is a mighty good qualification, and every accomplished writer should be able to get out of the groove occasionally. Individuality should count for little or nothing in the script-writing game. It's the knack of shifting from your favorite dramas when the market is crying for comedies, and vice versa, that puts shekels into your pockets. Training will do it.

Pertinent Pointers

Be sure your name and complete address is on the first page of every script.

Universal is in the market for work of free-lance writers. This in answer to several inquiries.

Write the kind of story that the studio can produce. Leave specializing for others.

Charles Van Loan has been writing fiction for the Saturday Evening Post and his atmosphere is the moving picture studio. It will pay you to write for the back numbers. (No free advertisement, this.)

Use a black "record" ribbon in preparing your scripts. Avoid purple copying ribbon, which is apt to leave the page mussy.

Do not jump at every advertisement you read and submit your scripts to unknown concerns. There is no manufacturer who will pay you "from $100 to $1,000 for a pictureplay plot." Use good common sense in your marketing.

Two- and three-reel stories are in demand and the demand will rapidly increase. There are not enough two-reel stories to go round. Sometimes an old single-reel story, that has been rejected because it is too lengthy, will prove just the thing for a multiple-reel feature if rejuvenated. Now, this doesn't mean that you should devote yourself strictly to two- or three-reel features. However, if you have the proper stuff you can find the market.

Small casts are preferred by the Universal Film Mfg. Co., Mecca Bldg., New York City. Universal can use society dramas, light and farce comedies.

Do not be alarmed if the Edison Co. holds on to your script. The longer they keep your story the better are your chances for a sale. Three to six weeks are taken for a decision. In fact, do not rush any editor who is considering your work.

Don't forget that you are writing for the whole civilized world, and for that reason don't be narrow-minded in what you write, correctly cautions Arthur Leeds, of the Photoplay Author. And we would add, avoid the morbid themes, which will soon be tabooed by every advanced film manufacturer. Have good taste.

Don't hang around a moving picture theatre and drink in as words of wisdom everything the gentlemanly usher sees fit to divulge. Many an ambitious photoplaywright is given an idea by moving picture theatre attaches that all he has to do is to "just scribble off" something in order to sell the script as a moving picture play. "Hurry up and write a story and we will show it in our theatre" is becoming monotonous. Nine times out of ten you know as much if not more anent plot writing as the illustrated song singer or usher. Go to the theatre to study the screen, but don't tell everyone that that is your object.

The reason we do not publish the advertisements of the "schools" is because the majority of such advertisements are misleading, to put it mildly. We have turned down hundreds of dollars' worth of display "school" advertising the past year because we believe that consistency does not mean the scoring of graft in one column and accepting money for displaying grafting schemes in another column.

A Los Angeles View

A Los Angeles writer sends this one in, and the arguments are worthy of consideration: "The letter from a discouraged playwright published in your department August 9th, struck a sympathetic chord in my heart. His state of mind will surely find its replica in the case of many an amateur photoplaywright, and in that of many apparently more successful than he. By a strong coincidence I happened to possess the very same thoughts at the arrival of the News. But, more strangely still, my resolve, namely, to give up pictureplay writing, was actuated not by rejections but actually by receipt of a check resulting from the sale of a script to one of the most prominent and least accessible studios in the field, Biograph (The Law and the Man). I have been writing for almost two years and have sold quite a number of scenarios, the payments ranging from the munificent sum of $15, to the stupendous award of $35. Discouraged and saddened by the generosity of the various editors, I began writing to suit the needs of a certain manufacturer, whose liberality, I had been told, was in proportion to his inaccessibility. I reached my goal yesterday, after a year's constant effort, adapting my construction to the peculiar style of the director. I finally rounded up a startlingly original story, put together with care as to detail and power of situations, and receiver my reward—a $25 check. 'To sell a script you must beat the best you see on the screen,' is an oft-repeated statement. But should not the writer's compensation be in proportion? Surely $25 is not ample payment, especially since there is practically no opportunity afforded for the gaining of reputation. Several years ago, the phrase 'better times are coming' was the staff of hope for the discouraged 'star writer.' Prices are no higher, if not lower, than then, although the quality demand in pictureplay has gone up fully 500 per cent. Pictureplay writing is now almost as difficult as the construction of 'legitimate drama' and original ideas are certainly more difficult of obtainment in the former field." The arguments of this correspondent are forceful. We have long contended that $25 is not enough remuneration for a single-reel script properly constructed. We incurred the wrath of several when we argued for better prices—however, we are still arguing. It is stated that Universal will start crediting authors on posters and film. This will be something that is due the writer. More is demanded of the writer of today and the prices are not commensurate with that demand. This has long been our opinion. We remain optimistic and of the opinion that better times are coming.

FEATURE FILM NOTES

On September 13th Edward Barry will sail for London on the Olympic, accompanied by his estimable wife. He goes as a special representative of Warner's Features, Inc., and will assist Mr. S. L. Warner, now in charge of the office at 18 Cecil Court, to equip and maintain enlarged quarters in or near "Flicker Alley."

Mr. Barry will handle the American productions in all countries of the world outside of the United States. His experience in the film business dates back eight years; in 1906 he was placed in charge of Midland's branch of the Chas. Urban Trading Co. In 1908, when the Cines Co. opened an office in London, Mr. Barry accepted the position of sales manager, and later he came to America and represented the Cines interests here until Cines films were licensed. He has been sales manager for the Ambrosio-American Co. and the Raw Film Supply Co. here in America, for the past two years, is a charter member of the Screen Club and leaves behind a host of friends who will wish him success abroad.

Madame Blache, president of the Solax Company, and a company of fifty people, together with property men and numerous assistants, and an equipment of three wagon-loads of properties and scenery, have left for Lake Hopatcong, where numerous scenes in the forthcoming Solax feature entitled "Rogues of Paris," will be staged. The transfer of the company and the equipment to this famous lake resort means an expense of more than $2,000. A feature of the work up in the country will be the erection of army pontoon bridges and the use of a castle at the present time owned by the Russell Sage estate. Included in the company are Vinnie Burns, Claire Whittney, Mrs. Truesdale, Joseph Levering, Fraunie Fraunholz, Wallace Scott, James Johnson, James O'Neill, supers, attendants, etc.

General Film Producing Co., Inc., manufacturers of Herald films, have to-day received a telegram from their camera man, Mr. Albert E. Cawood, at Nome, Alaska, stating that he has secured some wonderful pictures of Alaskan glaciers and ice fields, with the co-operation of Governor Strong, of Alaska, and the White Pass and Yukon R. R. Co., who placed a private car at his disposal. Mr. Cawood advises that he is about to go on an extended trip on the U. S. revenue cutter Bear into the Arctic Ocean to secure further pictures of life and scenes in the far North. A copy of these films will be presented to the Smithsonian Institution at Washington, D. C., and the Museum of Natural History. These films are of great educational value and should be in demand.

Just because Mexico and the United States don't get along well together, Itala customers have been held up on a large shipment of features, aggregating 45,000 feet of film which, straying to Vera Cruz in error, was there detained by the Mexican officials. The shipment, by a queer bit of stupidity on the part of some dock employee, instead of being delivered to the customs officers, was packed aboard a coastwise steamer after having been unloaded from the Italian steamship. Michael Moran, of the Judson Freight Forwarding Co., in charge of the shipment, immediately tried to get in touch with the vessel and to have the film transferred to a northbound vessel in some port en route. Unsuccessful in this, he was further "put out" by learning that the Mexican officials, on the arrival of the films, refused to allow them to be returned. This necessitated Moran's going to Washington, where, by the aid of a Congressman, an order to the authorities of Mexico City was sent by the Department of State, which promises the arrival of the errant features soon if not sooner.

The general manager of the Golden State Moving Picture Company has returned to town after a two-months' sojourn in and about Salt Lake City, during which time he succeeded in securing 3,000 additional feet of picture, for insertion into the noted success of "One Hundred Years of Mormonism," which will be launched upon the market in seven reels.

One of the interesting features added to the picture is the pageant celebrating the sixty-sixth anniversary of the Mormon pioneers' entrance to Salt Lake Valley, in which 8,000 Mormon children participated.

During these ceremonies, the moving picture camera was permitted to take a series of exclusive events, by permission of the Mormon Church. This is the only view of the interior of the tabernacle ever taken by a moving picture camera, and it is probably the last.

State rights will not be sold for this attraction, but about twenty companies will tour it in various parts of the country during the coming season.

James J. Corbett, familiarly known to everyone as "Gentleman Jim," is scheduled to make his initial appearance in moving pictures in a Warner's Feature, entitled "The Man from the Golden West." It is a thrilling story of love and adventure, in four parts, and is bound to go big wherever shown.

Although this is Corbett's first appearance before the moving picture camera, he is no stranger to the stage, having toured the States and the English theaters in a number of successful plays.

Corbett's role in this big production calls for quite a bit of daring and bravery. In one scene he saves the gold mine from destruction by seizing a sputtering bomb and hurling it with all his might into a deep ravine, where it explodes with terrific force. In another scene he uses a high-powered automobile to capture the stage-coach bandits.

"The Heart of Kathleen," a three-part production of the New York Motion Picture Corporation, is booked for release in the near future. It is a wonderful story of Old Ireland, replete with stirring effects, sweet love scenes and real atmosphere. A storm at sea is one of the sensational, scenic and photographic marvels of the film, and the impressive effect produced is said to be awe-inspiring in its grandeur and majesty. This three-reel feature was cut down from seven reels, so we can look for a film packed with action.

HOUSE PETERS WITH FAMOUS PLAYERS

Soldier of fortune, traveler, hunter, explorer and actor of renown, House Peters is as interesting a personality as one seldom meets with. His life has been so crowded with adventure, hazard and danger, that he almost assumes the significance of a romantic character in a novel, and his career reads like the chronicled biography of a fiction hero. His recent connection with the Famous Players Film Company now brings him before the moing picture public. It is peculiarly appropriate that Mr. Peters should become a film actor, as he has surpassed in real life most of the daring roles usually alloted to moving picture heroes.

Mr. Peters was born in Clifton, Bristol, England. He served in Africa during the Boer War, played in Australia, and after the war played in Africa with Leonard Rayne. While in Africa he went on an extended exploring expedition into the interior, then returned to Johannesburg and played the American part of Bud Hardy in "The Squawman," appearing in almost all the clothes worn on the expedition. After this engagement, he took a trip on a tramp steamer to Brazil, and from there went all through South America, through Gibraltar to the Mediterranean, crossed from Genoa to Montreal, was caught in the ice for forty-eight hours near Newfoundland, and then came to New York and played Flattery in "Everywoman." Among his other important roles while in America were that of Robert Stafford, the lead, in "Bought and Paid For," the lead with Ruth Chatterton in "Susan's Gentleman," and the heavy in Hartly Manners' "The Honeymoon." Mr. Peters also played Shakespearean roles in Australia. At other periods in his romantic life, Mr. Peters was a draughtsman and a diamond digger.

Unlike the majority of modern hunters, Mr. Peters is the only Englishman with the distinction of having not only never killed a lion single-handed, but who has never even seen a lion in Africa. However, he adds that he knows they were there, because occasionally he heard one.

The first moving picture exhibition Mr. Peters ever saw was while he was in Molteno, Orange River Colony, South Africa, six years ago, playing Louis Perceval in "Jim the Penman." The "show" was held in a dilapidated hall, with a long aisle and seats on both sides, and the machine set up in the centre of the aisle. The next exhibition, which he saw a year later, presented "Romeo and Juliet," described by Mr. Peters as "an amazingly superior exhibition."

Mr. Peters believes the motion picture helps an actor to correct his faults, particularly errors in mannerism and attitude.

A CENTRAL BOOKING AGENCY FOR FEATURES

With headquarters in the Candler Building, with a staff of practical film men, with ideals for honesty and square dealing as a necessary foundation for its business, and with the authority to act as a medium to book several hundred features now on its files, the Exhibitors' Feature Booking Agency looks like a healthy child worthy of serious consideration.

The aims of this organization are probably best understood by quoting its president, Mr. Earl Bryant Barnes, in his own words. Mr. Barnes is a man of more than ordinary intelligence and education, being a graduate of New York University and the Harvard Law School. He is a member of the New York Bar of twelve years' standing, but has for some time almost entirely neglected the practice of law for the moving picture business. He is now spending his time keeping the capable staff of picture men with whom he is surrounded from losing sight of the main idea: correct information for any exhibitor about any feature, and if he wishes to use it in his theatre, booking it for him at the lowest price that it can be obtained.

"We have been working quietly for several weeks," said Mr. Barnes, "merely listing and obtaining correct information about the features now on the market. You know that our aim is: First, to be an information bureau for the exhibitor. In order to fill this life-long want, an immense amount of careful work has been necessary, for we are as apt to be asked about a feature on a regular program as we are a feature booked independently. In that case we can at least tell the exhibitor where the feature can be obtained.

"Second, to be in a position to book a feature for him, saving him the time, trouble and traveling expenses connected with that operation. He is placed in direct touch with the exchange or feature owner with whom we have a booking agreement. We are merely a convenience, and, in fact, from our telephone calls and correspondence, I am almost tempted to say a necessity.

"Here it is in a nutshell: I am an exhibitor. I want a certain feature. Where can I get it? Why, in making up our lists we asked men head-over-heels in the film game about certain features, and they did not know. If that's the case, where does the exhibitor get off? And nine times out of ten he will not bother to try to find he feature he wants. If he calls us up, we make it our business to get him the information, the number of reels, the price asked and its probable drawing power in his particular neighborhood.

"Above all else, our usefulness depends upon our integrity. We must give the exhibitor exactly what he wants, wherever that is possible, without playing any favorites."

Messrs. Feiber and Shea, whose independent vaudeville circuit forms an important connecting link between the East and West, have arranged to present the Kinemacolor pictures as a permanent feature in all their houses. The first installations will be on August 25th at the Bayonne Opera House and the Bijou Theatre, Orange, N. J. By the middle of September Kinemacolor will be showing at the opera house, New Brunswick; the Park Theatre, Youngstown, O.; the Colonial Theatre, Akron, Ohio; the Majestic Theatre, Erie, Pa.; the Mozart, Elmira, N. Y., and the Jefferson Theatre, Auburn, N. Y.

"The Reformation," a single reel Kay-Bee, advertised for release Friday, September 26th, has been moved further down the calendar, and "The Forlorn Hope," another one-reeler, will be released on that date.

MIATT-PATENTS DEPARTMENT

Recent Inventions, Letters Patent, Trade-Marks, Designs, Copyrights, Etc., Relating to the Art, Digested and Reported Exclusively for the Moving Picture News by Geo. Wm. Miatt, Patent Lawyer and Expert, Temple Court, cor. of Nassau and Beekman Streets, New York City

According to the annual report of ex-Commissioner of Patents Moore, just published for the year ending December 31st, 1912, there were received last year 68,968 applications for mechanical patents, 1,850 applications for design patents, 158 applications for reissues of patents, 7,215 applications for registration of trade-marks, 885 applications for registration of labels, and 309 applications for registration of prints. There were 37,573 patents issued, including designs, 158 patents reissued, and 5,020 trade-marks, 633 labels, and 243 prints registered. The number of patents that expired was 20,883. The number of allowed applications awaiting the payment of final fees was 13,303, and the number forfeited for nonpayment of final fees, 7,494. The total receipts were $2,118,158.30, the expenditures, $2,022,066.11 and the surplus of receipts over expenditures, $96,092.19. The total balance to the credit of the Patent Office in the Treasury of the United States on December 31, 1912, was $7,160,017.95.

In proportion to population more patents were issued to citizens of Connecticut than those of any other state—one to every 1,150. Next in order are the following: District of Columbia, 1 to evey 1,229; California, 1 to every 1,434; New Jersey, 1 to every 1,508; Massachusetts, 1 to every 1,509; Illinois, 1 to every 1,639; Colorado, 1 to every 1,711; New York, 1 to every 1,786. As to foreign patents, 1,558 were granted to citizens of Germany; 952 to those of England; 579 to those of Canada; 369 to those of France; 160 to those of Austria-Hungary; 125 to those of Switzerland; 102 to those of Sweden; 75 to those of Scotland; 66 to those of Italy; 47 to those of Russia; 46 to those of Belguim; 44 to those of Victoria; 40 to those of New Zealand; 39 to those of New South Wales; 36 to those of Mexico; 34 to those of Denmark; 25 to those of Transvaal; 23 to those of Norway; 21 to those of Netherlands; 15 to those of Cuba; 15 each to those of Ireland and Japan, etc.

Patent No. 1,070,400 relates to a photographing apparatus designed to be used to take pictures upon postal cards and similar articles, and it comprises a magazine wherein a large number of cards to be photographed can be placed, and suitable mechanism for moving said cards suitably sensitized, into and out of position with respect to the lens of the apparatus by means of which the image to be reproduced is focused thereon. The accompanying figures represent a longitudinal section of the novel portion of the device, and a perspective view of the slide. A spherical casing 1, is made in three sections. The sections 2 and 3 are hinged together at 7, and held together by means of a fastener 8; while the sections 3 and 4 are riveted together at 5. Section 4 is centrally perforated to receive lens carriage 6, by which light is emitted. This casing is supported in a band 9 having a lateral extension 10 adjacent the bottom thereof. The section 3 has an aperture 11 which communicates with a similar aperture 12 in ring 9; and to this ring is secured a conduit 13, which leads down into a developing tank 14. Supported inside the casing 1 by a web 15 is a magazine 16 having a lid 17. Inside of this magazine is a sliding head 19, engaged by a spring 18 abutting against the head 19 at one end and inside of the cover 17 at the other. 20 represents a number of postal cards suitably sensitized, and when the cover 17 is secured to the magazine 16, the spring 18 will tend to force the postal cards out through the other end of the magazine which is open but engages a sliding member 21, which has an enlarged opening cut through the same, as shown at 22. This member 21 is in the form of a flat plate having a thickened section 23 at the top, forming a shoulder; 24 is an arm connected to the plate 21 adjacent its upper edge to enable the sliding member 21 to be operated. The member 21 slides in guides 25 across the front end of the magazine and it is reciprocated to effect this sliding movement by a link 26 pivotally connected to the arm 24 at one end and to a crank pin projecting from the face of a gear wheel. This gear wheel is mounted on a spindle carried in bearings supported by the magazine and is actuated by a pinion mounted upon shaft 30, carried in bearings 31; and the shaft 30 also carries a pair of friction wheels. At the opposite end of the shaft 30 is a gear wheel 33, which meshes with a pinion 34 on a shaft 35. This shaft 35 is mounted in bearings 36 carried upon one end of the magazine 16 and the section 3, and terminates at its opposite end in a crank or operating handle.

Ex-Commissioner Moore, before retiring from office, rendered another decision confirming the rule that a surname under ordinary conditions is not registerable as a trade-mark—"Maxim" in the present case being the mark (?) in controversy. He says, "The word 'Maxim' would, in my opinion, be regarded as the name of an individual by the majority of persons seeing this word used as a trade-mark, especially in view of the fact that an individual of this name has gained considerable fame of recent years, his inventions being the subject of popular comment in the daily press. The very fact that as a trade-mark the word has, at least to a large extent, an adjective significance naturally leads the mind to think of the individual of this name rather than any other meaning of the word."

Registration No. 93,296 has been granted the Ryno Film Company, Inc., of New York, N. Y., for the trade-mark herewith represented for use in connection with motion picture films and projecting apparatus therefor, used since April 1st, 1913.

The accompanying illustration represents a top view, partly in section, of a projecting apparatus embodying the invention of Saul Schulhoff, of Philadelphia, Pa., as set forth in his Letters Patent No. 1,070,992, the novelty consisting first, of an apparatus arranged so that a beam of light is presented directly at the exposed area of the objects of an opaque band in passage through a lens-house, the illumined images of which objects are projected by means of the direct reflected rays of said beam of light through the lens of said house directly onto a distant surface or screen; and second, of an adjustable apparatus arranged so that a beam of light is thrown upon the entire area of objects in sequence arrangement of an opaque band arranged to travel through a guide of the lens-house; the said opaque band having the said objects thereon in positive sequence arranged relationship, and so that the images are projected by direct reflection of said rays of light through said lens, onto a distant surface or screen. It will be observed that the beam of light thrown by the lamp 4 is directly against the objects on the guide b, and that such is reflected therefrom through the lens 5a, directly onto the distant screen 8, without the use of internal mirrors or the like in the house 5, thus simplifying the arrangement for deriving effective work therefrom. Claim is made to the combination of a lens-house having a vertical guide for a sequence printed opaque band adapted to be impelled through said guide, an adjustable lens-support located outside of said house and extending at an angle into the side of said house, a light emitting body arranged in rear thereof, said lens adapted to concentrate the beam of light to be thrown directly onto the vertically moving opaque band so that the images thereof are directly reflected through the front lens-opening of said house onto a distant screen, a perforated shutter arranged in advance of the lens-opening of said lens-house and means connected with said house to feed step by step and to control thereby the travel of said opaque band and to simultaneously therewith cause rotary movement of said shutter.

"The Perspectograph" is the invention of the Austrian engineer Scheimpflug by which wonderful results in "aero-photography" are attained, which are attracting much attention in Europe. It is comparatively easy to photograph the ground from a balloon or airship, but in order to cover a wide range of country the lens would need to have a very wide angle; and as is well known in photography, such lenses have a small opening and thus do not admit the light that is needed for this work. The problem is solved in a most ingenious manner by the inventor, who uses a number of separate cameras pointed all around the ground so as to give, for instance, eight separate views. But as the photographs are all on the usual square plates it is impossible to match them for the map, and besides all but one of the views are taken obliquely to the ground—only the central view is a straight down view and the rest are undesirable for a map. By the use of his "perspectograph" the inventor takes each distorted plate and makes from it a correct plate, such as would be given by a straight down view, and this enables all the plates to be matched into a single large map.

CHICAGO MAN ARRESTED BY UNITED STATES MARSHAL CHARGED WITH UNLAWFULLY COPYING PHOTOGRAPH OF GEORGE KLEINE'S "QUO VADIS"

The first important move to protect the copyright privileges of photo drama and moving pictures was made in Chicago, when James E. Northmore, of Chicago, was, on Monday morning, arrested by the United States Marshal on a warrant issued by United States Commissioner Mark A. Foote, charged with unlawfully copying copyrighted photographs of George Kleine's "Quo Vadis" and selling them in the open market. Northmore was not ready for trial and the case was set over for one week for a hearing. In the meantime he was held in custody pending the giving of bail. These photographs have been used by various motion picture theatres to exploit a film called "Quo Vadis" which bears no resemblance to the original. The genuine "Quo Vadis" was made by the Cines Company, Rome, Italy, exclusive American rights for which are held by George Kleine. This is the film that has made such a sensation throughout the country. The public has in many cases been deceived into attending performances of the spurious "Quo Vadis" believing it to be the original, and the audiences that have attended these performances, possibly not being familiar with the original "Quo Vadis," have formed an opinion that damages the reputation of the genuine. It is Mr. Kleine's intention to prosecute to the full extent of the law, all infringements of this copyrighted film and photographs.

Coroner Hoffman, of Chicago, proposes to teach "Safety First" in the public schools by means of a series of moving pictures. With this end in view he has conferred with the Board of Education, who evinced the greatest interest in his plan and accepted it at once, as eminently practicable. One of the first features advanced was the proposition of the Chicago Railways Company to furnish moving picture films of all sorts of street scenes, to be shown for an hour a week in every school in Chicago, they proposing to furnish the films, the projecting machine, the operator and the lecturer. The coroner, in speaking to this topic, declared that the films furnished by the street-car people would not be made up of simply street-car accidents, but of the general movement along the line of the streets indicating dangers and how to avoid them. In addition to the films from the street-car company he expects to get the co-operation of the automobile clubs, the Chicago Association of Commerce, the City Council and various civic organizations. This reform movement is a distinct tribute to the value of moving pictures as an instructive medium.

THE TRUE SOLUTION OF THE JACK LONDON SITUATION

A telegram was received by Ernest Shipman from Hobarth Bosworth relating to the Jack London stories, reading as follows:

Los Angeles, Cal., Aug. 31, 1913.

Ernest Shipman,
New York City.

If any buyer or agent doubts the validity of my contract, let him wire Jack London, Glen Ellen, Cal., for confirmation over Jack London's own signature. "Sea Wolf" nearly done and ready by October 1st. Expect to auction for state rights.

HOBART BOSWORTH.

In acting in consort with the above wire, Warner's Features telegraphed Jack London for confirmation, receiving the following reply:

Glen Ellen, Cal., Sept. 3, 1913.

Warner's Features, Inc.,
New York City.

Bosworth, Inc., has all moving picture rights on my writings. When you receive Horkheimer copy of contract, please note date appears first four films must be completed on stipulated date. Not even the first film was completed. Horkheimer has legally thrown, tied and branded himself.

THE TOILS OF DECEPTION (Sept. 16).—Tom Buckley is inclined to give his vain and pretty wife everything that she desires, but stocks are down and he is worried. His wife observes a necklace of peculiar design that was recently given to a friend and covets it mightily. Her husband, who has the ticker-tape about his neck, complains that present pressure is too great to admit of further family burdens in the form of a necklace. The young wife notices in the window of a jewelry shop (where they have an account) a necklace, the exact counterpart of the one she admires so ardently. She goes in, takes the necklace home on approval, thinking that merely viewing the bauble at home will satisfy her longings, and she can return it before the bill reaches her husband. The jeweler is not acquainted with her entire design, but readily assents and gives up the necklace. She has other jewels at home, notably a baby, and through one of those curious chances the childish fingers clutch the necklace, and it is carried away in the folds of its garment. The mother goes to look for the necklace, with the view of returning it to the jeweler's. She finds to her dismay that it has disappeared. She gives herself over to frantic search and then unavailing tears. At this juncture her friend comes in wearing the counterpart of the necklace, which arouses her tears more fiercely than ever. The sympathetic friend finally learns her secret, insists upon loaning her necklace to replace the one she has lost, until it can be found, or her husband mollified. After considerable hesitancy she accepts the loan, and returns the necklace to the jeweler. The nurse, who has been visiting with the big policeman in the park, discovers the necklace in the baby carriage, and rushes home with it. At the same time father comes in from the stock exchange, much relieved by a rise in the market. So all goes well, happiness is restored, and vanity is gratified.

WOMEN (Sept. 16).—Marguerite Emerson is slightly injured by an automobile, and is brought to her home by the owner of the machine. Just as Mr. Clarendon is about to leave Mrs. Emerson, her husband comes in. At sight of the other man Emerson is half crazed with jealousy and orders Clarendon out. His wife tries to explain but he will not listen to her. He finally tells her to go, too. Marguerite leaves the house, taking with her a picture of her little daughter. Dejectedly seated on a bench in the park, she is seen by a man and woman passing in an automobile. At sight of the lonely figure they stop the car, and the woman, after winning the girl by her show of sympathy, takes her to her home. In the meantime, Emerson discovers that he has wronged his wife, and with the help of a detective frantically starts a search. They find Marguerite just in time to save the unsuspecting girl from her supposed benefactors.

VITAGRAPH

THE HINDOO CHARM (Sept. 17).—Advised by his friends to seek a second wife so that his children, Helen and Dolores, may know a mother's care, Sir Edward Tilbury marries Phyllis, the daughter of Lady Olivia Gower, a leading social light in Calcutta.

One day, after they are married, Nattoo, an Indian fakir and "devil priest," enters the compound of Sir Edward's house and greatly frightens Phyllis and her mother with the snakes that he carries. Phyllis beats him and thrusts him off the grounds, warning him never to return again. Nattoo swears to be revenged and watches for the first opportunity to do her harm.

Phyllis, who is not very fond of children, does not take much notice of Helen and Dolores, who are greatly disappointed in their new mother, of whom they had hoped so much. One day, hurt because Phyllis has ordered them to run off and play by themselves, they go out of the compound and wander about the streets of the city, where they meet Nattoo. The fakir, who sees that something is the matter, hears that the reason for their crying is that their new mother does not love them. He gives Helen a poisonous charm, telling her to put it in her mother's tea when she is not looking, and saying that it will make her love them. Helen rushes home as fast as she can and finds Phyllis taking afternoon tea in the garden. While she is reading the paper, Helen drops the charm in her tea and sits down to await results.

Dolores, who suspects that something is wrong, meets her father on the street in his automobile. She tells him of the fakir and they at once rush home, arriving just in time to save Phyllis from taking the poison. The "charm" proves to be an effectual instrument in bringing the family together, for Phyllis realizes how much the children wish to love her and gives them her own love in return.

THE LOVE OF BEAUTY (Sept. 19).—Nellie Williams is in love with Jim Ambrose, a blind youth, and Jim is just as greatly in love with Nellie. While he is blind he realizes repeatedly her beauty of character in her helping the poor, her treatment of him in giving her time to read to him and take him walking. Also he feels her great love for everything beautiful and is positive that she must be wonderfully beautiful herself. When he tells her so it hurts her, but so long as he cannot see it makes no difference. Finally a specialist decides that he can give him his sight through an operation, and the thought, while giving Nellie joy over Jim's cure, also crushes her down with the certainty that he will turn from her when he is able to see how homely she is. The operation is a success and Nellie overhears and sees Jim as he gains his sight. His rapture over his mother's beauty, the beauty of the sunshine, pictures, flowers, etc., only serve to make her suffering greater and when a rather homely housemaid enters he turns from her in such evident loathing that Nellie cannot stand it any longer and runs home, vowing never to let him see her and torture her with that same look. Jim vows Nellie must be even more beautiful than his mother and keeps asking why she hasn't been in to see him. His mother realizes the trouble and makes excuses. Later Jim meets a beautiful girl whom he thinks must be Nellie and he is disappointed when he learns it is not her. Nellie happens along and overhears and it is the finishing touch. He 'phones, but she refuses to allow him to call. He decides he will anyway, and goes to her house. Meanwhile, Nellie has been seized upon by a group of her children friends and is deeply engrossed in reading them fairy stories when Jim is admitted. Her back is toward him and he calls her name. She gets up and faces him. He thinks it can't be his Nellie. She assures him it is, and is heartbroken at the look on his face, and flees from the room. The children scold him and he leaves. He seeks out the beautiful girl, and her treatment and lack of appreciation in regard to the flowers he brings her and her small kid brother startle him into a half realization of the difference between the two, the one lovely in her physical beauty, the other endowed with a beautiful character. They go out and he leaves her on the corner while he takes a blind beggar across the street. She resents his leaving her there alone for a beggar, and a quarrel results. It is the finishing touch and he goes back to Nellie and wins her forgiveness. Needless to say he is forgiven now that he understands.

TRUE FEATURES

DAREDEVIL DOLLY (3 Reels).—Little Dolly Miller has just turned six. Her father being an auto enthusiast and the winner of many prizes, she is anxious to follow in the footsteps of father, and when the latter returns from a great race in which he beat all competitors, the little girl, who has secretly mastered the art of driving, prevails upon her mother to let her drive the car in which they are to ride out to meet the returning father. The father is delighted with the skill shown by his little girl, who shows her cleverness in turning and other difficult feats. Little Dolly insists now on returning home, riding in her own car. The father, in a spirit of fun, consents, and there is a good deal of joking and fooling between the parents and the child until the father, imprudently, perhaps, proposes a race. The little girl catches up the idea quickly, but disaster overtakes her almost at once. Her car makes a bad turn and she is thrown into a ditch, barely escaping with her life. The father blames himself for the accident and, upon arriving home, in the presence of all the servants, forbids his child to ever enter an auto again.

And now follow a series of thrilling episodes, in which the little girl takes a prominent part and which keeps the interest of the spectator keyed up to the highest pitch. Dolly's parents have been invited to attend a banquet given them by an automobile club. While on the road to the club, the parents of Dolly stop to assist a couple, man and wife, who had been severely injured in an accident which has happened to their car. They learn that the name of the injured people is also Miller. The newspapers announce that Mr. and Mrs. Miller have been mortally injured and the message is rushed to the automobile club. The little girl, who thinks her parents have been killed, forgets all else and jumps into her car and starts to drive to the place where the accident happened. While Dolly is gone the Millers appear at the door of the club in the best of health. Then it turns out that Dolly is in her car. She again suffers shipwreck on the road and it would have gone ill with her had not a good-natured tramp, whose part is played with consummate skill by Director Theodore Burgarth, of the Irving Place Theatre, come to her rescue. The tramp, who now steps into the limelight, turns out to have been a victim of misfortune, and when his story is learned by Dolly's parents they show their gratitude by giving him permanent employment.

AMERICAN

JIM TAKES A CHANCE (Sept. 20).—Dora, young and pretty, is to visit her uncle in the West; she is informed that the boys at the ranch are all anxiety over her coming.

In the spirit of fun, Dora determines to masquerade as a spinster; uncle is in on the joke and shares Dora's amusement in seeing the shock of disappointment which the boys receive as Dora steps from the stage coach.

Jim, the foreman of the ranch, is too good-natured to show his disappointment and offers to carry the "spinster's" grip into the house. By doing so he excites the laughter and ridicule of the boys.

Later, Jim goes further and teaches the "spinster" to ride a horse.

Cupid gets busy under the make-up and Dora's girlish heart begins to beat warmly for the handsome cowpuncher. In spite of the laughter and ridicule of the boys, Jim is head over heels in love with the supposed spinster.

He asks her to be his wife—she removes the disguise and reveals herself to Jim in all her youth and beauty. Jim is at first astonished and then delighted. He takes the lovely Dora in his arms as his promised wife.

TRAVELERS OF THE ROAD.—The young prospector, Joseph Harbison, starts out on his journey, and en route meets with a group of prospectors playing cards by the roadside. He joins them, drawing out his little pile, and enters the game with the result that he makes a considerable winning. Leaving them, he continues on his journey and meeting a gypsy woman and her daughter decides to have his fortune told, the daughter telling his fortune by the lines in his hands. Drawing out his bag of money to pay the girl, he excites the older woman's cupidity and she invites him to remain with them which he agrees to do. Calling her daughter aside, the mother suggests that she make advances to the young man to gain his confidence, and when he sleeps they will secure his money and decamp, but because he was a light sleeper they fail in their attempt and when morning comes he takes up his pack and bidding them goodbye he resumes his journey. Further up the road he comes upon the emigrant wagon of home-seekers and is invited to ride with them. Attracted by the beauty of the daughter of the old colonist, Harbison accepts their kind invitation and joins them. When evening comes they stop to camp. In the morning the gypsies have overtaken them and the daughter, seeing Harbison among the homeseekers and attentive to the young girl, her jealousy is aroused and the mother and daughter plan to cause them trouble. Knowing the hiding place of a number of outlaws in this vicinity, the gypsies plan to seek them and obtain their assistance in the carrying out of their revenge. The outlaws have planned a daring hold-up of the stage and while the gypsies are hurrying to locate them the robbery is committed. The stage goes on its way and along the road meets the homeseekers wagon. They tell of the incident, and the gypsies overhear the conversation. They have lingered nearby but now hurry to find the outlaws. They find them and tell them if they will take the trouble to rob the wagon the colonists will find many treasures contained therein. The outlaws advance on the travelers' wagon and fire upon the persons riding in same, one of the first shots wounding the old father. The young daughter and the prospector are left to fight the outlaws but they are worsted in the fight. The two escape with one of the horses of the outlaws and in the running fight win against the outlaw who gave pursuit. The stage returns with a load of miners who give battle to the remaining outlaws and succeed in overcoming them. The young prospector and his new found friend reach the town of Success almost exhausted but nearer to each other because of their experience as travelers of the road.

RELIANCE

TWICKENHAM FERRY (Sept. 15).—Madame Albany, a beautiful and petted opera singer, contracts to sing the old ballad "Twickenham Ferry" for Phonograph Company for $1,000. The old song awakens memories of her youth and she decides to run away from the city and spend a few peaceful weeks in the country. She arrives at a little wayside station, and as she stands irresolute, not knowing which way to turn, a handsome country lad passes. She asks him if he can tell her where to board. He offers to take her across the river in his boat. She accepts his offer. In the drifting boat she sings a verse from "Twickenham Ferry" and the beauty of her voice as well as her lovely face, causes the boy to fall in love with her. He deserts his pretty country sweetheart and spends most of his time rowing with the singer. She thinks him different from the other men she has known, and before long she returns his love. His little sweetheart learns who the singer is, and going to her pleads with her to give her back the boy. Madame laughs until she notices a little ring the girl wears. Then her heart softens and she promises to do what is right. She returns to the city leaving only a card of good-bye to the boy. He is heartbroken. One day he hears "Twickenham Ferry" on a phonograph, and recognizes his beloved's voice. He learns that she is Madame Albany. He hurries to the city to find her in her dressing room. When he professes his love for her, she realizes that to love her will be his ruin. She pretends to love her manager; smokes a cigarette, and so disgusts the boy that he leaves her to return to the girl who is waiting for him.

THE DISGUISE (Sept. 17).—The house next to the Darrows' is rented to a crippled gentleman, Jim Craven, his daughter, Doris Leath, and his attendant, Corless. Craven is entirely helpless, never leaving his wheel-chair. Nancy Darrow and her new neighbors become friends. Nancy falls in love with pretty Doris Leath. The girls become inseparable. Nancy has two brothers, one, Dick, a mere boy, the other John, connected with the banking business. Nancy gives a party in honor of Doris. Several valuables are taken during the dance from the dressing room. The mystery regarding the theft is not solved. The Darrows are embarrassed and chagrined, but helpless. John Darrow comes home from the city, meets Doris, and the two fall deeply in love. John asks her hand in marriage. The two are betrothed. Some time later, after John has returned to the city, Doris is spending the evening with Nancy. The girls are on the porch with Dick. Doris asks to go in for a drink. Dick offers to get the drink, but Doris, who is like one of the family, insists upon waiting upon herself. She remains so long indoors that the brother and sister remark upon it. Finally she returns to the veranda. The next morning, Nancy finds her jewels missing. Nancy had been displaying the jewels to Doris, and so cannot help suspecting her. She takes occasion to refer pointedly to the jewels. Doris, bitterly hurt and humiliated, goes home and the friendship ends. John stops over night on his way to New York—has a large sum of money to transfer to another bank. Stopping in Doris' house on his way home, she explains the trouble between herself and Nancy. John is very angry that his sweetheart is suspected of theft. Craven and Corless see John enter and also notice that he carefully guards the satchel he carries. The satchel contains the money. That same night, Doris unable to sleep, kneels by her open window and hears stealthy steps below in the shrubbery. Throwing a black wrap over her dressing gown, she steals out. A burglar is placing a ladder below the second story window, next door, where John sleeps. John is still up, a light shines through the wide open window. The burglar moves off to wait until John retires. Doris, never hesitating a minute, thinking only of John's impending danger, mounts the ladder and enters his room. John, stunned, sees her enter. Half fainting she tells him all. Hiding her behind a screen and getting his revolver he puts out the light and waits. The burglar returns, finds the house in darkness, and concludes that John has retired, climbs the ladder and enters. His flash may be seen darting about, before he locates the satchel on the table. At the same moment the lights are turned on. John shoots the fellow, who staggers toward the window, turns and his mask falls off. The burglar is Craven, Doris' stepfather, a very clever criminal. He is captured and by the note found upon him, Corless is also caught in the nick of time and the various jewels are recovered. Doris is cleared of all blame. All ends happily.

PATHE'S WEEKLY (Sept. 15).

MRS. MORTON'S BIRTHDAY (Sept. 16).—The party in celebration of the birthday of Mrs. Morton brought the leading lights of the social world to the Mortons mansion and the young matron enjoyed the day immensely, little knowing the grief that was to follow. Her husband lost his fortune when the bottom fell out of the cotton market, but he said nothing to her? That night he planned to recuperate his loss with a robbery ingeniously devised, but the hand of fate intervened and he paid the penalty for his crime.

THE MERRIL MURDER MYSTERY (Sept. 17).—The evidence pointed clearly to Dan Merrill as the murderer of his uncle; at least the circumstantial evidence did. But Dan's personal friend, Detective Byrnes, could not believe him guilty. Byrnes set to work to clear the boy and, starting with the finding of a tiny diamond chip, succeeded in fastening the crime where it belonged, after some strikingly novel adventures. It's a real detective story.

TOAD TRAITS (Sept. 18).—A comprehensive study of the toad family is conducted in this film, which was made under the direction of Dr. Ditmars, the curator of reptiles in the New York Zoo. The film shows and explains the characteristics of the entire species, the spacefoot toad, poisonous toads, the African water toad and others too numerous to catalogue but of surprising interest to everyone.

On the same reel:

HOT SPRINGS AND GEYSERS OF NEW ZEALAND.—New Zealand is noted, among other things, for the number of its geysers and hot springs. Many of them are now inactive. The film shows boiling hot springs within three feet of streams of cold water. Other interesting views are those of Pigeon Rock geyser, which shoots every twelve minutes with absolute regularity, and numerous other geysers in eruption.

PATHE'S WEEKLY (Sept. 18).

DR. TURNER TURNS THE TABLES (Sept. 19).—When Dr. Turner went away for his annual month's vacation, he left Dr. Williamson in charge of his practice. Now Dr. Williamson got a hurry call from his sweetheart, an actress, that she and her fellow-thespians were stranded. He promptly went to the rescue of his girl and her friends and brought them back to Dr. Turner's home, where they made themselves comfortable. Dr. Turner was not comfortable at his vacation resort, so he came home before his time had expired and caught the merrymakers unawares. Dr. Williamson, to avoid discovery, made patients of them all. Dr. Turner soon found out that the occupants of his house were not ill at all and, believe us, he got square.

On the same reel:

THE HARNESSED FALLS OF THE NORTHWEST.—An interesting study, beautiful to behold, of the waterfalls of the Northwest, which are used to develop electric power sufficient to supply the needs of the surrounding country.

HER BRAVE RESCUER (Sept. 20).—Senor Luis Soto loved Juanita Acosta ardently until he met Mabel Berry, a young American girl, whose life he saved when her horse ran away. Straightway Luis forgot Juanita. But Juanita was not so easily to be put aside. Her heart raged and her temper rose at the insult and she determined to be avenged. One day she found her brave lover assisting the beautiful Mabel across a wooden bridge. Juanita demanded of Mabel the reason for the theft of her lover. Luis interposed an objection to the question and Juanita promptly pushed him overboard. That was quite enough for Mabel and she left the scene never to return. Juanita kept Luis in the water and would not let him land until he promised never to offend her again.

GAUMONT

THE FAITHFUL SERVITOR (Sept. 15).—Photographed amidst the majestic mountains and the fertile valleys of lovely Southern California, with the very quintessence of local color so thoroughly intermingled with the story that the spectator holds his breath and can only gasp, "How realistic!" This romance of life in the regions of California's golden strands holds us enthralled from the time the narrative commences until the very last inches of film are unwound in showing the apotheosis of self sacrifice.

Machuda is an Indian, a servitor, almost slave, who toils day and night in the garden of his master, the proud Senor Gabora, a specimen of the Spanish noble often to be met with in beauteous Lower California. Machuda, in his poor, slow method of thinking, reckons he belongs body and soul to the Gabora family. Did not the Senor and his lovely daughter, Esmeralda, discover his bruised and naked body at the bottom of the cliff whence he had been thrown by his tribe as a punishment for warning some American emigrants of the tribe's intention to attack them? Did they not tend his wounds, feed his body, and exhibit the first signs of tenderness he had ever known? Henceforth the Indian's life is theirs, and theirs alone. "Oh, let poor Machuda have but a chance to show the Senor what an Indian's gratitude means!" Wait, Machuda; your chance is coming all too soon for the peace of mind of Senor Gabora!

It is Springtime in California. Verdugo, a poor but highly talented violinist, has dared to aspire to the hand of the rich Senor's daughter, and he is one of many guests invited to a ball given at the Gabora mansion. One other is the rascally Camello, another aspirant for Esmeralda's favor. After a delightful ball Vardugo plays to the assembled company, and is enthralled when Esmeralda lays a bunch of flowers at his feet, and he heeds not Camella's openly displayed contempt. An hour later Camella has the lovely girl to himself, but she will not listen to his pleading; and, climbing up the trellis work, Machuda deems it unnecessary to bury his sharp knife in Camello's broad back. The girl seeks out the villain and taxes him with his affront, but is dissuaded by Esmeralda. Meanwhile the Senor and Senora are not quite sure whether they approve of the humble musician as a suitor for their lovely daughter.

The second part shows us the evil machinations of the scoundrelly Camello. He enlists the services of the chief of a Mexican bandit tribe in an attempt to abduct Esmeralda, and all goes well with their wicked plot until the Indian, Machuda, gets upon the track and spoils their game. Does it matter that he, the Indian servitor, is beaten and kicked and half killed? Not one little bit, so long as he has saved his darling young mistress. Poor Machuda reaches home more dead than alive, and Esmeralda once more tends his poor wounded body. He asks but one reward—the silver cross she wears on her breast—with that he will be happy and contented. Wonderingly Esmeralda presents Machuda with the cross, and leaves him.

But Camello is not a man to bear defeat with equanimity. Thwarted once, he again seeks the aid of the bandit chief, and this time they plan a more elaborate kidnapping plot. They forge a note to Esmeralda, purporting to come from her beloved Verdugo and asking her to meet him on the bridge. "I am waiting," runs the last sentence—so Esmeralda, swearing her maid to secrecy, runs to meet the waiting lover, only to be once more captured by Camello. This time he is not inclined to do things by halves but hides her in a tent, with one of the bandits on guard. Esmeralda is in a terrible plight. She now realizes what a villain she has to deal with, and she fears that nothing can save her from a fate worse than death itself. But that large-eyed, pathetic-faced Indian servitor has been keeping watch and ward over his little mistress; he has seen the abduction, but what can one Indian do in open fight against ten or twelve armed bandits? Machuda follows stealthily, and when Esmeralda has laid down, exhausted with her passion of sobbing and heart-breaking prayers for succor, Machuda creeps into the tent and hastily bids her escape while he takes her place on the rough pallet bed. Camella enters the tent, an evil smirk on his villainous face, ready to taunt the helpless girl with her powerlessness. He pulls back the coverlet, only to find that he has uncovered a tiger instead of a lamb.

In the meantime, of course, Senor Gabora is terrified at his daughter's absence. The maid has at last sobbed out the facts. A party, headed by the Senor, sets out to find Esmeralda, and whilst searching the wood they come across the Senor's daughter. Esmeralda rapidly explains matters, and she is sent back with one of the search party whilst the rest go forward to exterminate the gan gof ruffians. They arrive too late. The bandits have pulled up stakes and departed for secret fastnesses where none can follow, taking with them as prisoner the afithful Indian servant.

The epilogue is a sad one, and we know not whether poor Machuda is left to die on the mountain top, or whether he is at last rescued by the Senor's search party. Machuda, however, is sublimely happy; happy even if his life shall be sacrificed in the supreme effort he made to preserve his young mistress' honor; happy that he can raise the silver cross towards the rising sun and passionately kiss it; happy that he can clasp the cross to his breast as he sinks exhausted to the hard rock to which the wicked bandits have chained him and left him to die there alone.

Whether Machuda dies or is rescued must be left to the future to decide. Suffice it to say that "The Faithful Servitor" presents us with a touching and pathetic picture of an ignorant Indian's deep-rooted gratitude and supreme self abnegation and in so doing portrays a great and lasting moral lesson.

THE DOCTOR'S STORY (Sept. 19).—The old doctor of a small fishing village is entertaining one of his city friends, and while sitting near the beach, the friend suddenly sees a young woman, prematurely grown old and grey, dressed in a wedding gown, with flowing veil, looking about as though waiting and watching for someone. Her peculiar actions and attire arouse the friend's curiosity, and the doctor volunteers to tell the unfortunate girl's story as follows:

At her mother's deathbed, Katherine Crane assumes the care of her younger sister, Dora; and in order to maintain their little home and provide an education for Dora, Katherine does dressmaking. She sends the younger girl to a boarding school, where she enjoys life, heedless of the cost to Dora.

The doctor loves Kate, but she rejects his proposal because she already loves Tom, the fisherman. Tom proposes, but Kate refuses to marry him until Dora is through school. After several years of toil for Katherine and pleasure for Dora, the younger girl comes home, and Katherine immediately accepts Tom's proposal and begins the making of her wedding dress.

Dora returns and Tom is at once impressed with her. This admiration quickly grows into love, which is reciprocated by Dora, all unknown to the unsuspecting Katherine. And when Katehrine's wedding dress is finished, Tom and Dora elope, leaving a note for her. The blow robs her of her reason, which materializes into a obsession that each day will be her wedding day, and attired in her gown and veil she haunts the beach, waiting and watching for the lover who never returns.

NESTOR

BEAUTY AND THE UGLY ONE (Sept. 15).—The Ugly One leaves his mountain home to woo Beauty of the prairie. Brawn also feels the spring call and wends his way to the home of Beauty. The Ugly One pleads for love, but is denied and Brawn wins Beauty. Later Beauty goes to row on the river, but her canoe is overturned and she is saved by the Ugly One who still lingers in the neighborhood. Recovering from the first shock, Beauty, in her delirium, thinks Ugly One to be Brawn and clings to him. The Ugly One at first thinks she loves him for his heroism, then realizes that he is playing another's part. He takes her to his mountain home and his mother helps restore her mind.

Brawn misses Beauty and searches for her. Finding the canoe he mourns her as dead until hope rises again. He follows the trail towards the Ugly One's home. The Ugly One, meanwhile, takes his rifle and waylays Brawn on the mountain trail. He is about to shoot him down when love conquers temptation and he lets Brawn go unharmed. Brawn goes to the cabin and the sight of him restores Beauty's mind. She is led away by Brawn and the Ugly One, sobbing like a child, sinks to his knees and seeks solace in his mother's caresses.

FRONTIER

THE RANCHMAN'S DOUBLE (Sept. 20).—Widow Craige has twin sons, Bob is self-sacrificing and the main support of his mother. His twin, Harry, is the opposite type, one who frequents the beer halls and public dances. In one of his drunken orgies Harry starts an argument with an associate over a girl. The friend is accidentally shot with his own gun. Harry, believing himself a murderer, flees from the city. The news of this killing causes the death of the mother.

Years pass by and Bob, with his savings, leaves for the West to try ranching. His sweetheart and her mother he leaves behind with the promise that he will send for them shortly.

Meantime Harry, having gone from bad to worse, has joined a band of outlaws. Circumstances brings him near his brother's ranch, with the sheriff hot upon his trail. Bob is arrested by mistake and made a prisoner in the county jail. Harry, having seen the arrest, decides to impersonate Bob and take possession of his ranch. This he does and he even goes so far as to receive the sweetheart and her mother who arrive from the East several days following.

But something tells the girl that all is not well and she seeks the advice of the sheriff. There is an investigation which results in the confession and death of Harry. Bob comes into his own shortly afterward.

VICTOR

FOR THE SINS OF ANOTHER (Sept. 26).—John Denton, a wealthy lawyer, has for his private secretary Robert Blair, an honest fellow who loves his daughter Violet. Philip, her brother, falls into evil ways, contracts a gambling debt for which he is unable to pay without aid from his father. This he is afraid to ask.

Muriel, Lawyer Denton's youngest child, and a favorite with Robert, watches Robert open the safe one day and induces him to teach her the combination. Failing to manipulate the numbers right the child throws the paper which contains the numbers she had written down upon the floor. This paper falls into the hands of Philip who, later, rifles the safe to pay his debt.

Robert, being the only one knowing the safe besides the lawyer, is accused. Because Violet confesses her love for the young man her father does not prosecute but simply dismisses him from the service.

Later, the housekeeper finds Philip's discarded cuff. Muriel, in the room at the time, observes the figures and takes it to her older sister. Violet recognizes their meaning and confronts the brother with the evidence. He is made to write a letter to the father exonerating Robert and that he expects to start life anew in some distant place. Robert is taken back and is given consent to marry Violet.

CRYSTAL

HIS LAST GAMBLE (Sept. 28).—Wm. Letterell is a considerate father to his daughter, Pearl, failing to reflect his true character. In business he is a receiver of stolen goods. His associates are ordinary thieves. Dick Hogan, a smooth crook, has succeeded in establishing the father's identity, though he makes no use of his knowledge.

In later years Pearl is sent to boarding school. Hogan accidentally saves Pearl from the insult of a tough. Learning that she is the daughter of a wealthy merchant he decides to win her love. Pearl responds to his advances and writes to her father asking his consent to their marriage. Her father asks her to return home with the fellow, who is now going under the name of Gerald Sinclair. Hogan consents, unaware of the true identity of the father.

Letterell, on meeting the fellow, is horror-stricken to find that his daughter has fallen in love with a crook. Hogan is offered a sum of money to leave the girl, but refuses. Hogan uses the threat that he will tell the girl of the real identity of the father unless he consents to the marriage.

Rather than have his daughter know this or marry a crook Letterell induces Hogan to accompany him on the river in a boat, where both are drowned when the boat is capsized.

NONE BUT THE BRAVE DESERVE THE —? (Sept. 22).—Reginald is a coward. Mary, the wealthy young widow, adores bravery. Reginald takes Kitty, Mary's baby, out for a boat ride. Kitty falls overboard and but for Bob, the lifeguard, would have been drowned. Reginald bribes Bob and, taking the baby, claims that he saved it.

He is acclaimed the hero and awarded a medal. Later he takes the mother for a boat ride and when the boat upsets, Bob again comes to the rescue. Reginald is discovered as a fraud and Bob is made the hero and taken to the garden party that evening. Here the assembled guests treat him rather coolly.

IMP

THE MISER'S SON (Sept. 25).—Henry, a man who loves gold above all else, has, by shrewd bargaining and miserly ways, accumulated enough money to pay off a debt one of the neighbors holds against him. This money he has secreted in the chimney of his parlor.

While assisting his son one day to put hay in the barn a stone jug falls on his head, depriving him of his memory. His son has been forbidden to speak to the girl he loves by the father, who holds the note in uestion.

The note falls due but the old man cannot recollect where he placed the money. Ethel, the girl, clandestinely calls on the boy and, as they are seated in the parlor, the tea kettle commences to boil over. Ethel, in trying to lift it from the stove, accidentally displaces a brick, revealing the hiding place of the money. The father's memory returns, he pays the note and consents to the union of the boy and girl.

AMERICAN-ECLAIR

A PURITAN EPISODE (Sept. 24).—Arthur Cartwright married, at the close of the seventeenth century, in old England, Ruth Joyce, and to escape the old parents' wrath, fled to America, settling at Plymouth, Mass. Ruth's mother accompanied them. Though they lived happily they were completely isolated from their Puritan neighbors, who had small tolerance for their faith.

The time came when the Indians wrought death among them. Arthur and Ruth were slain in sight of Mistress Joyce and Alice, the baby. Mistress Joyce became demented from the shock. Because the Indians held an insane person sacred she was saved from death. This led the Puritans to believe that Mistress Joyce was a witch, and when she wandered back among them they seized her and planned to burn her at the stake. With the intent of treating Alice, now sixteen, in the same way, they tore her from the Indians and imprisoned her.

Her condition touched the old constable, who called in Abner Morton, a newly arrived Conformist minister, to administer Christian consolation to her. She had refused to see the Puritan minister. Abner responded and was surprised to find that the girl was of his own faith. After a daring rescue he takes her out of the danger zone.

Sir Richard Cartwright, still living in England, has long grieved over the disappearance of his son. His brother, Sir John, in accordance with his last wishes, departs for America in search of the missing heir of his family. Reaching Plymouth, he is conducted to the Conformist minister, Abner Morton, as the most likely to aid. On hearing her father's name, Alice, still in trousers, rushes forward and verifies her identity, showing her father's seal ring.

WHY AUNT JANE NEVER MARRIED (Sept. 28).—At the urgings of the children the old woman sits herself down to retell the story of why she never married.

It appears that the old aunt, when young, lived with her father on an island off the New England coast. Following a terrible storm which kept the people indoors for many days, a young stranger, fatigued and with memory dimmed, came to the house to seek shelter. With careful nursing he was restored to health and, being unable to give any information regarding himself, he was taken into the family. It was believed that he had been wrecked some distance up the coast and was probably the lone survivor.

As the Spring came on the old father showed considerable feebleness and so the stranger, though the women did not believe him ready for the rigors of the outdoor life, assisted in netting. The season's catch proved the most successful the family had ever had and the credit was given the stranger.

By this time the daughter and stranger had fallen in love. After receiving his share of the catch the stranger gave the mother a proper sum for his Winter's keep, and then asked the girl to marry him. She accepted, and together they sought the consent of the father. To their dismay he refused, and cursed himself as a blind mule that he had allowed a nameless stranger to seriously consider his daughter so long. Melancholy days followed. Finally, however, the old father's consent was given.

They were to be married at the close of Summer. When they were about to enter the little church first a little boy and then a fashionably dressed woman pushed their way to the stranger's side. As he looked into the woman's face reason returned—and there was mutual recognition. As he called her "wife," the girl swooned. It was simply a tragedy of life.

REX

GENESIS 15:9 (Two Reels) (Sept. 25).—Tom, Jerry and their mother live in the Canadian woods. Jerry, leaving his sweetheart, Mary, who had promised to wait for him, leaves home to seek fortune as a mounted policeman. Later, he writes to his mother of his success and of his love for the girl. She puts the letter in a book which Mary had loaned her. Tom also loves the girl and tells her. Later, Mary recovers her book, finds the letter, part of which has been torn away, and reads what would indicate that Jerry had fallen in love with another girl.

Mary, piqued, accepted Tom. Jerry, returning just as they have been married, believes that his brother has betrayed him. In poverty Mary's baby is born. Without food, Tom decides to steal from the settlement store. This he does, but through a sack of flour, which leaves a track behind, Jerry, in his capacity as a policeman, traces Tom to his home. Tom hides in the woods. Disregarding the pleadings of his mother and the young wife, Jerry searches the house—finds no one—and departs to inform the police. Shortly after he returns, accompanied by the chief. In the delirium following the shock Mary gives the signal which informs Tom that all is safe. He approaches. Observing him Jerry's conscience overcomes him and he shoots out the light. Tom, warned, escapes to the United States, where he is followed by his mother and wife. Jerry is dismissed in disgrace from the service. He receives a letter from Mary enclosing the torn letter of long ago, exonerating his brother Tom.

LUX

THE BLACKSMITH'S SON (Sept. 19).—Robert, the blacksmith's son, goes to seek his fortune, and before setting out he asks his father for more money, but the old man refuses it. Seeing Robert go away and leave his father all alone at the smithy, some bandits decide to raid the smithy. They attack the old man, and under their menaces the blacksmith reveals the hiding place of his treasure. Before leaving the smithy, one of the bandits find that his horse has cast a shoe, and the old man is forced to shod the horse. He does so, but takes care to place a marked shoe on the horse's hoof. He is enabled thereby to track the bandits up by following the trail of the marked horseshoe.

Meanwhile, Robert meets Mirca, a gypsy girl, who is weary and hungry. Robert offers her food and together they continue their journey. They arrive at the very same inn as the bandits, and when Robert's father tracks the bandits to the inn, he concludes that his son has been the leader of the band, and accuses him of the robbery. Robert is unable to clear himself, but his friend Mirca, the gypsy girl, comes to his aid and helps him to arrest the real criminals and establish his own innocence.

GREAT NORTHERN

FOR SALE BY AUCTION (Sept. 13).—This is an amusing comedy in which at the opening a number of boon companions are discussing the low state of their finances. They are seated in a cafe and John, the guiding spirit of the party, decides that they may be able to "raise the wind" at an auction sale which is in progress. When the auction room is visited job lots are being disposed of, and John puts himself on the list. There is an unusual gathering of expectant maiden laidies present at the sale. When the last of the antiques has been disposed of, "A modern piece of furniture" is announced, and lot No. 94 finds John Spoofer on the auction block before a crowd of astonished bidders. A spirited contest follows the auctioneer's description of this "piece of modern furniture," and the object is knocked down to Miss Passee, a robust and rather elderly female.

John has the shock of his life, but determines to brave it out and is taken home to pa and ma, the former being a peppery army officer. John is obliged to observe military discipline in the house, and at last, when formalities have been fulfilled, John is allowed a "leave of absence," and he hies himself to the auctioneer's to draw his part of the proceeds of the sale. A merry scene follows at the old cafe in which the plot was hatched. How John got out of his fix, his flirtations with serving maids and his many amusing adventures.

OUR MOTTO—ONE FOR ALL, ALL FOR ONE

The writer's attention was recently called to the following advertisement, cut from a Nebraska paper:

"Operator Wanted.—A good, all-around moving picture operator wanted for a traveling tent show. Must be able to cook and drive. Salary, $15 per week."

Ye gods! The advertiser doesn't want much! Perhaps he also requires the operator to play brass in the band, drive and pull stakes, take tickets, and act as general chambermaid to the horses. Maybe a little laundry work will also be required from time to time during the operator's spare time. This is some job, believe me, and the poor fellow who gets it won't have anything to do till tomorrow.

At the present time a similar instance of a so-called operator's multiple duties—viz., manager, operator, janitor, reel boy, carry posters, and do wiring—all for the liberal salary of $15 per week, is being done right here in New York City. But he is not a union man. Nuff sed.

* * * *

Might is not always right, as will be shortly proven in regard to the six-year-old muddle which has existed here in New York in the operators' craft. To fight for justice and continue fighting in the face of all obstacles requires backbone and stamina. The same is required upon the battlefield. But in all struggles deserters will be found, and when all is analyzed proof is certain that the backsliders or deserters have a streak of yellow in their make-up—in fact, are human weaklings.

* * * *

No man with red blood likes a quitter. Quitters are below the notice of all men. Their make-up contains plenty of yellow.

MEETING NOTICE

The next regular meeting of the M. P. M. O. U., No. 1, will take place on Monday, September 15, 1913, at 12 o'clock, at the meeting rooms, Teutonia Hall, 66 Essex Street. At this meeting a full report will be given by the committee on its meeting with the officials of the A. F. of L. Therefore each and every member of the M. P. M. O. U., No. 1, who is vitally interested in his welfare for the present and the future good of all concerned is required to be present at this meeting on Monday, September 15, 1913, without fail.

J. A. LE ROY,
Business Representative.

The New York offices of the Golden State Motion Picture Company, exploiting "100 Years of Mormonism"; the Occidental Motion Picture Company, presenting "From Dusk to Dawn," and other enterprises presided over by H. M. Russell, of Los Angeles, removes from the seventh floor of the Candler Building to the ninth floor of the World's Tower Building, 110 West Fortieth street, New York City. This change is necessitated by the growing business of these companies and their allied interests. Ernest Shipman is general manager.

CHAS. URBAN, The International Motion Picture Authority Endorses Simplex

Mr. Richard G. Hollaman, Precision Machine Company,
317 East 34th Street,
New York City, U. S. A.

London, W., 13th August, 1913.

Dear Mr. Hollaman:—

When you first introduced the subject of the Simplex machine to me two years ago, I must candidly admit that I was sceptical. Your persistence in your direct aim to convince me of the superiority of the Simplex during this period has had its effect—I am convinced.

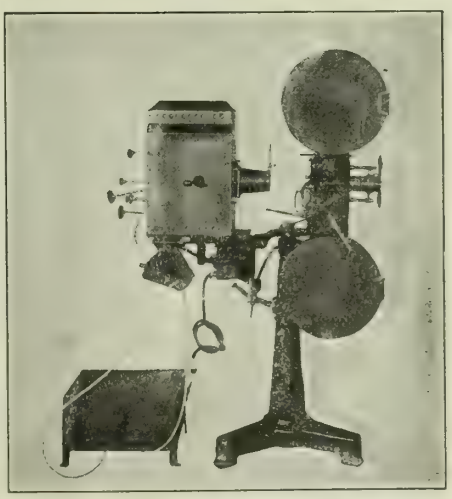
I have carefully followed the fortunes since the introduction of this machine by Kineto Limited into the European market during the past year, and I am most gratified with the unanimous satisfaction expressed by the scores of picture theatre managers and operators who are using this apparatus.

When I tell you that, while you have perhaps three or four competing makes of machines in the United States, there are at least forty prominent types of machines to compete against in the European market, it is a far more difficult proposition, but I am convinced that the Simplex is destined to create hundreds and thousands of highly satisfied users throughout Europe.

Extensive experiments, conducted by our mechanical and electrical engineers with the Simplex, by adapting thereto the recent improvements of Color correction, great reduction of amperage with equal brilliancy of projection anl simplicity of operating, demonstrated to me that with the already existing splendid points of your latest type machine, these improvements could be more readily adapted for generally improved Kinemacolor projection, than with our own type of mechanism.

Therefore, we have decided to utilize your machine in its adapted form for all Kinemacolor projecting purposes in future.

I hope you will be able to cope with the demand we shall make on your resources for the prompt supply of the Simplex and Kinemacolor Simplex projectors for Europe.



Yours faithfully,
(Signed) C. URBAN, Managing Director,
THE NATURAL COLOR KINEMATOGRAPH CO., LTD., and KINETO LIMITED.

Why hesitate, Mr. Exhibitor, when such men as Chas. Urban, Geo. Kleine and over 90% of the photo-play manufacturers use Simplex, the peerless projector.

A Common Sense Argument

Mirroroide advertisements have been read the world over. We do not depend absolutely on advertisements to accomplish the results we have attained. We may quote to you from page 1060 of the Moving Picture World issued last week, in which Mr. R. W. Buzzell, of the Plaza Theater, Northampton, Mass., writes: "I have a good union operator and a Mirroroide screen, and will back my picture against any other exhibitor." This is partly an abstract. Read it for yourself. This was contained in the Moving Picture World, Sept. 6th issue.

The common sense of the argument is this: that we will cheerfully back Mirroroide up against any screen or projection surface in the world today. Backed up with any amount of cash that any other of our competitors care to designate, as to the merits of a true projection surface and the resulting accomplishments. These tests are to include angle views, close up views, and the practical perspective of the said projection. We have read a number of advertisements from our competitors. Can they do as they claim? We claim they cannot. Then again, Mirroroide is put on the market at a price within the reach of every exhibitor, because we are equipped to turn out, if necessary, two hundred screens weekly, which ensures no delays. We have the proper factory facilities, cash capital, and the proper machinery to do as we claim. If you doubt, our large free samples are convincing.

If you desire recommendations from any portion of the entire universe write us, and we will gladly inform you who has one of our Mirroroide screens in use. There are 4700 Mirroroide screens in use today, which warrants the assertion that Mirroroide is the best by test, and has proven to be superior to any other screen now on the market, barring none. Get our large free samples. Postage prepaid. Test any way you desire against any other curtain or screen in your town. This is a common-sense argument, and what your eyes see you can't help but believe.

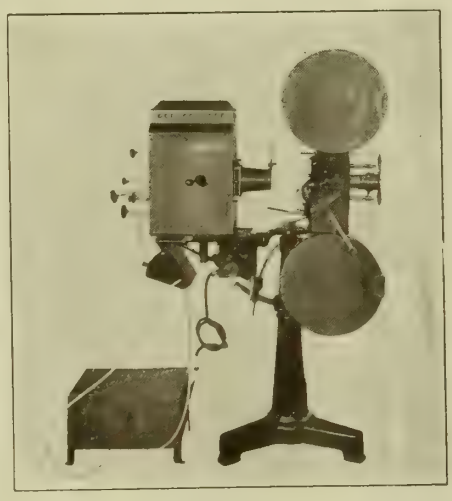
Simplex



It is a conceded fact that the successful exhibitors realize that a Simplex projector is as essential to their success as their heart is to life.

There is a reason why prominent exhibitors discard almost new machines of other makes, install Simplex projectors, and cease worrying about the machine in the booth.

Simplex machines have not only competed successfully with the American made projectors, but also with over forty types of European machines.

The endorsement of the leading photoplay theatres of the world, and over 90 per cent of the film manufacturers and importers, proves that the Simplex projector has shown them a quality of projection heretofore unknown in the Moving Picture World.

Such wonderful features as Quo Vadis, East Lynne, the South Pole Expedition, Sapho, In the Bishop's Carriage, Tess of the D'Urbervilles, Battle of Gettysburg, etc., would apparently have no more value or punch than a commercial reel, if they were not properly projected.

Why spend hundred of dollars for film service and then lose it on account of poor projection?

The perfect Simplex projection of the finest theatres in the world, and over 90 per cent of the film manufacturers and importers is within your means, Mr. Exhibitor. Don't wait to think it over.

M. P. EXHIBITORS' LEAGUE OF AMERICA

Illinois State Convention

A convention of The Illinois State Branch No. 2 of The Motion Picture Exhibitors League of America will be held in Peoria at the Jefferson Hotel on the 23d and 24th of September, 1913.

Every motion picture exhibitor and his friends are not only invited to attend, but are urged to attend this big convention. The convention will be called to order at 10:00 o'clock Tuesday morning in open session. Address of Welcome by the Hon. E. N. Woodruff, Mayor. Response by National President, Mr. M. A. Neff.

Afternoon Session—	1:00 p. m.	Motion picture taken of the exhibitors and families.
	1:30 p. m.	Address by Hon. John Daley, State Senator.
	2:30 p. m.	Convention will go into executive session.
	4:00 p. m.	Adjourn for automobile sight-seeing trip about the city.
	8:00 p. m.	Entertainment at Convention Hall—Jefferson Hotel, music, advance releases of motion pictures, vaudeville, cabaret.
Wednesday, September 24—	10:00 a. m.	Executive Session. Election of officers and other business.
	7:00 p. m.	Luncheon and entertainment at the famous Indian Grill Room, Jefferson Hotel.

Convention Committee: Chairman, C. G. Steinhardt; Vice-Chairman, Wm. Schaeffer; 2d Vice-Chairman, Wm. McLinden; Secretary, M. H. Livingston; Treasurer, Dee Robinson. Press Committee: Chairman, C. E. Carrier; Secretary, Chas. Smith, Harry V. Miller. Exhibit Committee: Chairman, C. C. Montgomery; Secretary, John Flood. Entertainment Committee: Chairman, C. E. Carrier; Vice-Chairman, J. H. Bontjes; Secretary, C. G. Steinhardt. Ways and Means Committee: E. L. Harris, C. G. Steinhardt, M. H. Livingston, C. E. Carrier, Dee Robinson, J. H. Bontjes, John Flood, Chas. Tortat, E. Metcals, C. C. Montgomery, Wm. Schaeffer, C. Smith, Harry V. Miller, Wm. McLinden.

Don't allow anything to interfere with your attending the Peoria Convention. You will meet exhibitors from every part of the State of Illinois. All roads will lead to Peoria on the 23d and 24th.

The convention is for the purpose of reorganizing Illinois, electing new officers, and to continue the Motion Picture Exhibitors League of Illinois State Branch No. 2 under the old charter of the M. P. E. L. of America.

Thorough, active, progressive officers will be elected, an organizer will be placed in the field, and the smallest exhibitor in the smallest town will receive consideration the same as the exhibitor who owns a theatre that cost thousands and runs first runs. The small exhibitor is just as essential to the motion picture industry as the large one.

Our organization stands for every bona fide motion picture exhibitor regardless of the size of his theatre or the town in which he is located. There are matters which will come up in executive session at the convention that we cannot explain by letter. Our league stands for a square deal for all, special privileges to none. An injury to one is the concern of all. The league's policy regarding film manufacturers and film exchanges is: "Keep in the middle of the road." You will learn many things that will be of great benefit to you.

At the convention you will meet the national officers, see all kinds of machines and accessories, musical and other exhibits. This will be a real old-fashioned convention of greeting together of the motion picture exhibitors of Illinois.

Let the slogan be "On to Peoria.'

Very truly yours,
M. A. NEFF, President,
The M. P. E. L. of America.

Mark E. Cory unanimously elected to National Executive Board, this is not the State Secretary, following resolution unanimously adopted to-day: Whereas at the Third Annual Convention of the Motion Picture Exhibitors League of America there occurred what is commonly called a split or bolt upon the part of certain dissatisfied exhibitors, and whereas we believe such action to be entirely unwarranted upon the part of the exhibitors participating there and prompted by selfish personal motives, rather than the good of the league, therefore be it resolved that California State Branch No. 12 of the Motion Picture Exhibitors League of America deplores the occurrence, and condemns the members responsible therefor, and be it further resolved that we hereby express confidence in the honesty, integrity and ability of Mr. Neff, be it further resolved that all exhibitors in America be urged to become members of the Motion Picture Exhibitors League of America, and that we pledge ourselves to exert every effort to secure new members.

W. A. Cory, Secretary Motion Picture Exhibitors League of California of the M. P. E. L. of A.

ARIZONA PIRATES TO BE PROSECUTED

The All Star Feature Corporation, of which Harry B. Raver is the head and Augustus Thomas the director-general of productions, have taken a decided stand against piracy of their plays, and have marshalled a force of legal talent to act vigorously against the leeches in the industry who constantly prey on the legitimate manufacturer in an effort to deceive the public.

Taking advantage of the extensive advertising and the immense popularity of "Arizona," Augustus Thomas' great American play, a so-called Feature Film Company, operating in New York and elsewhere, has revived an old Urban two and one-half reel film, made several years ago, and called at that time "Arizona Bill."

Information was given to President Raver that this film was being exhibited at a theatre on Union Square, noted for its display of gaudy posters and reconstructing titles. A visit was paid to the theatre, where it was found that the old Urban lithographs were being used with the word "Bill" obliterated by strips of paper of a color similar to that of the poster. A large muslin streamer bearing the word "Arizona" was also used in the display.

The attention of the manager of the house was called to the fact that such a procedure was violation of the law and that the title "Arizona" was owned by Augustus Thomas. The manager stated to Mr. Raver that there was no intention on the part of the theatre to misrepresent, but that the films were rented to him by the Feature Film Company, and the posters were furnished in the condition as shown.

Graham & Stevenson, attorneys for the company, proceeded to take action, backed by the All Star Feature Corporation, and intend to spare no effort or expense to keep these infringing and misleading films off the market. This is only an example of the boldness displayed by the several parasites in the business who do not possess sufficient ability to exist legitimately, but who live purely on the product of the brains of others.

Exhibitors who are approached by persons offering "Arizona" in less than six reels, or by anyone who does not carry a company's license, showing that they are authorized by the All Star Feature Corporation to distribute such films, should protect their own interest as well as the public's by refusing to deal with such unprincipled persons.

Bert Ennis, formerly publicity manager for the New York Motion Picture Corporation, has joined forces with the Eclair Company, and will hereafter have charge of the Eclair Bulletin and publicity affairs in general.

The Moving Picture Exhibitors' Association of Greater New York, at a meeting held on Thursday, adopted resolutions requesting all exhibitors to drape their theatres in mourning out of respect to the memory of Mayor Gaynor. It was also resolved to have the Managers close their houses and suspend business from 12 to 1 o'clock on the day of the funeral.

THE DETECTIVE DAUGHTER

"The Detective Daughter" is a four-reel feature produced abroad, the rights of which are controlled in this country by the Dante Features Sales Corporation, Inc.

A news representative saw the first New York production of this interesting photoplay at the Comedy Theatre this week. It proved to be a feature of exceptional merit, depicting episodes of the life in the underworld of Naples and presenting characteristic scenes of criminals associated with the Camorra, an organization of world-wide fame. It will be recalled that at the noted trial which took place recently in Italy, the Camorra prisoners on trial were considered such dangerous criminals that they were locked in cages like wild beasts.

The story sets forth to dramatic advantage the love of a daughter for her father who has been killed by the Camorra in the course of performing his duty as a detective. Ida, the aforesaid daughter, vows to avenge her father's death, and assumes the dangerous task of visiting the Den of the Apaches where the Camorrists congregate at Naples. There she encounters the Camorra leader, Occhibelli, and proceeds to shadow him.

Finally, after many exciting incidents and narrow escapes, Ida, with the help of the Italian police, succeeds in rounding up most of the gang. She thus fulfils her vow, and her father is avenged.

TWO NEW APPOINTMENTS

Announcements are being circulated by The U. S. Printing & Lithograph Company throughout the theatrical, motion picture and circus trade of the appointment of John C. Truath as manager of these departments of their business, and E. J. Doolittle as assistant manager.

EDITORIAL COMMENT

Many a film has taken a turn for the better.

* * * *

There's many a slip 'twixt the film and the screen.

* * * *

* * * *

Remember the coming generations: to sacrifice them for sordid wealth is an unpardonable crime.

* * * *

More copies were printed and put in circulation of last week's issue than of any previous number. Watch us grow.

* * * *

At the National Conservation Exposition which was held in Nashville, Tenn., this month, the Government made extensive use of moving pictures to teach the lessons of conservation. The Department of Mines was shown in film, as were other interesting branches of Government service. Uncle Sam has realized the worth of Cinematography as a medium of education and will utilize it more and more.

* * * *

Combination, the order of the day, is contagious; contact breeds infection. A combination in motion picture journalistic fields would augur well for the business and the trade generally. We are inspired in saying an important consolidation of publications is immediately impending.

* * * *

The business of exaggerating pictures should cease. The exhibitor can put a stop to the practice by complaining to the exchanges. There is no necessity for the practice of exaggeration. Do not misrepresent on the poster what is to be found within the theatre. In so doing the manufacturer fosters a distaste for his product among those he is endeavoring to interest. Exaggeration is an unwise practice. Circus advertising should be tabooed.

* * * *

Again we proclaim our desire to be of the utmost service to manufacturer, exhibitor and operator alike in promoting the best and most useful service to the public. Our pages are open to all for the publication of helpful suggestion. We regret having felt compelled to decline printing some offerings because the same consisted mainly of accusations, criticisms of destructive trend, or unwarranted declarations. Constructive criticisms and helpful suggestions will be put before our readers.

* * * *

We are pleased to observe the ever-growing standard of excellence required by moving picture manufacturers. The increased standard of quality is most noticeable in the new releases of the past thirty days. Nearly every manufacturer in the business has really surpassed himself in the excellence of the output. Not only are detail and atmosphere better, but the worth of the story has improved. There seems to be a keen rivalry between the various makers as to which company shall release the most pleasing and convincing productions. This spirit augurs well for the industry. Exchanges, exhibitors and, best of all, the people are delighted.

* * * *

Every new industry bearing the possibility of large monetary returns appeals first to the adventurer, then to the speculator, and finally to the conservative business element. Motion pictures naturally attracted the entertainment pirate first; then followed the timid showman, and now they are about emerging into the legitimate theatre field. It is pleasing to note that every evolution in the industry is an improvement upon its predecessor; that the undesirable element are being rapidly retired and the new powers are of a type so far superior to the old as hardly to be comparable therewith. Let the good work go on.

CLAIRE WHITNEY

Claire Whitney, whose portrait appears elsewhere, recently joined the Solax stock company in the capacity of leading lady. She is the daughter of an Australian promoter and has had an enviable career for an actress only twenty-two years old. For two years she was with Cohan & Harris, playing one-night stands as well as the two-dollar houses. After that she had considerable experience in vaudeville and musical comedy, and she recently starred in a sketch called "The Little Blonde Lady."

Miss Whitney made her début in pictures at the Biograph studio, and has had the advantage of the tutelage of Lawrence Griffith. She has also been in stock with Pathé and has supported Florence Lawrence at the Rex Company. She possesses a very charming personality, is very winsome in her manner, and is seen to special advantage in ingenue roles. As the villainous Claudia in Mme. Blaché's feature, "The Rogues of Paris," Miss Whitney does exceptionally artistic work, and proves herself a character actress of marked ability.

ROSEMARY THEBY

Rosemary Theby, whose portrait adorns our front cover this week, is associated as leading lady with the stock company of the Reliance studio. She has won much favorable comment for her remarkable interpretation of women with a "purple past." Her first experience as an actress in moving pictures was with the Vitagraph Company, where she was only entrusted with what she designates as "sweet"parts, until one day when they needed a "heavy" they decided she might do for the part as she is tall and dark. Her success led to her being cast for similar characters during the two years that she remained with the Vitagraph Company. It is only recently that she accepted an engagement from the Reliance Company.

Personally Miss Theby prefers to enact sympathetic roles, and those who can attest to her singular beauty on the screen have often wondered why she appears so often as the adventuress. This, as a matter of fact, is due to her exceptional cleverness in emotional roles, and a compliment to her possession of brains as well as beauty.

REVIEW OF NEW FEATURES

By Albert Ellery Bergh

THE popular demand is for new features. You hear this on all sides—both from exhibitors and speculators. Thus is the moving picture more than ever encroaching and poaching on the preserves of the speaking drama.

Moreover, the fiction field is also yielding to the popular demand for feature films. What publisher could illustrate a popular novel as it is illustrated in the screen version? The new features to be reviewed this week include, for instance, "Hard Cash," one of the most popular novels of its day, and pictureplays of many other novels, classic and otherwise, are announced for early release.

The two other features to be reviewed this week are "The Life of Daniel" and "The Battle of Waterloo." Let's have the battle over first.

The Battle of Waterloo

This is an imported five-reel feature that has been exploited in England by the Waterloo Film Company with pronounced success. Naturally the Duke of Wellington is made to stand out in bold relief, but Napoleon is by no means made to suffer in comparison. The subtitles give a running account of the battle scenes as they are thrown on the screen.

The opening scene is that of the famous ball given by the Duchess of Richmond at Brussels on the eve of battle. Wellington's attendance at this ball has been made the subject of considerable critical comment. The claim is made by some critics that Wellington had been lulled into a false security and the reports as to the concentration of Napoleon's troops had been neglected. As a matter of fact when news of the advance of the French troops reached Brussels on the afternoon of June 15th, 1815, Wellington at once issued orders for all of his troops to be in readiness.

At night intelligence was received that the French concentration was at Charleroi, and Wellington issued orders for the immediate movement of the British.

NAPOLEON ON THE EVE OF BATTLE
(Scene in "The Battle of Waterloo.")

Wellington and the Prince of Orange with a number of the staff officers went to the Duchess of Richmond's ball for the purpose, it is said, of preventing a panic in Brussels. The iron Duke, throwing away golden minutes, as if to show his confidence in his fortunes, remained till a late hour to return thanks after supper for the toast to the health of the Prince Regent of Great Britain which was proposed by the Prince of Orange. This ball, as you know, is the subject of Byron's celebrated poem, from which it may not be out of place to quote the first stanza:

"There was a sound of revelry by night,
And Belgium's capital had gathered then
Her Beauty and her Chivalry, and bright
The lamps shone o'er fair women and brave men;
A thousand hearts beat happily; and when
Music arose with its voluptuous swell,
Soft eyes looked love to eyes which spoke again,
And all went merry as a marriage-bell.
But, hush! hark!—a deep sound strikes like a rising knell."

The scenes of the battle are thrown on the screen in accordance with the best historical authorities. They are presented in consecutive order under the following titles:

1. Napoleon, having defeated the Prussian corps of General Ziethen at Thuin, advances to Charleroi to secure a position between Blücher and Wellington. 2. Wellington's troops retreating from Quatre Bras. 3. Wellington rejoining his troops, proceeds to Mont St. Jean, afterward called the Field of Waterloo. 4. Napoleon's troops proceeding towards La Belle Alliance. 5. Napoleon's headquarters at La Belle Alliance. 6. Wellington's headquarters at Waterloo. 7. The eve of the world's greatest battle. Napoleon sends a messenger to Grouchy. 8. Wellington preparing his lines for the battle. 9. The fateful morn.

10. Wellington sends a messenger to Blücher at Wavre. 11. Wellington and his generals. 12. Wellington's messenger ambushed by Ney's troops. 13. Napoleon re-inforces his troops at La-Haye Sainte. 14. The British skirmishers. 15. Wellington changes the position of his lines. 16. Wellington re-inforces his lines at Hougoumont. 17. Napoleon surveying his position on the high ground of Hougoumont. 18. The famous 92d Lancers. 19. On June 18th Prince Jerome opens the famous struggle with an attack on Hougoumont.

20. The famous Ford between Frichersmont and La-Hayes Sainte. 21. Blücher, at Wavre, holding his ground against Grouchy's attack. 22. The skirmish at the Ford. 23. Charge of the 92d. 24. Napoleon changing his position at Hougoumont. 25. Blücher hard pressed by Grouchy. 26. The Scotch Lancers. 27. The struggle at Hougoumont, a position taken and retaken fifteen times during the battle. 28. Charge of the Scotch Highlanders. 29. Wellington re-inforcing his position on his left flank.

30. Blücher, having defeated Grouchy at Wavre, hastens to Wellington's aid. 31. Four o'clock at La-Haye Sainte. 32. Blücher arrives at the Ford. 33. The Highlanders victorious. 34. Napoleon's troops losing ground at La-Haye Sainte. 35. The fight for a gun. 36. Wellington encourages the Scotch soldiers. 37. The death of Pritchard. 38. Napoleon realizes that the end is near. 39. Napoleon sees the Old Guard repulsed.

40. Napoleon retreats from La Belle Alliance. 41. Blücher crumples up Napoleon's left flank. 42. The French, attacked by Landt's entire brigade, break in disorderly panic. 43. Conquered at last! 44. The meeting of Blücher and Wellington at La Belle Alliance. 45. The exile of Napoleon.

Napoleon attributed his defeat to the failure of Marshal Grouchy to keep Blücher from reinforcing Wellington, and it is now conceded by the majority of critics that this is correct. It is also generally conceded that Napoleon would have defeated Wellington by 4 p. m. on the afternoon of June 18th if it had not been for Blücher's reinforcements. The British, knowing as early as 2 p. m., that Blücher was approaching, held on, bearing blow after blow with dogged resolution till the German troops arrived on the field of battle. Had Grouchy placed his force of 35,000 men between the British and Prussian armies, Napoleon would have won the battle of Waterloo.

The Allies lost about 22,000, the French about 35,000 besides many prisoners. The rout was so complete and the disaster of Napoleon so decisive that "Waterloo" is proverbial for a final and deciding blow.

The screen production of the Battle of Waterloo was by no means easy of accomplishment. In the main this momentous military struggle has been carried out with stirring realism. It was a happy idea to throw the military maps on the screen when either Napoleon or Wellington wish to give their generals strategic directions. This gives the spectators a comparatively clear idea as to the military tactics resorted to by both sides. Otherwise many of the scenes would have had no particular significance from the spectator's point of view.

There is plenty of "battle and sudden death" in the course of the five reels, but there are also many touching incidents of a dramatic order that stand out from the ordinary incidents of military carnage. The most notable scene in this respect is the final charge of Napoleon's famous Old Guard. The defeated army is retreating in disorder from the field save the four battalions of the Guard, who form into a square and, fighting stubbornly to the last, perish almost to a man. They die but won't surrender.

Another touching scene is that of the British and German soldiers (many of whom are wounded and dying), when they cheer Wellington and Blücher after the victory has been announced.

DANIEL IN THE LIONS' DEN

The Life of Daniel

The Vitagraph Company has completed an effective feature in two reels entitled "The Life of Daniel." This feature is exceedingly well staged, and will no doubt appeal to a large class of spectators throughout the country. The principal episodes in Daniel's career are presented as a pictureplay adapted from the biblical narrative by the Rev. Madison C. Peters.

The opening scene is supposed to occur in the third year of the reign of Jehoiakim, King of Judah. The city of Jerusalem is besieged by Nebuchadnezzar, king of Babylon, and Daniel is brought as a captive to Babylon with Shadrach, Meshach and Abednego, who belong to the tribe of Judah. Ashpenaz, the master of the eunuchs, is commanded by the king to select from the captives in the prison certain of the children of Israel skilful in all wisdom and cunning in all knowledge, who are to be taught the learning and the tongue of the Chaldeans. Among those selected are Daniel, Shadrach, Meshach and Abednego, who have ten times more understanding and wisdom than all the astrologers and magicians in the king's realm. Daniel has understanding in all visions and dreams and is the only man in all the land of Chaldea who is able to make known and interpret to King Nebuchadnezzar the great dream that troubles his spirit.

Then the king makes Daniel a great man, and his three brothers are made governors over the province of Babylon. But when they have risen to favor, and Daniel sits in the gate of the king, jealous conspirators plot against the four children of Judah. These conspirators induce the king to set up in Babylon a monstrous, golden image which all must fall down and worship at the sound of the music, or on their refusal, they are to be cast into the midst of the fiery, burning furnace.

On the day when all the princes, the governors and the captains, the judges, the treasurers, the counsellors, the sheriffs and all the rulers of the provinces and all the people are gathered together for the dedication of the image, Daniel is away upon a mission. Shadrach, Meshach and Abednego, stand among the prostrate multitude, and fail to fall down and worship the golden image that Nebuchadnezzar, the king, had set up. The king, in his rage and fury, commands the mighty men of his army to cast them into the burning furnace, but a phantom form "like unto the Son of God" appears among the three that are cast in the furnace, and they walk in the midst of the fire without harm from the flames. Then Nebuchadnezzar stands at the mouth of the burning fiery furnace and bids Shadrach, Meshach and Abednego come forth, and the king praises their God before all his people. This is the climax of the first part of the "Life of Daniel."

In the opening scene of the second part, Darius, the successor of Nebuchadnezzar and Belshazzar, has become the King of the Chaldeans. He has set over the kingdom one hundred and twenty princes and over them three presidents, of whom Daniel is the first. The princes render accounts to the presidents, and Daniel as a faithful servant to the King, insists that the King receive the revenues due him. The other two presidents and the princes, being angered at this, seek in vain to find some fault against Daniel.

It happens, however, that the king is fascinated by a woman of great beauty and charm, and she is favored with the king's love. The princes bribe her to cause the king to sign a royal decree that whosoever shall ask a petition of any God or man for thirty days save from the king, shall be cast into the den of lions. So the royal favorite approaches the king when he is presiding at a great banquet and offers him goblets of strong wine. Finally, when the king is overcome with the wine, she places the tablet of the decree before him, and he signs it without knowing its contents.

The next day Daniel is found on his knees praying to his God, and he is brought before the king. The king does not remember that he signed the decree and wishes to deliver Daniel from the princes, but they remind him that his decree may not be changed, saying, "Know, O King, that the law of the Medes and the Persians is, that no decree nor statute whch the king ordaineth may be changed."

Then Daniel is cast into the den of lions. According to the Vitagraph press representative, "the lions are fierce and hungry and when Daniel is thrown into their midst, they growl and show their teeth, but soon they are quiet and gentle as little kittens and they look up into Daniel's face with love. Daniel knows that his God has tamed the hungry lions and he lies down in their midst and sleeps. The next morning the king and all the princes come to the cage, and when the king sees that Daniel is delivered he is exceedingly glad, and he commands that he should be brought out of the den. Then the king blesses Daniel, but for the men who accused him he commands that they be cast into the lions, and when they are cast in, the lions devour their flesh and break all their bones in pieces and the people wonder and tremble at the power of the God of Israel!"

Could anything be more Vitagraphic! As for Charles Kent, that sterling actor and stage director who appears as Daniel in the second part of the piece, he has certainly proved himself the premier heroic histrion of the American picture stage. What is a lion more or less? He makes a pillow of one of them! Who is Bosco, the lion tamer, compared to Charles Kent?

Hard Cash

The Edison Company are about to release "Hard Cash," a two-reel feature adapted from Charles Reade's well-known novel of that name. The novel was originally published in 1863 as "Very Hard Cash," and is an alleged exposure of the abuses of private insane asylums in England and the statutes under which they were sheltered.

It is the most severe exposition of the oppression that may exist in a private lunatic asylum that has ever been written. It ended the irresponsible private asylum in England, and it made the treatment of the insane by severity almost an impossibility.

The story of the screen version of "Hard Cash," as presented in the Edison films, necessarily does not cover all the incidents related in the novel, but the incidents selected form a story of absorbing interest.

At the outset we learn that Captain David Dodd, of the good ship Agra, has arrived at home carrying with him fourteen thousand pounds in hard cash, after nearly losing the money in a fierce battle with pirates and again during a violent storm. The captain deposits his fortune in Hardie's bank, a conservative institution with an ironclad reputation.

Unhappily the captain's sense of security does not last long. Richard Hardie, the president of the bank, having been caught in the maelstrom of speculation, is on the verge of bankruptcy. Learning of the danger to his hard-earned cash, Dodd returns to the bank on the same afternoon, and demands its return. Hardie refuses on the ground that it is after business hours, and Dodd falls to the ground in a fit of apoplexy. His mind is unbalanced, and he is removed to an insane asylum.

Alfred Hardie, Richard's son, is deeply in love with Captain Dodd's daughter, Julia. This does not meet with the approval of Richard Hardie, who wishes his son to marry an heiress. Alfred overhears the dispute between Dodd and Richard Hardie, and, outraged at his father's duplicity, demands that the money be returned.

JULIA'S COLLAPSE

With the money safely in his hands, and Dodd in an insane asylum, the elder Hardie is too hard pressed to let anything stand in the way of his urgent needs. Spurred on by an unconquerable ambition, he enters into an agreement with a dishonest doctor. He has Alfred inveigled from home and incarcerated in the same asylum with old Captain Dodd.

However, there is another source of danger with which Hardie had not reckoned. Skinner, an old confidential clerk in his office, had slyly taken the receipt from Dodd's hand as he lay in his apoplectic fit. Hardie, who confidently believes that the receipt has been lost, is stunned when Skinner informs him that it is in his possession, and coolly demands blackmail.

Meanwhile Alfred and Captain Dodd have been suffering all the torments of the outrageous insane asylum system of the day. At last they manage to escape together during a fire, and escape to the seacoast. The sight of salt water restores the sailor's memory and he recalls the loss of his fourteen thousand pounds.

Skinner's opportune death and repentence eventually puts the receipt for Dodd's "hard cash" in Alfred's hands. Together he and Dodd go to the elder Hardie's office, where they find a man overcome with remorse and shame, who is only too willing to make every restitution in his power.

The enterprising cast includes Charles Ogle as Captain Dood, Gertrude McCoy as Julia, Bigelow Cooper as Richard Hardie, Richard Tucker as Alfred Hardie, May Abbey as Mrs. Dodd and Barry O'Moore as Skinner.

"Hard Cash" is likely to live up to its title, so far as the Edison treasury and the box-offices of exhibitors are concerned.

Charles Wallach, who has been identified with the motion picture industry for some time, is connected with the True Feature Film Company, of New York, with offices in the World's Tower Building, 110 West Fortieth street. Mr. Wallach is popular with the trade and a good fellow for special feature men to become acquainted with.

STUDIO GOSSIP

Mr. Stout, the comptroller of the Universal's Western business, is being congratulated upon the arrival of a little daughter.

Miss Gertrude Coghlan was called to duty as a leading lady of The Selig Polyscope Company, last week, in a piquant and diminutive drama highly charged with excitement, entitled "The Duchess and the Burglar."

* * * *

Pearl White, the popular star of Crystal films, returned from Europe last week, and is now again back at her work with the Crystal. Miss White spent about eight weeks abroad and visited all of the studios on the other side, making a special study of the acting methods employed in them.

Marshal Farnum, the youngest brother in the famous Farnum family, who was concerned with Dustin Farnum in the production of "The Spoilers" in California, is now listed among the producers at The Selig Polyscope Company in Chicago. He has had a long stage experience and should grace the new position with credit.

* * * *

Ed J. Brady, who will join Wallace Reid's company, is well known on the vaudeville circuits, both for his Jewish impersonations and his "rag" singing. He has written quite a number of successful songs. He has had a long experience in the pictures, having acted with the Powers, the Vitagraph, the Republic and Kay Bee companies. He left the last to join the Universal.

* * * *

Dorothy Davenport is back again in the "Universal" fold after being with Selig and Kalem. She will play opposite to Wallace Reid, who starts producing on his own account next week. He will write most of his own photoplays, too. He has a delightful little leading woman, for Dorothy is a great favorite with a discerning public; her work is always conscientious and carefully thought out.

Kathie Fischer is another Universal child actress at the Hollywood Pacific Coast Studios. She is clever and closely resembles her aunt, Margarita Fischer. She is acting under the direction of her uncle, Harry Pollard. In a scene recently she had been spanked. She looked up at her uncle Harry and said, "I don't think we'll rehearse this scene, Uncle."

When Robert Leonard's arm was badly skinned during a film fight with Harry Tenbrook in which both roll down an embankment, it was feared that blood poisoning would set in. Just previous to this, in another scene, both his arms had been badly burnt. Several visits were made to the Universal hospital and Bob appears on the road to a speedy recovery.

During the production of the Reliance feature, "Targets of Fate," Director Edgar Lewis used a large ocean steamship for several exciting scenes, which, among other things, called for the launching of the lifeboats.

The steamer was about to sail for foreign parts, and the steerage was packed with passengers who took a lively interest in the picture-making.

A number of the passengers were enthusiastic workers under Mr. Lewis's direction, but the lowering of the lifeboats was too realistic for most of them, and a near panic was the result.

William Alder, the camera man with Milton H. Fahrney, is a student and fills all his private time experimenting. He has a model laboratory and states that he has the most complete photo-bacteriological outfit in the States. Mr. Alder has succeeded, for the first time in history he believes, in taking moving pictures of typhoid fever actually working in the blood. This has been done by eliminating the ultra-violet ray and sensitizing the film to the red rays. It is known that the violet ray kills the bacteria.

The Universal Film Manufacturing Company's latest movement in the West towards concentration and added efficiency is the securing of a long-time lease upon a large block of ground at Hollywood, Cal. It measures one hundred and twelve thousand square feet without the private road contemplated and the alleyways. On this block of ground will be a series of stages, each one much larger than the average stage and fitted up with all the latest improvements. There will be added property rooms capable of holding great amounts of furniture and other necessary "props" which go towards effectiveness in the scenes. There will be additions to the mechanical and film departments, many more dressing-rooms, and new offices. The plans resemble those of a small townsite.

Miss Leonard's second appearance on the program of Warner's Features, Inc., will be in a story of New York life entitled "A Leaf In The Storm."

The Gene Gauntier Feature Players have reached Beaufort, Ireland, where they will produce three-reel Irish subjects for the program of Warner's Features, Inc. Additional players have been taken from London to Beaufort where the company will proceed with their outdoor scenes as long as the weather permits.

It is not often that one meets a person with a memory so thorough as that of the versatile leading woman of the second of the "Flying A" companies, Miss Winifred Greenwood. Reading the script once will give her details of scene artion and numbers of scenes as well. Her previous experience in directing her own companies makes her a most valuable aid to Director Ricketts.

It does not often happen that stories of actual experiences which take place in the studio during the producing of an important picture ever reaches the great army of photoplay fans, but there is a story from the Gauntier studio that is too good to be suppressed. For the closing scenes of "In the Power of a Hypnotist" it was necessary to secure a large snake of the Python variety which was to coil itself about the neck and arms of Miss Gauntier in order to add great realism to the scene.

His snakeship, having been borrowed from the Bronx Zoo, New York City, was taken to the Gauntier studio, and everything was in readiness to proceed with the final scenes. Jack J. Clark, who plays the role of detective in this three-reel drama just released by Warner's Features, Inc., attempted to remove the snake from its box, and in doing so, he allowed it to slip from his hands, and immediately there was a wild scramble of those who had been engaged for the production. Had it not been for the cool head of Miss Gauntier, there would have been a panic. She, however, seized the snake in both hands, one hand gripping it tightly behind the head, and the other, the wriggling tail. Miss Gauntier later showed her courage in allowing the snake to crawl about her feet, waist and neck.

Playing to widely separated localities for the sake of true "atmosphere," James Cruze and Mignon Anderson, leads in Thanhouser's Plot Against the Governor," wrere just slightly fagged out when the picture was completed They were filmed in action at the Capitol, Albany, in studio scenes at New Rochelle, and at the State prison, Sing Sing, for the first time in its history. Never, it is stated, have such "close-up" views of the great jail been taken, and through it all Miss Anderson wasn't a bit scared, although some of the prisoners looked tough enough to bite a piece out of her ear. In the "Daughter Worth While," another of Director Heffron's pictures, the little "Thanhouser Blonde" is shown in a quite perilous stunt. This is nothing less than racing an auto against a Jersey Central train, and the film shows more than flashes of the race, too. The little "lead" had never driven an automobile before, and took lessons especially for this picture. It was a great big touring car in which she outspeeded the train. In this picture she also races a yacht.

A three-reel Western comedy, one every two weeks, will be probably the next addition to the program of the Exclusive Supply Corporation. Negotiations are now under way between Joseph R. Miles, general manager of the Exclusive, and the owner of a widely known brand of established reputation. Such a brand would much strengthen the already strong program, including as it now does the cream of the European and American makes.

The sparring for choice territory between the Exclusive and buyers still goes on merrily. During the course of the week numerous exchange men and prospective exchange men have gone into the details of the proposition that is now in prosperous sway in various parts of the country, have gone over exhaustively in the Candler Building offices.

Among those in New York for that purpose during the week were Charles Zetler, of the Edwards-Zetler Feature Film Co., of Dayton, Ohio, and E. T. Peter, of Dallas, Texas, who purposes taking the program for Southern territory and who will probably open offices in Atlanta and New Orleans.

A. A. Weiland, of the Weiland Film Company, of Pittsburgh, reports that his success with the Exclusive Program in his territory encourages him to take Ohio, the adjacent State.

J. L. Warner has gone to Cincinnati to open the twenty-second Warner Exchange. Announcement of the permanent address of the new Cincinnati exchange will be made at an early date. This step has been taken by Warner's Features, Inc., in order to take care of the rush of business which is anticipated with a weekly program of three and four reel features. Exhibitors in southern Ohio and the northern parts of Kentucky and Tennessee will receive their service out of Cincinnati.

A palatial theatre, seating 900 people, was opened at Los Angeles recently. It is under the control of the Tally Amusement Company, with E. T. Tally as president, and F. J. Kawkins as vice-president. It will be known as the Alhambra, and will be devoted to the Universal program as is Mr. Tally's other theatre, the popular College on Hill street. On the exterior of the Alhambra there are 1,250 electric lights. The furniture and fittings are magnificent and comfortable.

The Two-Reel Story

A GREAT deal is being said these days pro and con anent the two-reel and three-reel stories. The development of the multiple reel or feature story has arrived, but do not permit your interest in this fact to cause you to forget that the development of the single-reel story remains as important as of yore—if not more so. "The heights by great men reached and kept were not attained by sudden flight," and so while reading of this and that market open for two-reel stuff, do not forget that you should first be able to successfully market single-reel plots before endeavoring to attain "greater heights." Edison, Kalem, Lubin, Universal, Selig—in fact, nearly every film manufacturing company—are now in the market for real two-reels. However, real two-reels do not mean real one-reels stretched into two-reels. Extraordinary plots are needed for two-real subjects. Plots that can be readily developed in one thousand feet are not desired for the two-thousand-feet productions. Many of our correspondents, whom we have reason to know are having difficulty to market stories of the single reel, have recently changed the tenor of their inquiries and are asking all about the markets for two and three-reel subjects. Our advice to these writers is to leave the lengthier stories severely alone. It is no easy task to evolve the single-reel plot, as many have discovered, and the ambitious writer should first master the first step before aspiring to a higher walk in life. The names of the authors will in all probability appear with most of the two and three-reel productions. Of necessity, the author's name will count for something, and should have an advertising value. All padding should be avoided. It is possible to write a plot as valuable for a two-reel story as it is for one. However, there must be more to the plot and to the story, and there is an opportunity to use a larger cast of characters. A majority of the two-reel stories now being released have been taken from some stirring novel and have been prepared in the studio. Such authors, however, as Mrs. Brieul and Miss Justice are specializing in the multiple-reel market with great success. One completed scenario is favored in most studios. Edison does not even require that the script be divided by the author into the first and second reels. The author, nevertheless, should know where he means the first reel to end and the second reel to begin. Some number their scenes consecutively from one to the final, while others number the scenes in each reel separately. The former system is our favorite. There is a market for two-reel stuff; also, there is a mighty good market for one-reel stuff. A large number of writers seem to be hastening, illy prepared, into the two-reel field of endeavor. Hence, don't you think it would be wisdom for you to just keep pegging away trying to improve your one-reel output with a sneaking idea that this particular market may grow better and better?

Selig Follows Suit

Universal recently announced that names of deserving authors would appear on posters. Selig now adds to the joy of authorship by coming in where the water is fine. Word comes from the executive offices of the Selig Polyscope Company, in Chicago, to the effect that they will hereafter incorporate the names of the more popular scenario writers in the announcement title of their principal releases. Some twenty-five or thirty Selig contributors have already been accorded this honor. Recognition of the scenario writer has been agitated pro and con for several years, reads the Selig statement, and the company will undoubtedly receive much praise for its pioneer work in this line. We like this latest announcement concerning authors' credit, but would remark that not only the names of the "more popular writers" should be credited, but also the names of those writers not so widely known, provided the latter submit meritorious work.

"Literary Hoboes"

Please do not become a "literary hobo." It is a new term that came to us in yesterday's mail. It is a good phrase, too. A "literary hobo" is the man or woman who makes it a business to ascertain the home addresses of editors and critics and then bombards them with manuscripts. Sometimes return postage is enclosed with those scripts, and more frequently the return postage is conspicuous by its absence. The letter of the "literary hobo" starts out something like this:

> "Forgive me for troubling you at this time, but I am confined to the house by the smallpox, and so have the time to select one or two of my photoplays, which I forward to you. Kindly criticise them at once and tell me where I can sell them. They have been submitted to the 'Squedunk' and the 'Doormat' editors, who returned them with the statement that 'plot was too slight.' I read the 'Warcry' and, seeing your writings therein, feel at liberty to write you. I am heart and soul in photoplays. I evolve plots in my dreams," etc., etc.

The "literary hobo" should remember that the trade journal department editor, writer, or critic is a busy man; that if he should take the time to criticise and revise all scripts submitted to him, he would have no leisure to earn money to buy his bread and butter. The "literary hobo," seemingly, does not wish to stand alone. He or she has no pride; they are "literary loafers" and desire that others, who have won advancement through heart-breaking labor, should devote all their time to doing the drudgery the "literary hobo" is too lazy to perform. Without exception, the editors who are inflicted with this avalanche of "literary hoboism" have made it possible for many to succeed. When those editors who are now so coolly ordered to do the hard work for others started in the field there were no departments devoted to their interests. They were obliged to grope about in the darkness and learn the pointers they now so generously present to their fellows. The "literary hobo" should be thankful that he is living and working in the present day and age. What he would have done five years ago is an interesting question. If every petitioner were really afflicted as is almost invariably stated in the first line of the tearful letter, we would long ago have contracted leprosy and all its attendant evils. We like to hear from our readers and try and answer all questions promptly when return postage is enclosed. However, we have repeatedly stated that we cannot criticise and revise scripts. In the first instance, we have not the time to do it and give our other duties proper attention. In the second place, it is best for the beginner to stand alone. We are thankful to state that only a very small minority of the writers now starting in the photoplay field of endeavor are "literary hoboes."

A Victim Writes

Here is a characteristic letter from a "victim" of a fake correspondence school. Can you blame us for opposing these grafters? "I am a victim of the 'fake correspondence school.' I did not think anybody cared about those things until I read what you have had to say. They took my money and did not even acknowledge the check for two weeks, and when I wrote to inquire about it, they grew impudent and ugly. I sold a story before I finished with a Sheridan Road concern, and they wrote me some stormy letters because I would not take the 'course.'" We were instrumental recently in having the sum of $30 refunded to a St. Louis woman. She had fed the money in instalments into the maw of a fake professor, who later vacated his "Photoplay Building" and flitted away to parts unknown. The Post-Office Department located the man and he refunded his ill-gotten gains. He has started in business again and we have reason to believe he will not continue long.

Introducing Characters

A Milwaukee correspondent writes: "For some time I have been studying the films in regard to the fact that I am now bringing to your attention and I am sure that you must have also noticed it. Many writers are 'up in the air' about introducing their characters so I would like to have you publish the following article: The system employed by most writers at the present time appears to be to introduce all leading characters in the first few scenes, whether they are needed in the early part of the story or not. In my estimation this style is wrong as these characters are often dropped and later brought abruptly into the picture, and in many cases, are confused with the other leads. A character in a pictureplay should be introduced at the time it begins to take part in the action, as characters are in novels and plays of the speaking stage. An example of successfully bringing a character into a picture near the end was the recent Lubin release 'When Tony Pawned Louisa,' wherein a pawnbroker, who later proved the hero, was introduced after almost two-thirds of the reel had been run off. I recall a two-reel Kalem war drama in which one of the female leads was introduced at the beginning of the second reel. If introduced with a proper leader I think it adds to the charm of a play to have the characters appear at the proper time. This does not mean the switching of the lead to an unknown character in the last scene as many young authors are inclined to do. I trust you will give this a place in your department as I believe it will help others."

The Hall of Fame

Capt. Leslie T. Peacocke, editor and author, wrote his libretto for Annette Kellerman with pen and ink.

Benjamin Schulberg is being given the credit with writing near the ideal pictureplay in Gem's "Under Two Flags." He received a fancy price for the script.

Mrs. Betta Breuil, formerly Vitagraph editress, is engaged in writing two and three-reel stuff and her name on the film is a part of the contracts.

Our leading pictureplaywrights promise to make Shaw and the rest sit up and take notice. Following in the footsteps of Capt. Peacocke a little bird whispers that Miss Maibelle Heikes Justice may shortly issue forth with a three-act play.

Edwin La Roche writes the answers department for the Motion Picture Story Magazine and he takes a beautiful photo, girls!

A. W. Thomas, new editor of the Photoplay Magazine, lives in Cleveland and when he is not dabbling in pictureplay lore, he sells bonds.

From the "Literary Belt"

Minnesota has its wheat belt, Illinois its corn belt, but there is but one literary belt known to posterity and that is—Indiana. We always like to get letters from Indiana, and here's one from Byron C. Wainwright, of Rushville: "For over nine months I have read every issue of the News, particularly the 'Plots and Plays' Department, and, since I am a picture playwright, I have found the department interesting and helpful. I have found a market for two of my scenarios, selling to Biograph and Kalem, but neither has been released yet. How long is it after a play is accepted that it is released? In the near future will you please insert an article in the department discussing 'checked' rejection slips, and also the use of simplified spelling in scenarios? I believe above discussions will be helpful to other readers." There is no stated length of time for release after acceptance of script. We have received checks after the play we have written has been released, and, in one instance, a year passed before the script we were paid for was released as a picture. Many things are taken into consideration in releasing. We recently discussed the "checked" rejection slip and see but little benefit in the system. Use the Queen's English as properly as possible and avoid simplified spelling. We admit a weakness for spelling though as tho', but we stop right then and there.

Stop It!

What the ——. Say, don't you know better than to try and work the secret order "gag" on long-suffering editors? There are a number of unusually ambitious script writers who insist in writing to editors in strictly a fraternal spirit. In so doing they undoubtedly violate the first principles of the lodge to which they belong. If you happen to belong to the same fraternal order as an editor you know of, what has that to do with the scripts you submit? Are you presuming on your fraternal brotherhood to endeavor to influence the editor to purchase? An editor or two has complained to us regarding this little habit of a coterie. And then only yesterday we received a letter asking us if we belonged to the order of Thus and So because, if we did belong, the writer was confident that we would violate our rule and criticise his favorite script which "had been unaccountably rejected by several companies." For heaven's sake, have pride enough to stand alone and do not presume on any lodge or other order to gain influence. More study and labor and less "signs of distress" will make a hit with us and with others.

Pertinent Pointers

Writing is hard labor. The majority of literary workers dread the drudgery inseparable with the profession.

Don't skip all over the universe before you fully place your characters and avoid the sub-plot.

Only send out your best, it pays in the end. What is worth doing is worth doing well.

"The best way to learn how to write is to do newspaper work for awhile," says Thomas Nelson Page. He was formerly a reporter.

Submit one script at a time to one company. Two or three may suggest to the editor that you are submitting stories rejected by others.

Use no dialogue in writing a pictureplay. Sometimes a striking sentence in sub-title may add to the realism. Players frequently invent conversation to fit the situation but they do not use profane or indecent language, despite the favorite gossip anent the deaf mute's statement.

Condensation, as we recommend it in writing pictureplays, does not mean the fewest number of words possible, it means the fewest number possible to clearly convey your meaning. Don't ramble. Use plain English. Avoid the use of big words, they will not impress the editor.

There is a plot is almost everything. What is needed is a trained imagination to see it. Exercise your inventive genius. A bump of originality is located somewhere in your cranium. When the washwoman brings the clothing, maybe a plot comes along with her. A washwoman gave us an idea long sought for. We wrote a two-reel story about the washwoman (poor soul!) and how the children contracted scarlet fever through the wash. It was quickly purchased by a manufacturer of laundry machinery and used for a commercial.

Be businesslike. In so doing you will command the respect of those with whom you deal. Learn how to conduct your correspondence in a businesslike way and with businesslike directness. When you write to the mail order house for a new piano you do not give the concern the impression that you are a "parlor cut-up" and just cannot refrain from inflicting a merry quip. No. You write as briefly and as clearly as possible. Follow the same methods with the film editor. He cares little for your funny sayings, or your personal misfortunes. He has troubles enough of his own.

Don't argue that the "outside" writer is the victim of discrimination. He is not. If he can do his work as well as the staff or contract writer he stands just as good a show, if not a better one. The conscientious "outside" writer, it is true, has been somewhat handicapped by having his offering between the envelope containing the effusion of the correspondence "school" graduate, and the plagiarist's plot, but editors soon learn to know just who is who. Work to make your offers as good as the best and some day you'll draw as many sales as the man or woman you now envy.

Writing the Photoplay

J. Berg Esenwein and Arthur Leeds, one a master of short story writing, and the other a master of photoplay writing, collaborated in writing a volume of 174 pages under the above title. The work is meritorious in every respect. It exhaustively treats of every step in the art of plot building and will prove invaluable for the literary craftsman as well as the beginner. The volume is embellished with pictures of studio scenes, etc., which add to its attractiveness. There is also a complete index and appendix. The authors of this new book are competent to teach and we consider the volume as another merited acquisition to the slowly growing library on moving picture subjects. The book is gilt-edged in its make-up, and in its contents, and comes in red cloth at two dollars a copy. Worth twice as much. MIATT-PATENTS DEPARTMENT

Recent Inventions, Letters Patent, Trade-Marks, Designs, Copyrights, Etc., Relating to the Art, Digested and Reported Exclusively for the Moving Picture News by Geo. Wm. Miatt, Patent Lawyer and Expert, Temple Court, cor. of Nassau and Beekman Streets, New York City

"The Oldfield Bill that has been reported by the Committee on Patents to the House of Representatives at Washington is a most serious attack upon our patent system." So said Frederick P. Fish in a recent address before the American Bar Association at Montreal, Canada. He further said, "Experience has demonstrated that no form of reward so fitted the achievement, was so productive of advantage to the community and was attended by so few disadvantages as the grant to an inventor of a monopoly of his invention for a limited time. While many other forms of reward have been suggested (such suggestions were made at the convention which adopted our national constitution), they have nowhere been adopted as part of the machinery of society. Everywhere some form of exclusive control for a limited time has been recognized as the best way of dealing with the matter. The encouragement of patent protection does not alone stimulate the inventor to intellectual effort; it excites to strenuous effort a long line of intermediaries, capitalists, investors, business administrators, licensees and users who work with or under the patent and whose co-operation is virtually necessary that the invention may not be confined to a paper description, but may actually get into use. After all this line of public servants has been rewarded, the ultimate consumers get their advantage from the invention, even during the term of the patent, in the form of less cost, added facilities, increased comfort and greater convenience; and their gain, while the patent is in force, is undoubtedly in almost every case infinitely greater than that of those who profit directly from working under the patent. Of course, when the patent expires the invention is free to all. Until 1888 Switzerland had no patent law. It was argued that, situated as Switzerland was, in the heart of the industrial world, with a docile and intelligent population trained by an admirable system of education, and with the great advantages by way of water-power which the country possessed, it could progress more rapidly if its citizens were all free to appropriate for the national industries the ideas, patented or unpatented, of the rest of the world, without the grant of any monopoly to individuals in Switzerland itself. This policy was, however, found to be short-sighted and ill-advised. The Swiss were not encouraged to invent. More than that, they were not encouraged to adopt and introduce inventions. They did not develop the desire to improve. Because they had no patent system, their industries did not advance satisfactorily. Under the stress of the necessity that inventions should be fostered in the community, if industrial progress in competition with that in patent-granting countries was to be secured, a patent law was adopted in 1888. Since then there have been over fifty thousand patents issued in Switzerland and her industrial progress has been marked."

John Lewison of New York City, in his Patent No. 1,071,559, sets forth a method of utilizing the blue of a blue-print as one of the primary spectrum colors in making colored photographic reproductions. A negative of a colored object is made on an ordinary orthochromatic photographic plate, having as a basis the silver emulsion, and preferably using a yellow colored screen, in order to obtain the best color values. From such a negative an ordinary blue-print is made, which blue-print will, of course, show up the different shade values in their proper proportions. This blue-print is then colored either wholly or in part by applying dye or paint, but preferably red eosin and aurantia, or a mixture of the two, to modify the blue to form any of the spectrum colors, the blue coloration showing through the applied washes with more or less intensity, depending upon the extent of the coating wash. Should it be desired to make all or any material portion of the print either red or yellow, or any other color, in which blue is not used, the blue of the blue print is either wholly or partially dissolved by a weak solution of nitrate of silver which will fix the colors, and, at the same time, will gradually bleach out the blue. Further, the blue-print may be washed with this solution if it is desired to merely weaken the blue color of the object, after the eosin or aurantia has been applied, or a mixture of the two, to form any of the spectrum colors involved in these two primary colors. Should it be desired to restore the blue locally or entirely, or to darken the blue color, the blue-print is respectively touched up or bathed with a solution of ferric chlorid, and this ferric chlorid may be applied in stronger solution or in succession until that part of the object is practically black. Instead of painting or bathing the entire print in any one of these colors certain spaces may be touched up locally, in order to either darken or lighten those particular parts. In addition to this local treatment, the entire print may be submerged in either of these primary colors, or any combination of the same, to give the different color background and a different tint to the entire picture

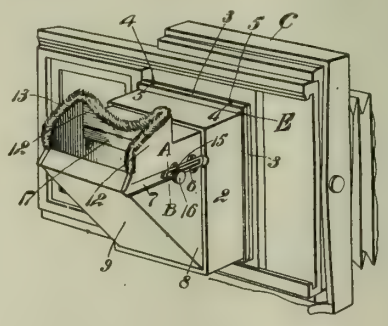
The accompanying perspective view shows a focusing attachment for cameras set forth in Patent No. 1,070,005 issued to Wm. Henry Boehler, of Tiffin, Ohio, who designs to provide a simple, durable and inexpensive device easily applied to the ground glass screen frame; to provide a mirror that will reflect the image from the screen right side up; to dispense with a focusing cloth, and permit the image to be viewed by a person standing upright, etc. The device comprises a frame formed at one end of a box 2, said frame having a flange 3, extending from the top and sides thereof and provided with openings 4 designed to receive pins 5 extending upwardly from the frame E of the focusing screen. Longitudinally slotted guide strips 6 are secured to the inner faces of the sides of box 2 and extend rearwardly therefrom. These strips are adapted to project into grooves 7 formed within the side walls of an adjustable boxlike section 8 which is slidably fitted within the box 2. The bottom of the section 8 is preferably inclined, as shown at 9, and supports a mirror arranged at 45 degrees to the screen F. A sight opening is formed in the section 8 between the upper end of the bottom 9 and the rear end of the top of the section, this sight opening being surrounded by flange 12 constituting an eye shield, the said flanges being preferably provided with a cushion 13 adapted to contact with the face of the operator.



The annexed perspective shows a new film package and holder, the invention of William T. Price of Minneapolis, Minn. (Patent No. 1,070,843) designed for loading in daylight. A is a plate holder of usual construction, with parallel sides 2 and 3 and end 4. 9 is an envelope with extension 16. 8 are flaps hinged by flexible material 10. 12 is a photographic film. The claim is for a plate holder having slide slots therein and a hinged section upon one end, an adapter fitting freely in said holder having a catch and a guard secured to one end, a film packet having an envelope slidable in said slots and a film mount slidable into and out of said envelope, having a tongue adapted to be engaged by said catch and a flap adapted to close over said envelope, said guard beng adapted to receive and hold the flap end of said mount and envelope to exclude light from the envelope when said flap is turned up over said guard and said hinged section being adapted to hold the free end of said flap down upon the holder when it is turned back over said guard and away from over said envelope.

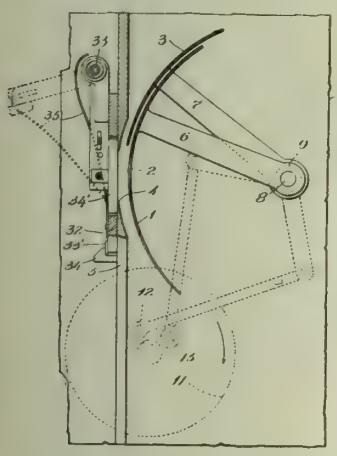
The Directors Film Corporation, of New York, N. Y., has applied for registration of the trade mark herewith shown for moving picture films, claiming use "since on or about the 24th of February, 1913, and previous to that time for a period greater than eight weeks."

It is a well known fact that in taking pictures of objects moving at a high rate of speed, the images in the individual pictures are frequently more or less blurred. Geo. W. Bingham, of New York, N. Y., states in his patent No. 1,068,208 that he has found by experience that better results are obtained and that a perfect image of a swiftly moving object may be secured if the exposure is made gradually instead of all at once as is the customary practice. Accordingly, the invention consists in utilizing a shutter provided with a light aperture therein, and moving the said shutter past the exposure opening of the camera so that all portions of the sensitized film framed in said exposure opening will be progressively exposed. The shutter is usually in the form of an oscillatory blade, having a horizontally disposed slot therein, forming the light aperture, and in connection with this blade some means are employed for closing the light aperture during one of the oscillatory movements of the main shutter blade. If desired, the main shutter blade may be moved first downward to expose one picture and then upward to expose the next picture, but preferably in order to obtain greater speed and regularity in action, the exposure is made only upon one stroke, usually the downward stroke of the shutter, and means are provided to close the light aperture in the main shutter blade upon the upward or idle movement of the shutter. This light aperture closing means is in the form of a supplementary shutter blade which acts to open the light aperture on one stroke of the main shutter blade, and to close the aperture upon the other stroke of the blade. The illustration is a sectional elevation of the shutter mechanism as applied to a moving picture camera. The essential elements are a main shutter blade 1, provided with a light aperture 2 therein, and means for alternately opening and closing the said light aperture, preferably in the form of a supplementary shutter 3. These two shutter blades are mounted so as to be capable of an oscillatory movement in front of the exposure opening 4. The inventor claims the combination of a shutter associated with the exposure opening, said shutter having a light aperture therein, means for oscillating the shutter in front of the exposure opening, and means for alternately opening and closing the light aperture in the shutter.



Three eminently satisfactory moving pictures of that elusive phenomenon, the aurora borealis, were recently obtained by the Swedish expedition to northern latitudes. The kinematograph was first tried for the purpose in 1910, but no satisfactory results were attained until this year. Nature (London) says, "As in 1910, a Kinematograph was employed to try to secure the changing phrases of the aurora; for the most part the auroral images were too faint. On three occasions, however, when the aurorae were very bright, consecutive exposures were given, lasting from 0.5 second to 1 second for each image. Another series of about 100 photographs was taken on April 8 with the Kinematograph, each exposure lasting about four seconds. These photographs demonstrate the great utility of this instrument, not only in obtaining consecutive features of the displays, but in securing ordinary photographs at the two stations. The communication is accompanied by two most interesting plates. . . . One of these reproduces four portions of the Kinematograph strip exposed on April 8 at Bossekop. These speak for themselves in indicating the valuable aid the Kinematograph brings to auroral studies. The gradual change in form and densitv of the filaments is clearly indicated. M. Stormer states that the results of this expedition will be published in considerable detail in a subsequent memoir, and the above brief summary is sufficient to show that the memoir will be a most valuable contribution to our knowledge of the aurora."

Geo. Wm. Hiatt

Herbert Miles and William Steiner, of the North American Film and International Film, are well-known in the film industry. Mr. Miles having been associated with the Malin Picture Distributing & Sales Company and later with the Republic Film Company, he also had a chain of exchanges throughout the country. Mr. Steiner is best known through his connections with the Yankee and Atlas brand of films, and also as an expert camera man. One of their first releases through the new company will be "Treasure Hunters Lost in Africa."

The accompanying photograph shows one of the trying incidents that Edwin August and his company encountered on their way to Azusa, California. They were a sorry looking lot when they reached their destination, after a long but eventful tour.

The company includes such clever people as Iva Shepard, Mollie Sherwood, Alice Rhodes, Chance and A. W. Caldeway. They will be located for a time at what is known as the Fallows Camp, which is right in the beautiful foothills and in the center of a picturesque district. Mr. August will put on several more two-reel photoplays, for which there has been a great demand.

THE VITAGRAPHERS GO TO WAR

A Real Live Battle in the Skies and on the Field of Action

Two hundred and fifty men of the Fourteenth State Militia Regiment, of Brooklyn, N. Y., have not gotten over their surprise from the thrilling experience they had while taking part in the producing of the big Vitagraph Company battle drama, "Warfare in the Skies." When they left their barracks in Brooklyn on Sunday, the 31st of August, in a special train bound for the Moisant Aviation Field, at Garden City, Long Island, they had an idea they were going to some sort of pink-tea outing, but when real work began and the battle was on, they quickly changed their minds. Speaking to A. V. Smith and Walter Ackerman, the two men who had charge of the work for the Vitagraph Company, one of the soldiers said: "I had rather take a chance in real warfare; I should feel safer." This man was thinking of his comrade who was thrown from his horse and severely wounded during one of the thrilling charges in the battle when two aviators from the enemy's camp swooped down over the regiment and hurled deadly bombs into the midst of the commanding officers, blowing them to smithereens.

The scene in which the aviators took part lasted just one-half hour and cost the Vitagraph Company more than $1,500. A much enjoyed episode in the day's program was the outdoor lunch served to the soldiers and actors by the Vitagraph Company on the battlefield under the open skies. It was just as it would have been in real warfare, the only difference being that the men got a much better lunch than they would have had if their officers had been on the alert for the rumble of cannon. They were on the alert, but they knew that they would be given a full hour before the call to arms again sounded.

The soldiers and the actors of the Vitagraph Company reached the battlefield at eight o'clock in the morning. The regiment was under the command of Major Donovan. After a short conference between the officers and directors, the battle began. It raged all day with increasing vigor until three-thirty in the afternoon, and with only one lull in the middle of the day for luncheon. It was not play. It was real work, but full of excitement and thrills. It was action from beginning to end, and it required strong nerves and muscles to stand the strain. When the two aviators appeared in the heavens over the heads of the fleeing soldiers and dropped the bombs into their midst, many of them blanched and shuddered; this was real warfare, indeed.

It was during one of the mad dashes across the field that the soldier who was hurt was thrown from his horse. He was riding in the front line of the charge. His horse stuck its foot in a bad hole, stumbled and fell. The trooper was thrown clear over the horse's head, right in front of the oncoming regiment. Those who were immediately behind saw him fall, and they luckily succeeded in swerving their horses to one side as they rode past, thus saving his life. The fallen soldier was wounded about the face and head. One ear was badly torn and his face severely bruised. He was attended by a doctor from the Vitagraph Company, who was on hand for just such an emergency. The doctor bandaged his face and sent him home. The soldier smiled ruefully as he walked from the field, and as he reached the side lines he said to a spectator: "I'm mighty thankful I did not lose a leg or an arm. No more 'movie' battles for me!"

The picture of "Warfare in the Skies" was directed by the Vitagraph director, Fred Thomson. Another scene is the clashing of two huge aeroplanes in contest for the mastery of the field. Like two great birds of prey, they came together with terrific force, smashing the machines into pieces, which scatter and fly through the air like so many feathers from these winged vehicles of modern battle. Aside from the ferocity of the scene, we cannot help but marvel at the immense amount of property destroyed and the great expense involved in producing scenes of this kind. This thought often comes to the mind of the person who sits quietly in the theatre, as the picture is run, but no one can thoroughly appreciate what it means to enact such scenes without they are actually upon the ground and have intimate knowledge of the great ingenuity, skill and research necessary to make them possible.

"IN THE BISHOP'S CARRIAGE"

Miriam Michelson's Famous Story, Produced by the Famous Players Film Company

"In the Bishop's Carriage," the famous story published by The Bobbs-Merrill Company, upon which a very successful and popular play has been based, will be released September 10th by the Famous Players Film Company. The film version of this noted subject presents Mary Pickford in the absorbing role of Nance, who with Fate as stage director plays many strange parts, until she eventually adopts a role that leads to love and happiness. The play is a fascinating drama of the underworld that approaches tragedy and ends in romance.

The story as told in the pictures introduces Nance Olden as an inmate of the Charity House. Falsely accused of theft and cruelly punished, she decides to rid herself forever of the matron's persecution. Pursued by the police, she takes refuge in the room of Tom Dorgan, the crook, where later he finds her. Both refugees from a doubtful justice, their common lot inspires them to establish a partnership in crime. After a daring theft of jewels, the loss of which is almost immediately discovered, Nance, in terrified despair, eludes the police by jumping into "the bishop's carriage." From this incident a chain of thrilling adventures progress, until Nance is again rescued from the police by the timely intervention of Obermuller, a theatrical manager, who is impressed with her mimic talents and who offers her a position on the stage and a chance to travel the straight road. Now occurs a bitter contest between Dorgan and Obermuller for the loyalty of Nance, which is culminated by the arrest and conviction of Tom. Nance's admiration for Obermuller ripens into a requited love, and she attains fame and fortune as an actress. And then a shadow of the past crosses her path. Tom escapes and returns to claim her; but his purpose is defeated by Obermuller.

Only once more is she tempted by the old fascination; only once more she steals—and then she really conquers her preying weakness, marries Obermuller and drinks the sweets of a righteous existence.

BERNSTEIN ORGANIZING CHILDREN'S COMPANY

General Manager Bernstein, of the Pacific Coast Studios, is organizing a regular children's company, which is to include Antrim and Gertrude Short, Boris Baker and Joe Mattice, four of the cleverest mites ever had in pictures. Harry Pollard, superior to all in this line, is putting on the pictures, which are rated to make a big appeal through naturalism and pathos. Contrary to the general rule with many companies, his plays lack the artificial note—hence one of their charms.

"Playmates" is the title of the first to be released. It revolves about a rich little girl who makes a playmate of an organ-grinder's girl. Even in death their attachment continues. Gertrude Short, Katherine Pyle, Ed. Alexander, Edna Maison and Elizabeth Burbridge are seen in the pictures.

HENRY E. DIXEY AMONG FAMOUS PLAYERS

Henry E. Dixey, the famous legitimate star, one of the foremost favorites of the American stage, is presented in "Chelsea 7750," an original drama of the underworld, written and directed by J. Searle Dawley, to be released September 20th by the Famous Players Film Company. The play sounds every depth of the underworld, its secrets, its methods and emotions, and penetrates the intricate labyrinths of the submerged half. In the role of an eminent, able and conscientious detective, Mr. Dixey is afforded ample opportunity to utilize the fine powers of characterization for which he is noted. In a relentless and thrilling pursuit of a trained and resourceful gang of counterfeiters, which later develop into an intense mental and physical struggle, with many impeding difficulties and heart-breaking disappointments, but which eventually culminates in a complete and decisive victory, Mr. Dixey is provided with one of the strongest parts which in all his extended and versatile career he has ever portrayed. Startling revelations, ingenious machinations and overwhelming climaxes crowd fast in thrilling succession; and through it all the mystery and fascination of the world that lives under cover.

Mr. Dixey is supported by Laura Sawyer, who as his daughter and a female detective also assists him in his triumph over the criminals, and House Peters, in the role of Professor Grimble, the master mind of the counterfeiters.

A. Warner, vice-president and general manager of Warner's Features, Inc., left Tuesday, September 16th, for a long trip by way of Canada to the Pacific Coast on matters of business relating to the opening of exchanges in the larger Canadian cities, and the installation of the Warner program.

HARRY MYERS

Harry Myers, after many years' engagement with the Lubin Company, may now be spoken of as the leading man. He is at the head of the number one company, directed by General Director Barry O'Neil. Mr. Myers is not only a clever photo player actor, but he is an acrobat, qualified to do the daredevil tricks often seen on the animated screen and in many of the Lubin pictures is recognized in situations which are not only intensely melodramatic but thrilling. He was born in New Haven of an old New England family, being a descendant of Capt. Myers, of the Revolutionary Army, and Corporal Myers, of the Civil War. Harry C. Myers served in the Spanish-American War and now for the past four years has been a valuable member of the Lubin players.

"THE STOLEN WOMAN"

"The Stolen Woman," announced for release on Sept. 20th by the Reliance Company, is not a white slave story and has nothing whatsoever to do with the recent agitation along that line. On the contrary it is a dramatization of Eleanor Ingram's story by that name, which appeared in Lippincott's Magazine, and contains a strong plot founded upon the theft of a beautiful girl, by the man she loves but refuses to marry because of her engagement to an elderly man of wealth to whom she has promised her hand.

An escaped convict figures prominently in the story, which is full of action. The unusual incidents follow each other in rapid succession from the first to the final scene of the picture-drama, which is in two reels and sixty scenes.

The girl marries her bold lover, but his manner of winning her raises a grave doubt in his mind as to whether she really loves him or not. It is at this point of the drama that the convict enters the lives of the young couple for the third time and is the indirect cause of bringing them to each other's arms.

Rosemary Theby and Irving Cummings play the leads in this extraordinary offering.

RODMAN LAW IN A NEW STUNT

The latest dare-devil doing of riotous Rodman Law is a jump from the top of a high cliff into the making of a watery grave. Law made the jump with a fair damsel sitting astride of the horse in back of him.

The feat was accomplished at Ausable Chasm, New York, from the top of "Rock Table," and was part of the plot of a photoplay entitled "The Lovers' Leap," scheduled for release by the Reliance on October 11th.

Unforeseen difficulties were encountered in the shape of vigorous objection by the local authorities, who insisted that the jump was a case of double suicide, pure and simple. Two days of telegrams and long-distance calls to the Reliance studio ensued, and the leap was finally allowed. Law and his "picture" sweetheart took their places on the horse's back and he started on a gallop for the edge of the cliff. He jumped clear of the rocks and turned almost completely over before striking the water. The film shows that Law and the girl left the horse's back just in time to escape being injured. They were compelled to swim for some distance and make their way up a steep embankment almost perpendicular to the surface of the water, all of which was faithfully recorded by the cameras.

The horse, which had the distinction of being followed by a separate camera-man, found a better landing place and did not seem any the worse for his experience.

Neither Law nor the girl felt any ill effects from their reckless plunge, and, in fact, seemed to regard the sensation in the light of a dash around a scenic railway.

Manufacturers' Synopses of Films

FRONTIER

THE VILLAGE PEST (Sept. 25).—Wallie Waddles, son of the village grocer, has been secretly studying the art of legerdemain. Nora Farley gives a party and, because of Willie's father's standing in the village, is forced to invite him. The boy sees his opportunity to show just how much he knows. One of his tricks is pulling a table cloth from the table without disturbing the dishes.

The night of the party arriving, Wallie insists on pestering every one, and particularly the other boys. The climax is reached when he seeks to pull the table cloth off without disturbing the dishes. Nora gets them in her lap. Wallie is hustled away and soused in the horse trough. Left alone, he crawls, shivering, into the wagon and under the hay. His trip home is extremely sad.

Next morning Wallie, with a severe cold, makes his way to the barn, where he destroys his book on legerdemain and the village is left in peace once more.

NESTOR

HIS CRAZY JOB (Sept. 26).—Believing that there is graft in the management of the State Asylum, the managing editor of the Clarion is determined to get the information needed to convict. A reporter is ordered to investigate, but his arrogant and impertinent methods result in his being forcibly ejected from the asylum.

When the reporter, a star, returns to the office with the information that inside facts are impossible to get, the editor is disgusted. Only too gladly he gives the cub reporter a chance to secure the facts.

To gain admittance to the place the cub feigned insanity. Safely landed, the cub spots the warden's niece and is attracted by her beauty, although he deplores the fact that she is, as he supposes, weak minded. After taking the cub's watch and wallet, the warden allows him to roam the grounds. Here he encounters many noble and famous characters.

After a talk with the steward and a secret examination of the books he learns all that is necessary and attempts his escape over the wall. This leads to a chase. The cub is recaptured and placed in the iron cell, flanked on either side by wild men.

The warden's niece, strolling through the place, is appealed to successfully. He again gets over the wall and, pursued by guards, runs all the way to the newspaper office, where the editor protects him and turns the laugh on the pursuers.

On the following day the warden's niece returns the wallet and watch and proves her sanity by admiring the cub immensely.

101 BISON

THE STRUGGLE (Sept. 23).—Loyalty among brothers, even to great sacrificing, is the theme of this two-part drama.

Mr. and Mrs. MacComb have two sons, Jack and Jim. Jim, the younger, is spoiled. He drops in with the boys to have "ust one," while his father and brother go on to work. Late for work, Jim is discharged. Returning to the saloon he gambles all his money and is thrown out. Jack finds him, takes him home, makes excuses to their mother, and puts him to bed.

Disgusted with everything, Jim is anxious to get away from the town. He attempts to steal his father's money, is caught by Jack, and when the father appears, Jack assumes the guilt. He is ordered from the house, never to return.

In the city he obtains employment, while his brother Jim goes from bad to worse until the father at last locks him out. This awakens the manhood in him; he writes a note to the father confessing his guilt relative to taking the money and leaves for the city to redeem himself. There he meets Jack and, through him, secures employment. During their vacations the following Summer they return home to save their father and mother, who, through reverses and sickness, have lost their money. A happy reunion takes place.

POWERS

THE BLOOD-RED TAPE OF CHARITY (Two Reels) (Sept. 26).

Charity, through excessive organization, often defeats its own purpose. William Weldon, a telegraph lineman, is the father of a large family, and finds it a hard struggle to make ends meet on his small wages. By a fall from a telegraph pole one afternoon he sustains injuries which force a lay-off for several weeks. His family is left destitute and, after a time, seek aid from various charity organizations.

In each case the organization promises to make a full investigation and do what they can, but by the time all the red tape and rules are complied with, the family would starve.

In the meantime, Marx, a gentleman thief who has a secret retreat in the same building in which the Weldon family live, meets the invalid daughter, Alice Weldon. She tells him of the family's condition and Marx endeavors to aid her, although at the time he is out of ready cash himself. Taking desperate measures, he holds up a doctor and forces him to attend to Weldon. Then, in company with the female leader of the gang, he attends the charity ball. There he makes a haul—plucking jewelry and trinkets from every one with whom he comes in contact. He pawns the stolen articles and uses the money to help the Weldons. After the family has recovered, through Marx's aid, the charity organizations finally send a few dollars and a skimpy supply of food.

Marx decides to reform—in fact, his reformation has been intended for some time, and his last "job" was only the outcome of his desire to do a worthy charity. He goes to the police, declares himself, and surrenders. Marx is sentenced, and while sitting in his cell a vision of Alice appeared before him, repaying him for his sacrifice and charity.

VITAGRAPH

THE OTHER WOMAN (Sept. 24).—Introduced to Marie Forrest, the actress, by a mutual friend, John becomes infatuated with her. Ignorant of his family ties, she accepts him as a friend. His wife and child cannot help feeling his estrangement. At the close of the season, Marie, on the advice of her physician, seeks a quiet spot and stops by chance at the same hotel where John's wife and child are staying. The two women become great friends and spend all their time together. John, conscience-stricken, and missing his family very much, takes a run to the beach. He gets there just as Alice, who is in bathing with her little girl, is taken with a cramp and nearly drowned. Marie, who is on the beach, sees the child's danger and saves her. In the excitement of the moment, Marie and John do not look at each other. Both work over Alice.

As signs of life appear, they glance up and incidentally recognize each other. Marie sees all. A happy home is preserved, and Marie, to whom John has become to mean a great deal, makes an effort to forget him in a return to her career.

HIS REWARD (Sept. 20).—Auntie, who is exceedingly homely, is always fond of butting in on the young girls' fellows and trying to steal them away. One day on the beach, while they are all enjoying themselves, Auntie appears on the beach in a bathing suit. She is compelled to go in bathing alone, because no one wants to go in with her. While she is in the water she pretends to drown, and Jim, who is sitting with the crowd on the beach, thinking she is really in a precarious situation, starts in the water to rescue her. He carries her out of the water, and while the crowd are all cheering, Auntie declares that she will marry her preserver, but Jim swears that she won't. He climbs on top of the boardwalk and throws shells down on her to drive her away, and at length succeeds. She decides to lay for another victim, and when she sees Paul walking along the beach she drowns for his benefit. Paul is about to make a heroic rescue when Jim arrives on the scene and dissuades him. About this time Jack happens along and, seeing Auntie in the water, is about to rush in and save her when he is stopped by Jim, Paul and the crowd and told that this is her scheme for getting a man and that she will want to marry him. He, like the rest, is willing to let her drown. While they are all watching her antics in the water she decides that no one is coming to rescue her, so she calmly stands up in the water, which is only waist deep, and walks ashore. The crowd all enjoy a good laugh at Auntie's expense.

TRUE FEATURES

THE MISER'S WARD (3 Reels).—An old miser sees with great alarm that his young and pretty ward is in love with a handsome youth. He knows that upon her marriage he must give up the precious hoard, which belongs to his ward, but upon which he has come to look as his own property.

He resorts to all the tricks that miserly guardians have been famous for in romance from time immemorial. He locks the pretty ward in an attic, only to find that love laughs at locksmiths. With the assistance of her daring lover, who thinks nothing of climbing up a wall almost one hundred feet high, she succeeds in escaping, and now follows a pursuit, and this pursuit is full of laughs and thrilling incidents. The young Romeo is found to be as resourceful as he is ardent in his love. Scaffolding of his own invention helps him to run away from the old miser. Just when it seems as if the lovers will be caught they have an improvised ambulance come to their rescue, and at another danger point they escape by giving the old man the scent of the wrong auto. There is, of course, no doubt about the end of all this. After all these hairbreadth escapes by land and by water, the lovers get into the office of the justice of the peace just a lap ahead of the old miser. They get married in haste but never repented at leisure.

THE CYCLIST'S LAST LAP (3 Reels).—Ups and downs of a man in the world of sports are proverbial, and the case of Surry, the cycler, formed no exception to the rule. Surry, the cycler, takes part in a great international motor cycle race and returns winner and at once becomes a hero to the friends of the sport. Two young girls are rivals for the affection of the great cyclist. One, the love of his youth, and the other the daughter of a powerful cycle manufacturer. He marries the daughter of the latter.

To advertise his cycle the prospective father-in-law of Surry ties him up with a contract in which he promises never to use any cycle but such as are manufactured by him. Surry is now in the ascendant. Sudden acquisition to wealth does not in any way diminish his love of the sport of motor cycling and he is again entered in a race more important and sensational than the first, out of which he comes victor. It is in the second race that he establishes the world's record of one mile in 52½ seconds. Through a trick of his rejected sweetheart it is made to appear that Surry has been guilty of a violation of the racing laws, and he is disqualified and heavily fined.

From this time forward the star of Surry begins to wane. He is barred from most of the courses and when at last he succeeds in getting an engagement he meets with a fearful accident which for a long time destroys his ability as a rider, and he is greatly distressed by poverty. A rich widow, greatly interested in sports, engages him as her chauffeur. She pets him for a while but soon tires of him. He is again on the ragged edge of poverty. It is, however, a long lane that has no turning. Surry succeeds in saving the life of a woman who is in imminent danger of being killed by a horse. It turns out that the woman he saved was his wife. The prejudices of the father-in-law are now conquered and a reconciliation takes place.

MRS. CARTER'S CAMPAIGN (Sept. 25).—A Woman's Clean City Club of Cartersville sends the Mayor a reminder of his promise to clean up the streets. Nell and Bessie are chosen to carry the message.

The Mayor and the Chief of Police are deeply engrossed in a discussion of politics when the girls arrive. The Mayor refuses to do anything to the streets and denounces the Club as a lot of busybodies. The Chief of Police intercedes in behalf of the Club, which gives rise to a quarrel, the Chief resigns and vows to get even.

The Club is so indignant at the treatment given their activities that they resolve to put a candidate in the field against the Mayor at the coming election. Mrs. Carter, the mother of Nell and Bessie, is named for the place.

She launches her campaign in glorious style and all looks promising when the Mayor expresses a change of policy and enters into the campaign with such a zest as to cause his supporters to rally to his aid. The outlook for the election of Mrs. Carter is very bleak and dreary to all, including Mrs. Carter.

Not so the girls. They send their engagement rings to Tom and Dick, the two young men to whom they are engaged, and who are employed in the Mayor's office, with a letter saying that they will not wear them again until mother is elected mayor.

The boys get busy, solicit votes, canvass, and spend money, but the opposition is too strong, and they are at their wits' end when the ex-Chief of Police, anxious to be revenged on the Mayor, shows them how they can win.

Acting under his instructions they offer to bet two dollars to one that Mrs. Carter will be elected. They have no trouble in placing bets with almost every voter on the other side.

Election day comes, and every man that made a bet finds his vote challenged and himself disfranchised for violation of the law against betting on elections. Mrs. Carter wins in a walk.

THE FLIRT AND THE BANDIT (Sept. 29).—Ione, a Spanish girl, is deemed and recognized among her circle of friends a heartless flirt.

One afternoon, while seated at the edge of a pond in her father's garden, she is startled by the reflection of a face in the water. It is the face of "Bandit Bob," a law-breaking, fearless fellow, who holds the whole community in suspense as to what his next move will be. She cannot resist the temptation to try her powers in this new conquest, and proceeds to flirt with him.

She next encounters "Bandit Bob" in the woods, in what is known as his hills, where she has just experienced the satisfaction of crushing another heart thrown at her feet. He displays the primitive instinct by carrying her off to his home on the hill and there making her his wife, while she is still bewildered at having found a personality which expected submission instead of submitting.

Later a love-making scene follows and the story closes with the sheriff and "Bandit Bob" at peace and the little cabin blessed with the soul of the flirt come to light in her baby.

THE POLICEMAN AND THE BABY (Sept. 26).—Patrolman Jim Mulvihill, large of frame and mighty of heart, has a four months' old baby that rules him with the weapon of a cry. He simply hates to leave her cradle, but the clock points to the time he should be reporting, and he finally makes his escape by crawling out of the door. He reports at the station and goes on his "beat," which is in the suburban districts. Here he is approached by a mounted policeman, who gives him other orders, transferring him at once to the downtown district.

The scene shifts to a department store with two trained nurses in attendance at the department where babies are checked free of charge. There appears to be an odd baby that someone has deserted, which sleeps on peacefully, thus causing much excitement in the department. Patrolman Mulvihill is summoned and ordered to wheel the baby through the streets to the station house. He, however, prefers to carry the infant. As he turns the corner he observes Brown, a flashily-dressed old gentleman, and "Dipper," the notorious pickpocket, together with Nugent, commissioner of police whom he does not know, as he is dressed in civilian attire. The latter pats the big policeman on the back as he passes into the car. The pickpocket immediately begins to work on the man of wealth and Mulvihill observes it. He asks Nugent to take the child while he goes after the pair. Brown, who has been robbed, also follows the "dip" into the street. Mulvihill turns the thief over to a policeman, gets the baby back that was confided to his care, and starts on his way toward the station. He is interrupted by a row in a tough saloon and, burdened by the baby, he puts it in a taxicab in front while he goes in to arrest the malcontents who are shooting up the place. "Wabash Dave," the chief offender, rushes by Mulvihill, jumps in the taxicab and orders the driver at the point of his pistol "to get a move on." The officer comes back, finds the taxicab and baby gone, commandeers another touring car and starts on the chase. He eventually captures the criminal, handcuffs him, gets him back to the taxicab, recovers the baby, and then, as a result of a rather strenuous afternoon receives a letter from the Police Commissioner, who had held the baby for him incognito, for promotion to sergeant for brave and efficient service and a large reward for bringing in "Wabash Dave." Eventually he finds out that he has rescued his own baby. So he has much to be thankful for.

FOR OLD TIMES' SAKE (Sept. 23).—Tess Lawson breaks her engagement to Will when she finds he is dishonest, and afterwards marries Charles Pine. One night, a few years after her marriage, the girl, alone in the house, surprises a burglar in the midst of his operations. As she calls the police the man unmasks and she recognizes Will. He begs her for old times' sake to let him go, but before he can get away a policeman arrives, and as the girl is explaining to him that it is all a mistake and that the gentleman is a visitor, her husband enters. He overhears the statement and, recognizing his wife's former fiance, misunderstands the situation. Some latent spark of manhood arises in Will and, rather than escape at the expense of the sacrifice Tess is making for him, he calls back the police officer and gives himself up as a burglar. When he shows his tools and bag of loot, even the husband is satisfied and begs forgiveness of his wife for his suspicion.

SAVED BY THE ENEMY (Sept. 19).—John Hartley and Edward Kincaid had loved Belle Varney ever since they had been schoolmates together. At the outbreak of the Civil War, Kincaid resigned from West Point and came home to offer his services to the Southern cause. The day after he arrived he discovered that Hartley and Belle were engaged.

It is doubtful if there was ever a woman who was not attracted by the gold lace of a soldier. When Belle saw Kincaid, tall and handsome in his new uniform of captain in the army of the Confederate states, she found a place in her heart for regret, and two or three days later broke her engagement with Hartley.

It is a woman's privilege to change her mind as often as she likes. As soon as she had broken the engagement Belle was sorry, and met the infatuated Kincaid with a coldness that astonished him and filled him with bitter resentment against his rival.

Actuated partially by patriotism and partially by pique, Hartley enlisted as a private in the Southern army. Kincaid, in pretended friendship, had him assigned to his own company.

One night, on the eve of battle, Kincaid taunted Hartley with his ill luck in love. From veiled innuendo he proceeded to active insults. Hartley stood it as long as he could and then knocked the other down.

Belle read in the papers that Hartley had been condemned to death for striking his superior officer and instantly set out for the Confederate camp. She told General Gordon the entire story of the bad feeling between the two men, and begged him not to punish Hartley for an action which had been committed solely in defense of a woman's honor.

The General was sympathetic but powerless to act. At his advice Belle rode to Richmond and interviewed Jefferson Davis. On the way she was captured by Union scouts, who, when they learned the purpose of her mission, released her and hastened her on her way.

President Davis granted Hartley a reprieve of one week in order that he might make a thorough investigation of the case before giving a final judgment. During the week that followed, the Union scouts cut the wires between Richmond and General Gordon's division, and twisted to their own advantage all messages sent in either direction.

The scouts were captured by Kincaid at the very moment the message from Davis ordering Hartley's pardon had reached them. Kincaid refused absolutely to allow them to carry out their generous plan of transmitting it to Gordon. At the risk of his life the Union operator sent the message. Hartley was freed in the nick of time and Kincaid was stripped of the uniform he had disgraced.

THE CLOSED DOOR (Oct. 3).—Florence Ashleigh, the daughter of an aristocratic Southern family, immensely proud but greatly impoverished, is urged by her family to marry George Neill, a very wealthy stockbroker, who is a self made man and who is madly in love with her. From conversations overheard in her home she is given to understand that George wants to marry her to attain social position and not because he is in love with her, and her pride is naturally hurt to the quick. However, to aid her financially embarrassed family she agrees to marry him, but stipulates with him that he must never violate her privacy and insists that she must be allowed a key to her private apartments, and that he must promise never to ask for that key or cross the threshold of her door. He reluctantly agrees. After marriage he tries to show her by every means in his power that he loves her, but she will not lower the barrier between them. He makes a big monetary sacrifice to her, whereby her father is raised to affluence and almost ruins himself financially by doing so, but she merely attributes it to the varying luck of business ventures and still holds him at arms' length.

George Neill is now financially embarrassed. Florence does not know of his affairs, as he keeps all things from her that may be likely to distress her, and he suffers alone. He has to start afresh to make his fortune. Things are coming his way again when he discovers that if he swings a certain deal that will make him wealthy again that it will ruin the man who is engaged to his wife's sister—so he lets the chance slip by and, seeing no prospect of winning his wife's love, decides to leave for good and take the management of a mine in which he has an interest. Florence learns of his self-sacrifice, and love at last dawns in her heart. He prepares to leave and she then realizes that she loves him and wants him. She places the key to her apartment in his jewel case. He leaves. On arrival at the hotel at the Western town, he finds the key! Hoping, ardently, yet still in doubt, he returns and wins his long-wished-for reward.

JACQUES, THE WOLF (Oct. 1).—Jacques, known through the great Northwest as "The Wolf," possesses a complex nature unfamiliar to modern civilization, but, according to authority, it is not an uncommon character in the land where Indian has mixed with French and English, and certainly it is one of the most interesting characters that could be imagined.

"The Wolf" has little respect for law or the Royal Mounted Police. It pleases him to poach and sell contraband whisky, and he does so. He even goes so far as to aspire to the hand of one of the officer's daughters. He would take her away with him. She is willing to go, but the father, hard, according to the ways of the country, learns of their intentions, follows and shoots "The Wolf" as he deserts his sweetheart and slinks through the woods. Wounded, "The Wolf" staggers over the rocks and slips into the treacherous rapids.

"Big Bill," the "hootch seller," finds the man writhing in pain, his eye torn out. He takes "The Wolf" to his hut, where his daughter assists in nursing him back to strength.

It would seem, in the ensuing action, that there was a shifting of "The Wolf's" character after this incident. He is a man of low instincts and finds no trouble in transferring his affections to Bill's daughter. But he experiences an overmastering desire for revenge against the officer, and he seeks other men to do it.

He hunts the officer out in his own home. His first shot fails to reach its mark. Warned, the officer gots out to hunt "The Wolf," and what follows is one of the most engrossing parts of the piece. The officer is led, through the cunning of "The Wolf," into a bear trap. However, "The Wolf," heeding the strange workings of his nature, tempers his desire for revenge and, after the officer has spent the night in the trap, he is freed.

Alone, "The Wolf" sits by the stream questioning his own actions. The point of a gun edges its way above the rocks; there is a sharp report.

Two women clothe the body for burial. Two women bow their heads and pray over the rude bier, for both had loved the strange man.

SHON, THE PIPER (Sept. 30).—The action is laid in the latter part of the eighteenth century while the story revolves about a young Scotch duke who, determined not to marry one seeking his money, searches for adventure in the Highlands, disguised as a piper. He meets, during his wanderings, Madge, the daughter of Donald MacIvor. They fall in love at sight.

Unaware of Shon's real identity, the old father refuses to sanction the match. He prefers to give his daughter to the wealthy Laird of the Isla. When the girl carries this news to her lover he tells her to "Be of good cheer, my bonny lass; I'll pipe them a tune of another class." The wedding day is fixed and the Laird leads his melancholy fiancee forth.

Shon visits the feast in the garb of a harpist. He amuses the guests for awhile and then, throwing off his disguise, escapes with Madge from a window. But previous to this, Shon has called his clan together and when speeding away to his mansion, they cover his retreat. What follows is a remarkably thrilling and fresh piece of business; a battle between two kilted Scotch clans. And then the title of the youth is discovered and all ends well.

HIS PRICELESS TREASURE (Oct. 4).—The Palace Hotel at Loneliville is in a bad way financially, and poor Fritz, the janitor, is worn out doing duty as bellboy, janitor and clerk.

Percy Fritz Noodle arrives in Loneliville and puts up at the Palace. Ere he even sees his room he entrusts to the manager a small mysterious box which Percy impressively tells him is worth a million to him. Fritz gets this information, and a plot to rob the safe of this priceless treasure enters his head. Securing the cook as an accomplice he later robs the safe and gets away.

The manager, horrorstricken, and Percy, on the verge of hysterics, call up the scientific detective, Isador Cohn and through him the guilty pair are traced by scientific methods. Cohn, at a loss where to find them, is inspired by the sight of three toy balloons in the hands of a street vendor to watch the pawn shop. He does so, and intercepts the thugs as the pawnbroker opens the precious box. With a cry of joy Percy seizes the box and pulls therefrom a curling lock of hair, which he clasps with a fervent "HERS."

The indignation of the crowd turn on the helpless Percy and he is unceremoniously kicked out, still clasping his priceless treasure.

THE COMEDIAN'S DOWNFALL (Sept. 17).—When Bob Buster, the famous comedian, saw Semolina Brown sitting on a park bench one morning, his heart filled to the point of overflowing. For Semolina was unmistakably a militant suffragette and she was just the type Buster had been looking for. So Buster sat down on the next bench and made a careful sketch of her.

It was a singularly unfortunate thing that the suffragettes should select Thursday night for their rally in Holborn Hall, because on that same night Mr. Bob Buster was scheduled to appear at the Holborn Club in his latest character sketch.

"Holborn Hall" does sound very much like "Holborn Club" if two people happen to be in a great hurry, and that is probably the reason that Bob Buster, dressed in the costume he had carefully copied from Semolina, was enthusiastically greeted by an excited throng of women, while Semolina was clapped on the back by several jovial men and congratulated on the excellence of her makeup.

Semolina realized that a mistake had been made when she saw from the stage of the Holborn Club that the entire audience was composed of men. None the less, she was by no means averse to making a few converts, and she plunged into her fervent speech. Naturally enough, the crowd, still thinking her to be Buster, roared and Semolina, infuriated, leaped from the platform and smote a stout individual in the front row, who seemed to be particularly amused. A small riot followed and Semolina was dragged from the building by two policemen.

Poor Buster rushed on the stage at Holborn Hall without realizing in the least where he was, and remarked:

"To begin with, let me say that I firmly believe a woman's place is in the home."

He never exactly remembered what happened after that. He had a confused recollection of a chorus of wrathful feminine shrieks, and after that he was being interrogated by an indignant police sergeant. After that he was shown into a cell. In the cell was Semolina.

The rest is too painful.

THE CAPTURE OF "BAD BROWN."—"Bad Brown," a cattle rustler, finding things slow in his locality, proceeds to fill up with red liquor, and then starts to shoot up the frontier settlement. About the time he has got everybody behind doors, the stage rolls into town, and "Bad Brown" almost scares Pat and Biddy, the new arrivals, to death with his noisy fusillade, and the dangerous proximity of his wild shooting. Buck comes in like an innocent spectator at this time; but does not get injured, in fact, he soundly trounces the drunken rustler, thereby earning the everlasting gratitude of Pat and Biddy. All this does not sober Brown, and he is inclined to commit more serious crimes than to merely get drunk, so the sheriff comes along and swears in Buck, as one of his posse. "Bad Brown," however, has a pretty daughter, Marie, and Buck is in love with her. He compels his daughter to hide him, but after a series of dashing aoventures, Buck routs him out and starts the old offender off to jail. The girl's relationship at the time with the old man was unknown by the dashing Buck, but she admits, afterward, that he is her father. She feels, however, the need of a better protector so much that she accepts the fearless hand of Buck for life.

REX

LIKE DARBY AND JOAN (Oct. 5).—"Together in work, together in play, with a good word to all who came their way." Such had been the lives of the aged couple, and as their years advanced toward the time of lengthening shadows the more eager they were to temper their effort of judgment with compassion.

A stranger dropped into the quietude of the simple fisher village, and because his city ways had calloused the more tender sensibilities of his better nature, he forgot the rustic conception of the term "sweetheart."

Wanton flirting ended in physical struggle between the youth who really loved and the man whose infatuation was but a whim. It was then that the aged couple intervened and used the power of moral recitation to bring into existence the power of right. And as the angry combatants paused to listen, Darby told his story.

Way back in early years a similar condition between virtue and a more careless man had taken place. The brawny husband of the modest wife ignored the process of legal right in punishing the culprit who dared an attempt to add a blemish to the sanctity of wedlock. Aided by a couple of his companions, mere simple folk who knew not the careless indifference of city ways, the pleading offender was taken far out to sea and cast adrift, and when the offender's wife searched the rocky stretch of neighboring shore, she found him—and even though his hair was matted and his features drawn in struggle, the wife wept and mourned his loss.

As the story finished the listening offender realized the purity of the white haired couple that sought to save one who might invade like conditions of fisher felicity. His eyes softened with his realization that—

"This life would be sweet and naught to atone,
If only we were like Darby and Joan."

THE NORWOOD CASE (Oct. 5).—Richard Norwood leaves his wife to go to his business. On the way he passes an empty lot where the toughs are beating another man. He interferes and the thugs set upon him. He is struck over the head and rendered unconscious. They rob him, and thinking him dead, strip him of his clothes and substitute some of their own so as to make identification well nigh impossible. Meanwhile Norwood's wife is anxiously awaiting his return and as the hours fly by and she still receives no word from her husband she becomes alarmed. An investigation is started, but no trace can be found of the missing man. Norwood, having been found, is taken to a hospital where upon recovering his senses, he is absolutely lost in memory, his mind on all events of the past being an absolute blank. He is discharged from the hospital and not knowing his whereabouts goes West. He obtains a job as a stone cutter and toils at this work for a period of eight years. Meanwhile his wife, not having heard from him in any way, shape or form makes up her mind that he is dead. She is paid attention by a very wealthy man and after much persuasion agrees to marry him. Norwood, who has now assumed the name of Tom Jones, falls in love with his landlady's daughter and after a brief, crude courtship they are married. A child is born to bless their union and they are happy in each other's love. Norwood's first wife finally marries her wealthy suitor. Norwood on the job, one day, is holding a guy rope, attached to a derrick which is hoisting an enormous amount of rock at a dizzy height. The rope breaks and Norwood falls and hits his head on the stone. He is rendered unconscious. The fall restores his lost memory and he determines to find his first wife. He leaves his present wife and child and returns to his old haunts. There he enters his old home and finds his wife with her new husband. He sees that he has lost absolutely all right to his wife by his long absence and being still in love with his second wife, he returns to her and their child, keeping them in ignorance of his previous marriage and loss of memory.

RELIANCE

THE HARDEST WAY (Sept. 22).—Jane, the wife of a convict, receives a letter from Bud, her husband, telling her that he will be home next day and is going to keep straight for her and their daughter Runa's sake, and so that he won't be tempted, he asks her to do away with a bag of tools which he has hidden back of the fire board in their bed-room. Wife, overjoyed, hides the tools in a nearby wood pile. Bud arrives home, finds work in a lumber yard, but his boss loses some money and Bud is unjustly suspected of stealing it. Boss reports his loss at the police station while Bud, discouraged, goes home and thinking it no use to be honest any longer forces his wife and Runa to tell where they put the burglar tools. He then starts out with the intention of having the game as well as the name. The detectives are now on his trail, and see him with the bag of tools in his possession. Bud eludes them and gets back to his shack just in time to put the tools back in the old hiding place. The detectives trail him to the shack, burst in the door, and search the house. Runa, in the bed-room, has seen her father replace the tools. She knows they are bad and decides to throw them in the river where her papa will never get them again. She escapes unseen with the tools. The detectives have found the letter describing the hiding place of the tools, and think they have Bud dead to rights, but get left when they go to the fireplace and find that the tools are gone. They read the letter again—think perhaps they did make a mistake and that Bud does intend to lead a better life. They exit. Meantime Bud's boss discovers that his money was stolen by a discharged employee. He asks Bud's forgiveness and tells Bud to come back to work, so Runa unconsciously averts a near tragedy.

THE MISSING RING (Sept. 24).—Alice Williams has two suitors. One a young doctor, the other a rich broker. She accepts Ralph Malcolm, the latter, because she loves him. John Douglas, bitterly disappointed, turns his attention to his charity patients in the big hospitals. Malcolm gives a dinner to announce his engagement to Alice. During the dinner some discussion arises regarding jewels and Malcolm takes out half a dozen odd and curious rings that he displays to his guests. When these are returned to him he finds that there is one missing. But although they look everywhere the ring cannot be found. That night when Alice is undressing, she tells her maid about the ring that disappeared. so strangely. And a little later after the mistress has retired the maid finds the ring caught in the laces of Alice's gown. A sudden temptation assails her and she makes up her mind to pawn the ring. Malcolm hires a detective to trace the missing jewel and next day when the maid goes to a pawnshop the ring is recognized and she is held. Brought to bay she breaks down and tells them that her Mistress Alice Williams sent her to pawn the ring. This story is repeated to Malcolm who believes it, reasoning that the maid could not have secured the ring otherwise had Alice not given it to her. He sends a note to his fiancee breaking their engagement. Douglas who right along refuses to even for a moment doubt Alice takes the letter to her. After reading it she is stunned. He asks her to be his wife, protesting his belief in her innocence, but she says that she will never marry until the cloud has been removed from her name. Some time later while Alice is visiting at the charity hospital in which Douglas is, a patient, a woman, is brought in. She proves to be the maid who, upon seeing Alice, breaks down and confesses the whole story. Malcolm receives the confession signed and immediately stricken with remorse for his hastiness he rushes over to Alice to find that she has become the betrothed wife of the young doctor.

QUALITY OF MERCY (Sept. 24).—Old Dalton and his thrifty wife have saved many years to pay off the mortgage on their little home. The sum saved at last, John, their son, a young fellow of about 20, is given the money to take to Surle, the villain, who has bled them for many years. Having paid the money, John on leaving the place stops to speak with Surle's pretty secretary. John drops the receipt, and flustered by the girl, leaves. The same evening John is offered a fine position in Australia. The family being so occupied with John's hasty departure, the receipt is forgotten. The villainous Surle finds and destroys it. John, being safely out of the way, the rascal hectors the old couple, telling them the amount was never paid. As they have no receipt, they are obliged to hand over their little remaining money as interest. At last Surle decides to foreclose, and the old lady, already feeble with worry and poverty, dies, leaving her desolate husband; Surle has the place sold under the hammer. Meanwhile, John, hearing of Surle's perfidy, comes home. But before he reaches home, the mother is laid away, the old home is gone, and his father is sent to the poor-house. One feeling predominates in John's heart—He Will Kill Surle! Let come what will he will kill Surle! Crazed with grief, he goes to Surle's home and meets the pretty secretary. She strives to soothe him and soften his desperate mood without avail. Surle being out, he decides to wait for him and tells the secretary that he intends to kill him. When the girl hears Surle come, she tries to warn him, but John ties her fast to a chair and gags her. At the last moment when John has his victim grovelling before him, his better nature, or perhaps the pitiful entreaty in the girl's eyes, restrain him. He rushes from the house, only to return in time to save the life of the creature who has cheated and almost ruined him. The girl's deep love, and her pride in his manhood repay the wronged boy for all he has suffered.

SOUL OF MAN (Sept. 26).—James Brett, the son of a minister, is also studying for the ministry, and strange to say, having been so closely confined to their small cottage, he is ignorant of the ways of the world and knows very little about girls and love. His parents are finally persuaded to allow him to complete his studies in the city. After his arrival, when his wonderment at the city's activities has decreased to some extent, he secures a room in a boarding house. The boarders represent every walk of life from the best to the lowest. Cora, a girl of the underworld, also has a room there, and is generally known as being a "tough mug." James is introduced around by the landlady in the parlor, and the way Cora makes herself known to him proves to be a severe shock. After hearing some of their conversation and seeing her actions with her bunch, James seeks refuge in his room and there ponders over the wickedness of the world which he heretofore never realized existed. However, there is something about Cora that appeals to him, and he decides to bring her to the right path. A short time after Jame's arrival Cora and her gang plan to rob a store. James overhears the plot, informs the police and at the point of a revolver drags Cora from the scene. He gives her a severe lecture and leaves her in tears and shame taking "The cure for her soul." In a dream Cora discovers her love for James, who is about to leave for his home. Both acknowledge their affections, and Cora, a new woman, and James are united in marriage.

GREAT NORTHERN

CONVICT 337 (Sept. 20).—James is unfortunate enough to incur the ire of his uncle, who demands that he should marry Olive von Silberstien. He loves Edith, but "Pa" is adamant. James consults his friend Horne, of the C. I. Dept. There he shows Olive's photo with a disgusted "look at that" expression. Horne has an idea and says, "Lend me your photo." Soon a sergeant is called and Horne tells him to bring certain books to the Baron's that evening. At the Baron's James is introduced to Olive and "gets a shock," especially when she proceeds to make love.

Soon a dinner party was arranged for, and James was chief guest, with Horne as aide-de-camp. The plot developed when the sergeant brought the books. One was handed round as of interest to the party, and Olive found the collection of photos most interesting until she came to one labelled—

"No. 337. Rob Dirch. Five years for attempted murder."

Olive fainted, and the guests were horror-stricken to see that James' photo was "the one." Some icy glances gave James cause for amazement and the company left him and Horne together. Only now was James let into the plot, and Horne prompted him how to act. At dinner he played his part so well that Olive thought him already prepared for a horrible crime and the "gloomy criminal" had several further "attacks." The climax came in the garden, and Olive was soon being chased by a "blood-thirsty monster." We will not give the plot completely away, but suffice it to say that James succeeds in convincing the old gentleman that "Edith is a nice girl," after all. The Silberstiens, and Olive the rejected, departed in a great hurry.

PATHE FRERES

PATHE'S WEEKLY (Sept. 23).

THE BLIND GYPSY (Sept. 23).—The blind gypsy girl was the pet of her wandering tribe. She loved Minola, one of the camp's most stalwart young men, and he loved her until a strange gypsy girl crossed his path. Zira, the blind girl's sister, resenting this intrusion, took the only means she knew of for revenge, but the bullet she meant for the interloper wounded her sister. Zira explained the accident to the King and Minola was banished. He returned, however, after a peculiar adventure made him rich, to the gypsy camp and repaired the wrong he did his old sweetheart by using his gold to enable her to regain her sight.

THE SECRET TREASURE (Sept. 24).—Pete Rayner had a fortune hidden somewhere and his Mexican neighbors were very anxious to find it. Pete shared the secret of the hiding place with his Indian servant, but the Redman would tell no one about it. The Mexican outlaws sent Delores, the daughter of their leader, to see if they could worm the information from the Redskin. Then followed adventures, thick and fast, and as a result the Mexican girl never fulfilled her mission, but, instead she worshiped the Indian's bravery and became a steadfast friend of Rayner's beautiful daughter.

GLACIER NATIONAL PARK (Sept. 25).—Another beautiful scenic film is added to the list in the "See America First" series. In this tour the camera follows while the official guide marks out a brand new trail to the summit of Mount Henry, 10,000 feet above the sea level. Consequently the scenes traversed are pictured for the first time. Glaciers, waterfalls, mountain peaks and an ice cave are among the attractions discovered for the first time and their beauty will enrapture every beholder.

On the same reel.

SAGO INDUSTRY IN BORNEO.—The sago-palm as a means of food is extensively used in the Far East and this film is devoted to a study of the industry. The method of cutting the palms, transporting them, extracting the meal and the cleaning and screening of the sago is screened in a manner that is both entertaining and educational.

PATHE'S WEEKLY (Sept. 25).

BIRDS OF PREY (Sept. 26).—Fresh-eating birds are many, but few persons have been permitted a close inspection and study of their habits and characteristics. To a great majority, therefore, this picture will be of keen interest. The first specimen subjected to examination is the Kestrel. Its method of attack and defense is shown and the care of its young is illustrated. In like manner the hawk is treated, proving that a paramount characteristic of the birds of prey is an exceedingly interesting cunning combined with a ferocity of attack that holds the smaller animals on which they feed spellbound until they have been devoured. The handsome coloring of the film is an added attraction.

On the same reel.

SICILY, THE PICTURESQUE.—A delightful tour through the little island of the Mediterranean Sea, famed for its natural beauty. Starting at the village of Mazzara-del-Vallo the audience is transported to the little Mazzara river the banks of which are bordered with curious natural grottoes; from there to the Royal Chateau for a view of the thriving city of Palermo, and thence through the beautiful surroundings to the new road leading to the summit of Mt. Pellegrino. A beautiful scenic film that is beautifully colored.

FISH WITH STORAGE BATTERY IN ITS BRAIN (Sept. 27).—This film illustrates the many points of interest in connection with the Electric Ray, a fish with a peculiar faculty, that of delivering a shock at will. The fish inhabits the Atlantic and Indian Oceans and Mediterranean Sea, at the bottom of which it lies buried in the sand awaiting its prey. The apparatus by which this wonderful fish is enabled to deliver the electric shock is examined and explained and various experiments conducted showing the current carried by the Electric Ray.

On the same reel.

THE PEARL OF THE BOSPHOROUS, CONSTANTINOPLE.—A trip to the city which has been in the limelight through the recent Balkan War, although its beauties are well known to all travellers. Particularly entrancing are the views of the Golden Horn and the new Galata Bridge and the suburbs of the city of Pera.

GAUMONT

THE SHERIFF'S DEVOTION (Sept. 23).—Here we have a story of life on the coast of lovely California, where, needless to say, life differs little from life in other parts of our glorious country. But the settings of the story are magnificent, the gorgeous scenery delightful, and the realistic and hair-breadth escape of a pretty girl from the horrible death beneath the huge wheels of a railroad locomotive, all go to make up a splendidly depicted narrative.

Edyth Barton, a dark-haired daughter of the Southwest, and her fiance, Will Lorimore, are at a picnic with a party of joyous friends, and Edward Gordon, a manly son of California, arouses Lorimore's jealousy by his quite innocent attentions to the pretty Edyth. However the episode passed off pleasantly in the end.

Five years later we see Will and Edyth Lorimore in their little home, a sweet girlie of about four summers playing around them. Will has developed a mania for strong liquor, and he eventually so exasperates his employer that he is peremptorily "fired." Instead of seeking other work Will hies himself to the saloon where he finds his friend Ed Gordon, "Our New Sheriff," is the toast, but Lorimore's mind goes back to the picnic five years before, and in his maudlin condition he refuses to drink Ed's health. Instead of being offended Ed is sympathetic and leads the half-drunken man to his home, where Edyth sorrowingly awaits him. Ed leaves them, but is stopped suddenly by hearing a pistol shot. He rushes back to find Will threatening Edyth with a gun, and the gun is turned upon him by Lorimore. With a casual "Put up the gun, Bill; you haven't the nerve to shoot," he takes the revolver from Lorimore and gives him a few sage words of advice.

Lorimore goes from bad to worse. He runs away from home and turns outlaw, taking the pseudonym of "Black Hank," leaving behind him a cruel note addressed to Edyth: "I am through with you. You can have your sheriff lover." The distracted Edyth goes to Ed's office and shows him the note, and the generous fellow thereafter makes Edyth a weekly remittance of cash, always sending it in her erring husband's name.

Suddenly "Black Hank" commits some daring robberies and Ed is detailed to hunt down the outlaw. He makes his preparations, not for a moment suspecting that "Black Hank" is in reality his former friend Lorimore. Edyth's little girl falls desperately ill, and she rushes in haste to fetch the doctor. Wearied by the long run she sinks exhausted on the railroad track just when Ed's special is due, and Ed bravely saves her life. The shock necessitates a spell in the hospital, and on coming out she learns that her beloved child has passed away. Ed tracks down the outlaw and shoots him in self-defense. Will Lorimore's dying request is that Ed will take care of Edyth, and when she leaves the hospital, widowed and childless, it is to Ed Gordon she turns for succor. His great heart has been pining for her love all these years, and it is not a difficult task he is called to perform.

AN AWFUL RELAPSE (Sept. 25).—Why is it that "when a man's married" his former cronies will not leave him in peace? Can it be that they are jealous of his marital bliss? We can find no other logical explanation.

Bill Brand has been "hitched up" for two years, and has been an exemplary husband. His wife finds him a faithful spouse, considerate of her every wish and he, on his part, has had nothing whatever to disturb his conjugal felicity. Now comes a letter from that awful rake, Tom Byrne, telling Bill that he is getting too staid—too much the "settled husband"—and that he really wants an evening off when he can flag his ears a bit, like the old bad days of yore.

"He who hesitates is lost." Bill hesitates, and rushes headlong to destruction of all the trust his wife has placed in him. By means of a "fake" invitation to dine with the Secretary of State he makes an excuse for the night out, and sallies forth—not to the Astor Hotel for that quiet little dinner with the Secretary—but to the gay burlesque house yclept the vaudeville, there to consort with his old cronies and some former "flames."

Mrs. Brand gets lonesome. She wants to hear Bill's voice. Someone calls up and enquires for Bill—in a feminine voice. Mrs. Brand replies gruffly, and learns that the lady is one "Emmy," who is confirming an assignation outside the vaudeville theatre. Mrs. Brand calls up her erring spouse, and in an imitation of Emmy's voice alters the rendezvous to a private room which was engaged at the Cafe Maxim.

Gay and debonair, full of the joy of life, Bill Brand goes to the Cafe Maxim at the hour appointed, sees "Emmy" (as he thinks) heavily veiled, and falls at her feet in adoration. Picture Bill's face when the lady unveils and he discovers his ridiculous position. Still, Bill is not bad at heart, and he wins over his wife, and we leave them enjoying the tete-a-tete supper together, Bill being really rather pleased than otherwise that his much better—and wiser—half has intervened to save him from making a fool of himself.

OPERATORS' CHAT

The last meeting of the M. P. M. O. U. No. 1 was attended by one of the largest gathering of members, who to a man were of united spirit on the question in hand. And for the benefit of the readers of the Chat and the operators we herewith reproduce a circular letter sent to every local of the I. A. T. S. E. throughout U. S. and C.:

MOVING PICTURE MACHINE OPERATORS' UNION of Greater New York
LOCAL NO. 1
New York, August 15, 1913.

To the Officers and Members of Local No. ———:

Regretfully we are again compelled to bring to your attention the unfortunate position of the New York Operators. After a heart-breaking wait of six years, and when justice appears to have triumphed at last, this day finds us in a worse predicament than we were in before, because this "justice" has been "floored" again.

Brothers, we want to ask your delegate who has represented you at the last Seattle Convention (through your organization) a question: Was Resolution No. 10, which reads as follows, amended?:

RESOLUTION NO. 10.

Whereas, The continued controversy between Local No. 35 and former members of the Auxiliary of Local No. 35, now defunct, is detrimental to organized labor in general and our M. P. M. O. in particular,

Therefore, be it Resolved, That in the interest of the I. A. T. S. E. of U. S. and C., it shall be the sense and will of delegates assembled at this convention that Department 2 of Local No. 35 be divorced from Local No. 35, and that they, in conjunction with former members of said Auxiliary, shall be given direct charter by the I. A. T. S. E. of U. S. and C., with jurisdiction over moving picture machines only; and be it further Resolved, That the President of our I. A. be instructed to appoint a committee for the purpose of organizing the M. P. M. O. of Greater New York, such committee to consist of representatives of each side of one or more disinterested parties. William E. Monroe, Local No. 1; W. W. Ladd, Local No. 154; W. Johnstone, Local No. 2; H. V. Conlon, Local No. 17; E. Pye, Local No. 65; Morris Cohen, Local No. 2.

Referred to Convention.

As you see, this resolution gives us, the ex-auxiliary members of Local No. 35, an equal chance with the members of Branch No. 2 to enjoy the benefit of a direct charter. Now we are told by International President Shay that in order to enjoy the benefits derived from this newly granted charter, we, the ex-Auxiliary men, must individually make application, pay an initiation fee and pass an examination, as this new charter No. 306 was granted exclusively to the members of Branch No. 2 of Local No. 35.

You will note that according to the resolution the president of our I. A. was instructed to appoint a committee for the purpose of organizing the M. P. M. O. of Greater New York, and such committee to consist of one or more disinterested representatives of each side. This, brothers, we regret to say, has never been done.

We would not have troubled you with this communication were it not for the fact that our delegate, Brother Robert Goldblatt, was not seated at the convention; we are therefore in doubt as to the true action on Resolution No. 10—yet upon inquiring from Delegates Kelly, of New York; Monroe, of New York; Skinner, of Brooklyn, N. Y.; Miller, of Chicago; Hulbert, of Cleveland, Ohio; Scobey, of Indianapolis, and Spellbring, of Washington, D. C., they, the above-named delegates who were at the Seattle Convention, each and every one of them assures us that Resolution No. 10 has not been amended.

We therefore beseech and implore you in the name of common justice, in the name of our families who are dependent upon our labor, to answer us at once: Has the Resolution No. 10 been amended?

Trusting that you will give heed to this appeal, we are,
Fraternally Yours,
Robert Goldblatt, president; James Daisie, vice-president; George Epstein, secretary; Robert Levy, secretary-treasurer; Edward Spenola, Sam Kaplan, Theodore Ridder, Sam Talofsky and J. A. LeRoy, executive board.

Now in addition to the many answers received by the M. P. M. O. U. No. 1 from many of the I. A. T. S. E. locals that the Resolution No. 10 was not amended, a protest was made to the Executive Board of the I. A. T. S. E. of U. S. and C., and up to the present time, the members of the M. P. M. O. U. No. 1 have not received a reply. The matter has then been taken to the American Federation of Labor at Washington, D. C., and we have been advised by President Gompers that our case will be placed before the Executive Council on their next meeting, September 22, 1913, and no doubt justice will be done to the long-suffering operators of New York City, who are about to come into their own after many years of misrule and oppression.

Now matters have come to pass that it is almost past human endurance to stand bulldozing, coercion and double-dealing of any one man who is supposed to be the leader of a national body of men in the labor field, but who, it seems, is endeavoring to shape events to suit himself and to his own aggrandizement. They have tried to have falsified records rammed down the throats of the New York moving picture operators. They surely have stood for a lot, but to swallow this dose is too much, and any further tricks in this line will lead to an open rebellion.

MEETING NOTICE

It is probable that a special meeting will be called before the next regular meeting, and members of the M. P. M. O. U. No. 1 will be notified by mail.

J. A. LeRoy,
Business Representative.

HUDSON MAXIM AND MADAME BLACHE MEET AT HOPATCONG

The Great Scientist and Inventor Discusses Moving Pictures

During the taking of "The Rogues of Paris," a forthcoming Solax feature, Madame Blache encountered Mr. Hudson Maxim (author of "The Science of Poetry and the Philosophy of Language"), poet, scientist, inventor and philosopher, on his estate at Lake Hopatcong. Madame Blache admired from a distance his wonderful mansion and, unaware of the owner's identity, decided to chance trespassing and use the location in her picture. When half through with a scene, the venerable inventor appeared at the front portico of his mansion and viewed the proceedings with considerable amusement. He became a very interested onlooker and asked many questions. Not until he was addressed by one of his servants did Madame Blache connect the interesting old man with the great inventor. Of course, after formal introductions were made, Madame Blache and the inventor found each other kindred spirits and many subjects were discussed, and the greater part of the afternoon was spent in answering Mr. Maxim's intelligent questions regarding moving pictures. He was very much interested in knowing how the various parts of negatives were assembled and how positives were assembled and other scientific processes had to be explained to him.

In comparing language and the expression of thought with motion picture expression, Mr. Maxim said:

"It must be borne firmly in mind that the function of language is twofold; the expression of the thought, and the energizing and qualifying of the hearer for thought-reception. Such are the dynamics of spoken words. The energizing property of speech depends upon the tonal potentiality of the sounds uttered, and this potentiality depends upon the significance of the quantitative properties of sounds—loudness and duration; upon the qualitative properties of sounds—pitch and tone-color; and upon the directly imitative and analogically imitative character of the sounds. We are exhilarated by a bugle-call. We are naturally impelled to step to a march played by a fife-and-drum corps. The Marseillaise played by a brass band stimulates and exalts us. Similarly do the tones and tunes of the speaking voice arouse in the hearer emotions corresponding with those of the speaker, and in this way the extra effort necessary to apprehend a more potential form of utterance finds ample compensation in the added energies with which the hearer is endowed.

"Motion pictures have functions akin to the functions of language. No human thought beyond the simplest, sensuous impressions can have existence except in a methodical arrangement of symbols constituting language by which thoughts are both formulated and conveyed. The thoughts conveyed by the language of pictures are impressionistic and for that reason are popular with the masses in that it appeals to their imaginations."

The venerable inventor marvelled at the enterprise of picture manufacturers and the trouble they underwent to obtain results. "It is not surprising that the film industry has progressed so rapidly—considering that not a corner of the earth is free from the invasion of the camera man nor immune from the inquisitive gaze of the camera lens."

Madame Blache jubilantly received from her host an autographed volume of his book "The Science of Poetry and the Philosophy of Language."

"In The Days of Trajan" is the title of forthcoming two-reel subject soon to be released by the American Film Mfg. Company.

Jack Warren Kerrigan appears as the Prince of Dacia and Vivian Rich takes the role of Princess Octavia. The time honored villain, Jack Richardson, revels in the costume of Junius Publius, the Prefect of Rome, while the other leads are all prominently cast with a large number of supernumeraries.

The settings are immense and the ancient properties accentuate the dramatic action.

Frank Donovan, late of the Ramo Films, will sail for Europe to get features for a new New York company.

UNIVERSAL FILMS YOUNGEST STAR EVER

Allan Dwan has just completed a half-reel comedy with little Miss Helene "Snookums" Rosson, seven and a half months old. It is the first time that an entire film has been devoted to exploiting the charms of one so young. There is that in the film, novelty, which is going to make it a genuine treat.

The picture was made at the Pacific Coast, Hollywood Universal studios, and shows the lovable baby in the various phases of baby life. The camera catches her first as she wakes after a fine nap. Next she takes her bath, then breakfasts, and then creeps into the garden where she finds many flowers to her liking. She laughs and crows; she cries and scolds, and true to her sex, she gets into mischief with a dish of jam to her liking. She did not worry over her costumes. She posed "au naturel," and when she posed for the scene "September Morn," the climax was fittingly complete.

The Famous Players Feature Corporation has been organized with Henry L. Brack as president, Oliver J. Allenburgh as secretary and treasurer, and Grover C. Parsons, vice-president and general manager, with headquarters at 28 West Lexington street, Baltimore, and have contracted for the entire annual output of the Famous Players Film Company in Delaware, Maryland, District of Columbia and Virginia. This concern will control the "Famous Feature Program" now being issued by the Famous Players Film Company in this territory. This important deal was consummated by Al. Lichtman, sales manager of the Famous Players Film Company.

Al. Lichtman, sales manager of the Famous Players Film Company, left last Wednesday for Canada, from where he will go to Peoria, to attend the convention of the Illinois exhibitors, and on his return to New York will stop at Chicago.

WASHINGTON CORRESPONDENCE

The National Theatre, Washington's oldest and most dignified theatre, broke into the motion picture game by opening its regular theatrical season with "Victory," that wonderful multi-reel production that carries with it the stamp of approval of the United States Navy. The film is both entertaining and educational, weaving a romance around incidents of the Cuban war, showing modern appliances of warfare, introducing the hydroplane and the wireless, and using real officers in the service of our country as characters. The tropical natural scenery and the richness of official quarters call forth admiration; while love, intrigue, jealousy and heroism play interesting features. "Victory" won under all these conflicting circumstances is worthy of praise, so is the photoplay under the same name that will receive high commendation from official circles. educators and students. Its run in Washington has been phenomenal.

* * * *

The Washington Film Exchange, which carries the Universal program, has moved recently into larger and more commodious quarters. Manager Dresner is quite pleased that he will now be able to "spread out" and have the various departments arranged more easy of access. Improvements are not as yet completed, but when everything is put in order, a house-warming is anticipated. Manager Dresner is giving especial attenton to his poster department, going to the trouble of mounting all large posters for his patrons. He is anxious to promote artistic and attractive lobby displays.

The airdromes have had a profitable time this summer, for the warm nights have made people seek open-air amusements. The Grand, Truxton, Standard, Staunton, Royal Motion Picture and others report good business. From present weather indications the airdromes promise to find favor for some weeks yet.

* * * *

The Lyman Howe travelogues have been attracting large audiences at the Columbia Theatre, one of our large theatrical playhouses. These have appeared on Sunday nights, the series consisting of five exhibitions with prices ranging from 25 to 50 cents. The scenics have been particularly fine, France having come in for the largest share of attention. The foreign farces, while not generally liked by American audiences, have served to break the monotony of the sterner subjects, but the manikin pictures have been quite amusing. Switzerland, Spain, Italy and Germany have been visited pictorially, and other countries are promised before the series closes.

* * * *

The Empress and Plaza offer a feature daily, and while in the same block, both exhibit to crowded houses.

* * * *

Moore's Garden Theatre has begun its winter schedule of prices, that is, 10 and 20 cents; but this has not reduced the large patronage. The show has enlarged, too, with a longer and more costly program. Among some of the features shown recently are "Wanted by the Police," in which William Winter Jefferson takes the chief role,; "Sir Francis Drake," "Quo Vadis," "Heritage of Eve" and "Sealed Lips."

* * * *

The Casino has been making a specialty of feature photoplays in conjunction with its vaudeville acts, sometimes to the exclusion of the latter for a week's run.

* * * *

The Maryland always offers a well-balanced program of comedy and drama with a dash of educational. Manager Johnson is to be commended in using almost exclusively features of American manufacture and thereby avoiding the gruesome and sensational that infest so many of the foreign films.

* * * *

The Pickwick and Palace are offering some excellent features of the General Film program. Manager Brylawski is to be congratulated on the neat lobby display which characterizes these houses.

* * * *

W. H. Crandall, manager of the Grand airdrome, contemplates having a theatre in the downtown district. With modifications and improvements he promises to give motion picture patrons a very comfortable house.

THE SHERIFF'S DEVOTION
Gaumont release.

Joseph Abel, photographer of the Bureau of Animal Industry, is attending the Conservation Convention at Knoxville, Tenn., as special envoy from the Department of Agriculture. He is exhibiting many interesting films on animal husbandry, both scientific and practical. The Bureau of Animal Industry has found such exhibitions the most effective means of circulating the work of the Bureau. WILLARD HOWE.

In our last issue it was stated that Richard Goodall is to direct for the Eclair Company. The company has denied this rumor, and we desire therefore to correct our statement in that respect.

CURRENT COMMENT

MOVING PICTURE MACHINES FOR HOME USE

For the purpose of learning the sentiment among the business men and chamber of commerce members of this city relative to the establishment of a factory here, a representative of a large Eastern banking house has opened an office in the Mateer Building. The firm wishes to establish a factory for the building of moving picture machines for home use, and three cities have been considered, viz., Altoona, Scranton and Indianapolis.

The machines which will be turned out of the factory have not yet been marketed, and will not be placed on sale until a permanent factory is located.

The machine is designed purely for home use and will retail for $15 or $17. It is much smaller than the machines used in moving picture theatres and weighs about fifteen pounds. It uses ordinary films, and the firm that will manufacture the machines will also inaugurate a film service, by which it will be possible for owners of machines to exchange films at a small cost.—Altoona Times.

Miles of Films Each Day

Moving picture films totaling something over seventeen miles in length are each day run off before the eyes of cinematograph audiences around the world, according to statistics prepared by a Frenchman who has given much labor to his task. He has gathered his information from practically every country in the world, and gives in addition the information that London is the greatest film-producing center in Europe, but is still a long way behind the record established by New York.

The Paris cinematograph theaters number only about 200, as compared with the 470 in operation in New York. The cinematograph audience on a Sunday night in Paris is estimated at 100,000.

England, France, Germany, Italy and Belgium were represented at the Cinematograph Congress, held recently at Ghent. The discussion includes the role of the cinematograph in public instruction and many technical questions, such as the incombustible film, etc.—Courier-Journal, Louisville, Ky.

No Crime Pictures

Columbus, O., Sept. 12.—Portrayal of murders, suicides and other harrowing scenes that are liable to have a bad effect on the minds of the young will not be thrown on the canvases of moving picture shows in Ohio in the future. The moving picture censor board recently appointed by Governor Cox decided this feature at a meeting today.

The board held its first meeting today. J. A. Maddox, of Columbus; Harry Vestal, of Ada, and Mrs. Maud Murray Miller, of Columbus, are members.

Mr. Maddox was made chairman of the board, and Vestal was made secretary. Mrs. Miller, who is a member of the board of visitors of the Girls' Industrial Home, urged that her duties were already such as to preclude her taking on any new responsibilities.

The board will hold another meeting, when numerous recommendations that have been decided upon will be turned over to the State Industrial Commission.

Motion Pictures on Trains

A French company has made application to the Russian Government for the right to give moving picture entertainments on trains on the Trans-Siberian Railroad and other roads which make journeys of more than 24 hours. The company proposes to supply special cars.

Why not? The "movies" find a profitable purpose in helping people to "kill time." Waiting for a train or a friend, the picture play offers a cheap and comfortable means of overcoming the otherwise tiresome delay. And what is more tiresome than a long railroad journey? The monotony of the Siberian landscape would be forgotten while the passenger followed the adventures of the daring hero, the beautiful heroine and the dastardly villain to the final triumph approved by the board of censors. The Trans-Siberian trip would become one grand carnival of entertainment. Successful there, it would soon be imported here. We might even some day have moving pictures flashed on the motorman's back to ease the strain on the strap-hangers.—Pittsburgh Dispatch.

Bad Influence of "Blood-and-Thunder" Pictures

A city magistrate thinks that motion pictures set before the children should be more strictly censored. He believes that many serious charges, such as theft and burglary, brought against mere boys at the house of detention, are the aftermath of the "movies."

Probably he is right in this opinion. We all know how impressionable is the juvenile mind, how wonderful its gift of imitation, how every boy living has his own bold, bad hero, and how almost anything that smacks of defiance and lawlessness takes hold upon the youthful imagination with a grip that is as amusing as it is on occasion dangerous. It is well to remember that the spirit of mischief in boys simply means that there is a far-back savage under every boy's skin who shakes hands with any pirate, bandit, desperado, outlaw or burglar swaggering through the realms of romance.

For this reason pictures of the "blood-and-thunder" type are too fondly gazed upon and exert their intoxicating influence upon youngsters who dream of Nick Carter and play all day with Captain Kidd. And children can read pictures who cannot read books. Some picture is the scenario of every child's life, and out of it his deeds grow sure as weeds and flowers from the earth. Any gamin in the streets eats, breathes, lives and forms the one filmlike notion that has most captivated him. Herein lies the power of the "movies" and the plea for encouraging the spirit of fun without putting "Raffles" on the stage as a comedian.—Philadelphia Press.

The Man in the Booth

Few of the many thousands of people who daily attend moving picture theaters realize how much of the service they receive for their admission price depends upon the operator who turns the crank in his little booth upstairs. They only see the picture. The man that makes the picture possible is, like the poet, unwept, unhonored and unsung. Nobody knows him. He walks in and out of the theater every day, unnoticed by the crowds. But if he failed to walk in at the appointed hour there would be no show. The piano player may quit, the ushers may go on a strike, even the manager can take a day off and the show would go ahead just the same, as long as the operator is on the job.

Standing in the narrow confines of a booth, surrounded by a fireproof wall, his unerring hand guides the show. Occasionally a little accident will happen. Some of the perforations at the side of the film may have become worn to the breaking point. The film jumps on the sprocket wheel, and in a second two feet of it is ground to nothing by the sharp sprocket points. Immediately the hand that turns the crank stops, the other flashes a sign on the curtain, "Just a moment, please." With the swiftness of lightning the film is rescued, its injured portion cut out, the ends patched, and the picture goes on. His only reward for his deftness and celerity is a storm of hisses from the audience, because their enjoyment of the story being told on the picture screen has been interrupted for perhaps forty-five seconds.

If the slightest spark from the carbon points touches the celluloid film as it speeds on its way, there is a flash. A little fused wire over his head catches the blaze. Immediately every apparatus in the booth is closed down, and he is left alone to fight the fire. The audience must not know that there is a fire, or else there will be a panic. If anybody has to be burned, it is he, and none must know it. Blinded by the smoke, his hand instinctively reaches for the warning bell. The ushers and other employees downstairs understand the meaning of that signal. Immediately the exits are manned, but quietly, so that no one knows. In another moment comes the "all right" signal.

The danger is past. The operator has lost his hair and eyebrows, his hands are cruelly burned, but he smiles grimly and says proudly, "Well, anyhow, I saved the show."—Cleveland Leader.

EDISON FILMS

Make the Edison two reel Friday release part of your regular weekly program. You can always book these two reel films with the knowledge that you are getting something distinctive—a genuine feature.

Coming Two Reel Releases

HARD CASH

Adapted from Charles Reade's celebrated novel. One of the greatest dramatic tales ever written, "Hard Cash" makes a stirring photo-play. A great sea fight in which one of the contending ships is rammed and burned, the terrible life of an old-time asylum, the battle of two greedy souls for the possession of money, a tale of true love, all add to the interest.

Released Friday, September 26th.

WHY GIRLS LEAVE HOME

A new version of the famous Edison comedy released several years ago.

In addition to the heartrending scenes of the blood-curdling melodrama, there is a story of a minister and his deceptive family who all go separately to the show. Incidents in the audience add greatly to the merriment.

Released Friday, October 3rd.

Coming Edison Single Reels

*THE STOLEN MODELS

Two young artists, after having great difficulty with their models, find their ideals in each other.

Released Monday, September 29th.

*A DAUGHTER OF ROMANY

Produced in Kent, England.
A beautiful story of a young girl whose father was a nobleman and whose mother was a gypsy.

Released Tuesday, September 30th.

*MR. TOOT'S TOOTH

A harrowing tale of a toothache that was no ordinary toothache. Mr. Toots suffers terrible agony until finally relieved of the over-active tooth.

(On the same reel)

DAMASCUS AND THE RUINS OF BAALBEK

Released Wednesday, October 1st.

THE CONTENTS OF THE SUITCASE

A thrilling story of moonshiners and a counterfeiter in which a young man becomes seriously involved with these desperate characters.

Released Saturday, October 4th.

*A SHORT LIFE AND A MERRY ONE

An amusing tale of a scarecrow that comes to life and makes the most of his short time.

(On the same reel)

BIRDS OF THE SOUTHERN SEA COAST

Released Monday, October 6th.

A WILFUL COLLEEN'S WAY

A beautiful Irish girl drives her lover away because of her heartlessness and he returns floating upon the waves with an oar in his stiffened hand.

Released Tuesday, October 7th.

A BRAND NEW BRAND on that UNIVERSAL PROGRAM

Every Wednesday and Saturday, Beginning October 25th, 1913

"JOKER"
is the name of the brand new brand on that Universal Program. Beginning October 25th there will be two "Joker" comedies every week—Wednesday and Saturday. On Saturday it takes the place of the old split "Imp." On Wednesday it will take the place of the "Powers" release, which will be moved up to Monday. Every "Joker" will bring pride to the hearts of the Universal exhibitors as sure as fate!

"JOKER"
comedies, we predict, will establish themselves with the public in less time than it has ever taken a new brand to get a solid foothold. We are 'way ahead of release dates on negatives, and every one of them is a real scream. "Joker" comedies will come in full and split reels, and will contain the kind of nonsense that everybody enjoys. We promised you such a film, and now we're making good!

28=Reels a Week=28

The Universal Program now contains four reels every day—28 every week—including never less than six features every week. Made by the best producers, and posed by the best stars in the film business.

"BLEEDING HEARTS"
Or "Jewish Freedom Under King Casimir of Poland," is one of the really great features of years. This three-reel masterpiece will be released October 2nd. Make plans immediately to get it from your nearest exchange.

FLORENCE LAWRENCE
Is going to cost you extra money, but she will bring it back to you, over and over again, because of her tremendous drawing power. Your exchange cannot afford to let you have these features at regular prices, so don't expect it. Be glad to book her at any cost! Friday, October 3rd, "The Closed Door."

WARREN KERRIGAN will make his first appearance on that Universal Program in a great big three-reel production entitled, "The Restless Spirit," released October 27th under the "Victor" brand. Make the most of this actor's great popularity, for the picture will back up all the good things that you say about it. Get ready for "Kerrigan Day"!

A Common Sense Argument

Mirroroide advertisements have been read the world over. We do not depend absolutely on advertisements to accomplish the results we have attained. We may quote to you from page 1060 of the Moving Picture World issued last week, in which Mr. R. W. Buzzell, of the Plaza Theater, Northampton, Mass., writes: "I have a good union operator and a Mirroroide screen, and will back my picture against any other exhibitor." This is partly an abstract. Read it for yourself. This was contained in the Moving Picture World, Sept. 6th issue.

The common sense of the argument is this: that we will cheerfully back Mirroroide up against any screen or projection surface in the world today. Backed up with any amount of cash that any other of our competitors care to designate, as to the merits of a true projection surface and the resulting accomplishments. These tests are to include angle views, close up views, and the practical perspective of the said projection. We have read a number of advertisements from our competitors. Can they do as they claim? We claim they cannot. Then again, Mirroroide is put on the market at a price within the reach of every exhibitor, because we are equipped to turn out, if necessary, two hundred screens weekly, which ensures no delays. We have the proper factory facilities, cash capital, and the proper machinery to do as we claim. If you doubt, our large free samples are convincing.

If you desire recommendations from any portion of the entire universe write us, and we will gladly inform you who has one of our Mirroroide screens in use. There are 4700 Mirroroide screens in use today, which warrants the assertion that Mirroroide is the best by test, and has proven to be superior to any other screen now on the market, barring none. Get our large free samples. Postage prepaid. Test any way you desire against any other curtain or screen in your town. This is a common-sense argument, and what your eyes see you can't help but believe.

Volume VIII September 27, 1913 Number 11

"ARIZONA"

All-Star Six-Reel Feature—A Splendid Production

MR. AUGUSTUS THOMAS is an adroit man. And adroitness is one of the most prized and at the same time most valued factors in ambassadorial paraphernalia. He has shown himself a diplomat in the best sense of the term. "There is a tide in the affairs of man which, taken at the flood, leads on to fortune." Mr. Thomas's brother-dramatist, Shakespeare, wrote this. And Mr. Thomas, with his innate adroitness, is taking fortune at the flood. Motion picture fortune.

Mr. Thomas's adroitness has placed him in the unique position of being—I think I am right—the first master-dramatist of the age to sit and look at a motion picture of the most lucratively successful stage play of his own making. Throughout the world, when you speak or write of "Arizona," the name of Augustus Thomas occurs to you, and conversely, when you speak of Augustus Thomas, "Arizona" rises in your mind. He has written many other better plays, but he will go down to posterity, maybe, as the author of "Arizona."

Although I think that a better fate awaits Mr. Thomas, he can, if he likes, go down to posterity as a master motion picture maker. All the signs of the times point to the inference that fifty years hence—when Mr. Thomas and myself are, it is to be hoped, in a planetary motion picture business where we can have carte blanche—great motion picture makers will be more highly thought of than mere play-writers, poets and sculptors.

In the making of this picture, which is in six reels, all the resources of stagecraft and photography have been combined to produce a result of which the author may be proud. The technique of the picture, that is, the photography, the printing, toning, etc., need not be discussed. It is sufficient to say that Mr. Raver's knowledge of this end of the business has assured a splendid negative. Mr. Raver's photographic knowledge has also provided the picture with some of the most beautiful photographic posters we have ever seen. They would adorn the lobby of any Broadway theatre. They are enlarged photographs of the principal characters, and will help "Arizona" amongst state-right buyers and exhibitors. I cordially advise everybody who reads this article to get a set of these beautiful character studies. Also the frame in which they are shown. The outfit costs about $40. It's worth $80. I am a photographer and I can appreciate a good, enlarged photograph.

Now, what about "Arizona" in film form? I saw the play in London thirteen or fourteen years ago. It is one of my classics, more than the "Heart of Maryland," or other American plays that I could name. I have grown to regard "Arizona" as a typical American play—if not the typical American play. Bonita, Estrella, Col. Canby, Denton, Hodgeman and Dr. Fenton have been mental friends of mine ever since I saw the play, and when I saw that Mr. Raver had formed the All-Star Co., I wanted to see these characters on the screen.

The master hand of Augustus Thomas has reproduced his play in film form so vividly that as I sat and watched the suggestion, unravelment and completion of his plot; as I followed the well-thought-out action, and was carried along by the fine acting of his well-knit corps of actors and actresses, I wanted to hear these characters speak Mr. Thomas's tense, decisive dialogue as I heard the characters speak the lines in the stage play in the Strand in London, when I saw the play.

"The play is the thing," and "Arizona" in film form is a finely played play. The play proper could be given in three reels, but Mr. Thomas is a thorough master of detail in his methods. He presents you with a series of vivid pictures of military life out West as that life was lived in the last parts of the nineteenth century. The military details have been rendered with such accuracy that the picture, or rather a print of it, should be preserved in the national archives for reference by future historians.

Having regard to the difficulties of production (for the picture was not made under ideal conditions), the first release of the All-Star Feature Corporation is a remarkable achievement. It cost a great deal of money to make, and the result as a production to the sharpest of eyes, must appear comparatively flawless. It has all the verisimilitude of the stage play. Cyril Scott, William Conklin, Francis Carlisle, Gail Kane, Lizzie McCall, Alma Bradley, H. D. Blakemore, Gertrude Shipman, Robert Broderick, Wong Ling certainly rose to the occasion and backed up the producer's efforts in a loyal and spirited fashion. They ACTED.

There are many delightful pictures in the six reels —I mean well-composed views and groups. It is evident that an artistic mind directed the placing of the camera.

Apart from motives of duty in this matter, I personally enjoyed this film very much. If the millions of people who are acquainted with the play enjoy it as much as I did, then it is bound to be a great success. Its popularity in the United States is assured. In the British Isles, where good American films are popular, this film should be the most popular of them all. So many stupid American films are sent to the British Isles—stupid films because they are made by stupid people—that I take the greatest personal pleasure in recommending "Arizona" to the British motion picture public as a fine, true American Western play, made by a master American dramatist.

I beg his pardon. Dramatist—and motion picture maker. T. B.

THE CIRCULATION OF THIS PAPER

THE circulation of this paper has steadily advanced from week to week. The present issue incorporates the Exhibitors' Times with the Moving Picture News. The separate circulation of each publication has recently largely increased. The circulation of this, the combined issue, is greatly in excess of the totals of the two separate publications. Advertisers, therefore, will reap an exceptionally wide field of publicity.

Next week the circulation of the paper will still further increase. In a short space of time we will be reaching all the exhibitors on the North American continent. Already the paper circulates in India, Africa, Australia, the British Isles and Continental Europe.

MOTION PICTURES BY WIRELESS

WONDERFUL POSSIBILITIES OF MOTION PICTURE PROGRESS

IN the next number of the Exhibitors' Times, we will print an article of transcendent interest upon a theme with which we dealt in the second issue of the paper. This article was headed the "Transmission of Motion Pictures by Wire." A method of accomplishing this is attributed to Mr. C. Francis Jenkins, of Washington, D. C. Mr. Jenkins has been good enough to give us a special and exclusive interview in which he outlines a method whereby the sending of motion pictures over the wire as one sends an ordinary telegraphic or telephonic message has the possibility of being transcended in practical interest by an even greater advance, namely, the transmission of motion pictures by wireless.

Not to anticipate the interesting details with which Mr. Jenkins has supplied us, we go so far as to say that, in our opinion, the time is not far off when this theoretical marvel will be made a practical accomplishment

Within the memory of living people, such modern utilities as telegraphic and telephonic messages were considered not merely impracticable, but impossible. Only a few years ago the idea that photographs could be sent by wire was considered in the nature of a wild dream, and yet as we have pointed out already, thanks to the enterprise of Mr. William Randolph Hearst, photographs have been sent by cable from New York to London.

And now, writing in the popular and not the strictly scientific sense, it is just as feasible for motion pictures to be sent by wire as it is for ordinary still photographs. Even more so, it is just as feasible for motion pictures to be sent by wireless as it is for simple written messages to be so sent.

We refer the reader, however, to Mr. Jenkins' own description of his method which will be printed in our pages next week.

FOR THE CHILDREN

IN a recent number of this publication, we printed an article by Judge Willis Brown in which his honor pleaded for the preparation of motion pictures devoid of unnecessary sensationalism—those undesirable features in films which we have repeatedly denounced in these pages; horrors for horror's sake. It is not necessary to be more specific now. Everybody knows what we mean.

This excellent article by Judge Brown has attracted great attention. It was so well reasoned. And then again the Judge himself is well known for his efforts on behalf of educational and corrective work against neglected children. He writes and acts with knowledge, authority and sympathy.

As we constantly point out, the greater majority of patrons of motion picture theatres are women and children. They it is who provide the nickels and dimes which support the theatres—not merely the theatres, but the entire motion picture industry. And yet, notwithstanding this important fact, few manufacturers take the trouble to assure the suitability of their films to a majority of motion picture theatregoers. The mere men in this matter are in a pitiable minority. Again we say it is the women and children who count. In the ordinary theatre it is the women who are the chief patrons of the ticket office. If a play gets the suffrages of the fair sex, it is a success. If it does not please the women, men are powerless to make it a success.

By J. B.

WHEN I started this page in number one of the Exhibitors' Times, I took pride in the fact that the policy of the paper was inferentially endorsed by some of the greatest minds in the world. These be large words. But they be true ones. The greatest minds in the world are creative minds—not manufacturing or constructional minds—the greatest minds in the world are those of great painters, great writers. Sir Hubert Von Herkomer is one of the greatest painters of the present day and he is making motion pictures. He is making them successfully.

* * * *

YOU have the leading painters, sculptors, black and white men of Italy, France and Germany similarly moved. In another part of the paper this week there is news that a painter of the rank of Academician in Paris is just taking up the work. Just imagine Raphael, Titian, Leonardo da Vinci, imagine if you will the greatest painters of all time making motion pictures. Those painters for whose works the late Mr. Morgan, the still living Mr. Benjamin Altman, Mr. Henry Frick and Mr. Widener are paying fabulous sums—imagine these men making motion pictures. Then you get an idea what is taking place in the motion picture field in Europe to-day.

* * * *

THE motion pictures conceived and executed by these great minds are the "Quo Vadises," the "Atlantises," the "Pompeiis," the "Wagners," the "Parsifals," the "Troys," etc. In other words, the Italian, the French and German schools of motion picture makers are taking the same relative place in the picture field as the paintings of those countries take in the art world. There is a perfect parallel between the two. How absurd it is, then, for the push-cart driver, the sweat-shop keeper, the mere faker with a few thousands of dollars at his command to attempt to compete against such minds as these. It can't be done. I frequently get into hot water (I, myself, who write this) because I can't appreciate everything and anything that is put out with the sacred name of "motion picture" on it. How could I, how could any self-respecting man praise or even appreciate the rotten and the crude, when he has the opportunity of enjoying the best that is produced?

* * * *

THE fall season has set in with its usual severity. It is the greatest season ever known in the history of the motion picture. It is a season which will decide the fate of many at present in the business. This time next year many who are in it now can't possibly be in it then. Why? Because THEY ARE NOT MAKING PICTURES. Not even the possession of sixty exchanges will force the public to accept a great deal of the perfectly rotten junk made in back cellars and back studios by illiterate and incompetent "producers." The public will not accept these things as PICTURES. Not all the advertising in the world will force even a program down the peoples' throats. The public is openly laughing at some of these programs—made on the sweat-shop principle, by sweated brains and sweated labor.

* * * *

THE public is taking kindly to the fine work of the Edison, Biograph, Eclair, Famous Players, Nordisk, Cines, Gaumont and other companies, but believe me, boys and girls, it is revolting at the junk put out by many concerns, whom, in mercy, I will not name. For I am a merciful cuss, though I have another reputation. No doubt my face belies me. People take me for a detective and all sorts of weird things. But behind that mystifying mask, I assure you there is a perfectly benevolent heart. Which reminds me of a character in one of Hawthorne's books. This was a dear old lady who lived, as it were, a facial contrariety. When she looked mad she was really pleased; when she looked pleased she was mad. So you must never judge by appearances. All the severe things that I and others say in this paper about bad motion pictures are designed to help the business generally and the prosperity of the individual particularly. But alas! this is a cold, heartless world. Altruism isn't appreciated until you are gone. People laughed at Mayor Gaynor while he was living. Half a million saw him pass to his last home. Poor human nature! It's a criss-cross thing at best.

* * * *

I AM writing this page with a special object in view. This paper of ours, as prognosticated last week, is like the young lady in "Pickwick" who drank too much tea, "Swellin' Wisibly." We are expanding in size, circulation and importance. But there is one thing about us that will NOT expand, that is, our heads. We shall not suffer from caput augmenti. Item, swollen heads. We are a success and we know it. And we are going to continue to be successful. It is our purpose, our policy, our program. But even in our success we are going to uphold good pictures and condemn bad ones. And that irrespective of advertising. On page two of this issue there is printed this legend: "Cuts and copy are received subject to the approval of the publishers, and advertisements are inserted absolutely without condition, expressed or implied, as to what appears in the text portion of the paper." We intend to live up to this, au pied de terre. Which means to the foot of the letter. It's Pike's Peak or bust. This means that it's Pike's Peak for us. Amen.

"MOTION" PICTURES NOT "MOVING" PICTURES

WHILE this publication has been in existence, we have endeavored to familiarize the public with the correct nomenclature of the subject—"motion" pictures not "moving" pictures.

The latter term is clearly a misnomer, notwithstanding its almost general use both in the technical as well as in the general press. They are not, they cannot be, moving pictures because the pictures as such do not move. They are pictures of motion and, therefore, may be correctly described as motion pictures. Throughout the series of this publication so far we have used the term "motion" pictures. The paper is the Motion Picture Weekly.

We ask all correspondents, contributors, as far as possible, to use the term "motion" pictures in order that correctness and uniformity may be obtained. In this respect we think we are doing, as we are attempting, some service to the art and industry.

Also we give our paper a distinction and distinctiveness not possessed by any other publication devoted to the subject, because we are using correct terms to describe the pictures.

Again we say "motion" pictures, not moving pictures. And we say this to all whom it may concern, that is, everybody interested in the subject.

"DAVID COPPERFIELD"

A Hepworth Masterpiece

GRADUALLY and by degrees film makers all over the world are getting down to the formula for making motion pictures. This formula is easy to understand and not difficult to apply. It is, to apply the principles of art to the work. Art, simply defined, is going to nature for your inspiration. The artist in whatever medium he works, in order to be successful, must be naturalistic, that is, he must go to nature. Of course, in the actual executive work temperament combined with art will give the individual touch to the finished picture, book, play, piece of sculpture or what not.

It has been so much the fashion among alleged picture makers, in this country especially, and in other countries as well, to produce the faked result that I welcomed the opportunity of seeing Mr. Hepworth's "David Copperfield," because I knew that he had applied the formula above given in the making of the picture. He had gone to nature, he had consulted authorities on archæology, the history, costumes, acting, characterization. In other words, after nearly twelve years' work in the motion picture field, Mr. Hepworth has enrolled himself among the few picture makers.

Charles Dickens's works are probably the most popular of any fiction writer's of the last hundred years. It is idle to inquire into the cause of this. I have merely to deal with the fact; his books are classics of literature and are read more or less by everybody. This book, "David Copperfield," is said to be in some measure the story of his own life as a boy and young man. It is a human, humorous and touching book. Above all things, it is accurately descriptive of some phases of English life seventy years ago, phases of life which the English people themselves are not willing to forget, because the middle class life and character of those times is unerringly limned by one who was himself a member of the middle class —for Dickens was a middle-class man just as Thackeray was a gentleman and an aristocrat. Dickens wrote from a middle class, that is, an under-educated, standpoint; Thackeray wrote from the standpoint of the patrician; both are popular in their respective spheres.

Mr. Hepworth in this six-reel picture brought to my mind almost perfectly the scenes, atmosphere (as it is the fashion to call it), plot, character and acting of the story. The picture is Charles Dickens on the screen, that is, so far as this present writer may presume to consider it so. Of course, in common with millions of others, I have read and re-read the book. As a youngster I don't mind saying I cried over it. I have seen the play. I have traveled over almost every inch of the ground described in the book and photographed by Mr. Hepworth. So I have a sentimental interest in Dickens and his works. The first article I ever wrote was printed in All the Year Round. Charles Dickens the second was my personal friend. I am what you would call a Dickens enthusiast. It was from this viewpoint that I looked at the picture. Except in one or two minor respects which it would be hypercritical to dwell upon, I do not see how any film maker could do better for a subject than Mr. Hepworth has done for "David Copperfield." David, Daniel Peggotty, Ham, Mrs. Grummidge, Micawber, Uriah Heep, Rosa Dartle, Little Emily—why, they all seem to have stepped out of the book on to the screen.

The scenes in Suffolk, Canterbury, Dover, London, Highgate, how well I remember them all, how wonderfully Mr. Hepworth has photographed them! The photography of these six reels is perfect, the acting splendid and natural. The mounting of the piece, that is the costuming, the details, even down to the interior of Peggotty's hut at Yarmouth, on the East coast of England, are faultless. If anything the film is a trifle too long. Six reels is too long, I don't care what anybody says. But, judged as a whole, it is a magnificent transcript on the screen of Dickens's immortal book. I would like to say to the actor who played Uriah Heep that in all my years of screen study I have never seen anything so marvelously suggestive of the character as his work. It was positively great. The picture, besides its dramatic value, is of high educational value, especially in the United States, Canada and other English-speaking countries where Dickens's works are popular and where millions and millions of people have not had an opportunity of seeing the original scenes written about in the book, of studying the life and costumes of seventy years back in England. Dickens's writings are part of the literature of the Anglo-Saxon race. English-speaking people number about a quarter of the people on the globe. To them Dickens is literally a household word. There is probably not a single English-speaking family in existence which is not acquainted with Dickens's name and works. It is to those that this film appeals.

When we were viewing the picture it was suggested to us by one or two prominent film men that it was so good that it should be preserved for posterity. We pass this suggestion to the Smithsonian Institution, Washington. This institution has the finest collection of photographic relics in the world. It might add to its usefulness by making a collection of motion picture films, which are of world-wide interest.

We hope that this film will be brought before the people of the United States in a worthy manner. It is too much the fashion here to kill good pictures by over-sensational methods of advertising them, which acts rather as a deterrent than as an incentive to the proper reception of pictures. This film of "David Copperfield" is a masterpiece and a classic, and it should be treated as such. It should be brought to the attention not merely of motion picture audiences, but to that of school children, young men and young women at college. It should be shown before all literary societies throughout the American Continent. It should, in short, be shown to every lover of good literature and human and humane story writing.

Dickens was a humanitarian. Some of his books helped to right wrongs and remove abuses; he was a lover of the poor, the needy, suffering, the oppressed; a lover of truth, a hater of shams, frauds, hypocrisy and bigotry; there was always a tender note in his books for real suffering and honest misfortune. Those books go to the heart, and if we wrote for a month we couldn't give a more cogent reason why they are so popular. "David Copperfield," as a book, goes straight to the heart. And this film will go straight to the heart, and that's why it will be, we predict, enormously popular on this continent for many a long day to come.

For personal as well as general reasons I heartily congratulate my old friend, Cecil Hepworth, on having made a masterly picture. It should encourage him to keep along the thoroughly artistic lines which he has so wisely chosen. In right of training, heredity and ability Cecil Hepworth should be the principal British motion picture maker. He deserves to be. And I think he will be. Salut Cecil, T. B.

THE INDIANA LEAGUE

The Indiana Motion Picture Exhibitors' Association, which was formerly a branch of and affiliated with the Motion Picture Exhibitors League of America, met in convention in Indianapolis, Wednesday, Sept. 10, 1913, with a large attendance.

At this meeting the delegates gave a report of the national convention at New York City in July of this year, and gave their reasons for bolting the convention. The members then went into open debate and argued the question pro and con.

The members unanimously voted to endorse the action of the delegates at the New York convention, but did not deem it advisable to affiliate with the new International Motion Picture Exhibitors' Association, and they decided to affiliate with no national association, feeling that up to this time the national association had never been any benefit to the Indiana exhibitors. If anything, the A. M. P. E. L. had been a detriment, inasmuch as the president was advocating censorship, while the Indiana branch was expending money to prevent it. The Indiana branch carried on a very successful campaign in the legislature, holding down all unjust and unfavorable legislation which would affect the Indiana exhibitors. In this fight they had no support either morally or financially from the National League.

A. C. LARING
Secy.-Treas.

J. M. RHODES
President

The Indiana exhibitors want only one association in Indiana. They feel that two associations can be of no good, the only thing they would do would be to fight each other, and in the end neither association would have gained anything, so from now on Indiana stands for Indiana alone, first, last and all the time, and we intend, through this association, to protect the exhibitors in every way possible.

The following resolution was adopted and is self-explanatory:

We, the Indiana Motion Picture Exhibitors' Association, in convention assembled, Sept. 10, 1913, hereby resolve that we remain entirely neutral as to the matter of affiliation with a national association until such time as the present strife of two organizations is abolished, and our slogan shall be: Indiana for Indiana, first, last and all the time, and when we in convention assembled shall see fit to affiliate with a national organization, it shall be done only by a majority vote for the betterment of the exhibitors.

The old officers were retained by unanimous vote, J. M. Rhodes, Indianapolis, president; Frank J. Rembusch, Shelbyville, vice-president, and A. C. Zaring, Indianapolis, secretary and treasurer.

The state headquarters are at 420 Saks building. Any exhibitor in the state of Indiana wishing to become a member of this association can write this office and send $1.50, which will pay dues until Jan. 1, 1914, the dues in the new association being 50 cents a month, payable quarterly in advance.

Any member of this association is requested to write or wire this office if they have any grievance, or if they feel that they are being imposed upon, and the association will help them every way possible. The new name of the association is the Indian Motion Picture Exhibitors' Association.

The next convention will be held in Evansville, the first Tuesday in January, 1914.

THE TWO SERGEANTS

World's Special Six-Reel Feature—Story of the Film

Captain Derville has occasion to reprove a slovenly soldier at review This soldier, in revenge for his humiliation, steals part of the funds with which Derville is entrusted. Derville cannot account for the disappearance of the money, and, knowing he will be disgraced, disappears, aided by Tom, his old servant, who supplies him with the clothes of a peasant. Derville is fond of his wife and two children, and the separation is bitter for all.

In the mountains Derville saves the life of Gustave, a peasant. War breaks out and Derville and Gustave enlist, the former under the assumed name of William. During a fierce battle William (Derville) picks up a bomb and hurls it away as it is about to explode under the feet of a general. For this brave act he is made a sergeant. A warm friendship springs up between him and Sergeant Robert, and the two are inseparable.

The plague strikes the town, and to prevent its spread, strict military quarantine is established. The two sergeants are posted at a gate and refuse to permit anyone to pass. A widow and two children try to get into the gates, and tell a pathetic tale of hunger, adding that they will surely starve to death unless permitted to reach the house of their aunt. The resemblance of the children to Derville's own little ones touches his heart, and the two sergeants allow them to pass.

A disgruntled peasant who had been turned back complains to Valmore, the aide-de-camp. This worthy is in love with Laura, the fiancée of Robert, and he takes advantage of the opportunity to rid himself of his rival by denouncing the two sergeants. The general is touched by the pitiful tale, but is compelled to order a court-martial, which finds the men guilty, but holds that in view of the extenuating circumstances only one man shall be executed, and that lots shall be cast to see which shall die.

William and Robert throw dice, and William is the unfortunate one. The men are sent back to their cells by the old turnkey, who is the uncle of Laura. While there, William receives a note from a friend informing him that his wife and children have taken refuge on the Island of Rozes, not very far off. Derville, who had not been able to communicate with his family for three years, breaks down and tells Robert the story of his life.

Robert requests the aide-de-camp to permit Derville to go on the despatch boat, which makes daily trips to the Island of Rozes, to kiss his wife and children good-bye, agreeing to stay as a hostage and die in his stead should he not return.

The aide-de-camp sees possibilities in this and consents. Gustave—the man Derville saved—is in charge of the despatch boat, and the aide-de-camp secretly tells Gustave that if he delays the return of William he will in the meantime get a pardon for Robert. The simple Gustave believes him.

Mrs. Derville and the faithful Tom are living in a cottage on the island. The cannon announces the arrival and departure of the despatch boat, and every day Tom goes to see if, by chance, word has come from the Captain. Tom hears the soldiers talking about a proclamation and recognizes the name of his master. He takes the proclamation and finds it is an acknowledgment by the Secretary of War of the innocence of Captain Derville of the charges against him, the guilty man having confessed before dying.

When Derville reaches the island, therefore, he finds himself in the peculiar position of a free man, restored to rank as Captain Derville, and as Sergeant William he is condemned to death!

Gustave tells the old servant that if he makes his master miss the boat his life will be saved. Tom, therefore, sets the clock back an hour, and Derville is astounded to hear the booming of the cannon announcing the return of the boat. The weeping wife and children cling to him, but he tears their hands away and dashes to the water's edge. There is only one way to keep his word of honor—to swim—and he dives into the water and begins the long journey, a race against time in the waters.

The despatch boat arrives at the fortress without William, and the execution of Robert is ordered. The general is angry when he learns what has been done, but despite the pleadings of Laura and her uncles, he is compelled to carry out the gruesome sentence.

Robert faces the firing squad and the commands are given: "Ready!" "Aim!" Before the word "Fire!" is said, the old turnkey sees in the distance the swimmer nearing the shore. Exhausted, Derville is assisted to land and Robert is saved.

Derville makes known his rank to the general, as well as his true name. Laura and her uncle eloquently plead for mercy, and the old general is, in fact, only too glad to have an excuse to stop the unpleasant proceedings, and tells Derville that to make atonement for the great wrong done him a pardon would be secured for him. Then, indignant at the conspiracy of the aide-de-camp, he removes him from office and orders him under arrest, to be himself court-martialed for his vile plotting.

THE PHANTOSCOPE

A Simplified Motion Picture Projector for the Home

In an article recently in the Exhibitors' Times, we drew attention to the fact that the science of projecting the motion picture had not received the notice that it deserved. We also stated that within a short space of time there would be many new projectors available for lovers of motion pictures.

The motion picture exhibitor—that is, he who shows motion pictures in theatres and large halls—is well catered to by the designers and makers of projecting machines, although it is fair to suggest that finality in this respect has not yet been reached. But there are other classes, and, indeed, the largest class of all, for whom so far little effort has been made in this matter. We refer to the home circle; the small schools, traveling men and others. There is and has been for a long time a clear need for a portable motion picture projector, something which you can readily pack into a small box, set up easily in the parlor, a small schoolroom, or a room at a hotel so that you can easily show to a small audience pictures for the purpose of entertaining or amusing them, or instructing them, or instigating business with them.

Such a projector of the kind we have in mind has been shown us by Mr. C. F. Jenkins. We ought to apologize for not giving Mr. Jenkins any official designation. He is the Jenkins of the motion picture business. That is enough and all that will be said.

For $75 you may buy the "Phantoscope." It consists of a combined motion picture projector and stereopticon. You carry it about in a small wooden box. Supposing you are going to use it in your home, you unpack your box and take out the various parts and set the machine up in situ in a few minutes. The "Phantoscope" takes to pieces for practical purposes, and these pieces are easily put together when you want to get the machine in going order. It is compact, small and portable, besides being comparatively inexpensive. The stereopticon end is, although an integral part of the machine, yet workable separately and by itself. So you get the two things together, a light and portable motion picture projector taking standard-size film, and the stereopticon, taking the ordinary size lantern slide.

In our opinion this is a well-thought-out and well-made machine, which should be universally popular, because in the first place it is universally needed, and then in the next place it is simple as well as practicable. An intelligent boy could work the "Phantoscope"—even a lady could do so, because it does not involve any personal discomfort or any inconvenience in the manipulations. It is one of those devices which can be worked without risk or danger or trouble in the midst of the home circle.

It appeals to us in a peculiar sense. In the Exhibitors' Times last July we wrote an article expressing a wish one day to see a motion picture camera in every home. The reasons for this wish are clear. A motion picture camera is an educator and an intellectual aid in the best senses of those terms. Similarly, a motion picture projector is an entertainer and a pleasure-giver for the home circle. So we would also like to see a motion picture projector in every home. The kind of projector we have no hesitation in recommending for the home is this "Phantoscope" of Mr. Jenkin's design.

We think that the motion picture trade should take up this machine because it is a ready seller. It is one of those devices which sells on sight. Then it appeals to the exhibitor, who, after all, aside of his theatre, has his home in which the "Phantoscope," on account of its portability, could find a place without the necessity of having to borrow the projector from the theatre.

We recall the circumstance that last winter we were asked very many times by people of culture and intelligence a question something like this: "I am giving an entertainment to some friends tonight; where can I get a picture machine and some films?" Now, the "Phantoscope" is the kind of machine that these friends unconsciously had in mind. It is remarkable to find how in the world of photography such large numbers of intelligent people make lantern slides and own and operate stereopticons in their own homes. We think that the parallel will be preserved by means of such a machine as the "Phantoscope." You will get, indeed, you are getting, great numbers of amateurs who are making their own motion pictures. Now here is the very projector for them, something light, portable and, comparatively speaking, inexpensive.

We append a brief description of the "Phantoscope" in order that the reader may acquaint himself with its salient features:

The "Phantoscope" is so simple a child can operate it with results equal to the work of an adult operator, and with absolutely no danger, for the five amperes of current, though giving a 1,000-cp. light, make very little extraneous heat (not nearly enough to even crack the condensers) and, beside, the new picture film of today is of non-inflammable stock. The light of the arc shining directly on the picture film will not ignite it, even though celluloid film were used. The picture can, therefore, be stopped at any time and special features of interest be pointed out.

As a stereopticon it gives good illumination on a 6x8-foot screen, and takes the regulation slide, i. e., 3¼x4 inches.

The "Phantoscope" is small and simple, and has a miniature arc lamp for light, with a flexible cord, and plug which screws into any convenient incandescent lamp socket of the regular house or office lighting system, either alternating or direct of 110 volts.

The carbons furnished burn through two or three reels (a "reel" is 1,000 feet of film, a "split reel" 500 feet) and are inserted in a moment, and that from the outside, without opening the lamp-house.

The condensers are of the standard size, i. e., 4½ inches diameter, and can readily be taken out for cleaning when occasion requires.

A 3-inch E. F. projecting lens is regularly furnished on the moving picture mechanism, but other lenses for a longer throw can be furnished at an extra charge only for extra lenses wanted. The picture is focused on the screen simply by rotating the lens tube, after the carbons are observed to be close together, that is, the arc is short. The stereopticon lens is a simple periscopic lens of about 8-inch focus. By the use of standard film and standard lantern slides, the magnification is no greater than common, and, therefore, it is of the usual brilliance of the usual theatre motion pictures.

THE FLOWER OF DESTINY

Kleine-Cines

When viewing this picture one's memory travels backward, casting about to recall the many tales that have been read and heard of fairy princes, princesses, pages, courtiers and ladies, living in a wonderful land of flowers, castles and happiness, and of how the evil spirit finds an unknown way into this paradise, leading one of his workers, jealousy, into this country of happiness to thrust his fangs into the heart of the prince who wreaks vengeance on a lowly admirer of his queen's beauty, virtue and goodness. The odor of many flowers and fragrant plants assails your imagination as the views of the verdured hillsides and mountain stretches pass before you with their fairyland-like settings and their stately castles. Then the good fairy schemes like only fairies can and revenges the death of her brother. This is not a film of fairyland, but of real human beings, but told in a simple and convincing way, with sidelights and shadows and scenery that recalls all these things to one's mind. As the picture unrolls before your vision, you feel contented, interested and thrilled the same as you did when listening to these legends of long ago, when a shiver passed down your spinal column and your eyes opened wide in amazement. Picturesque views of nature's most delightful scenery make up the background of many of the scenes. Poetic nature travels through the entire photoplay, giving it an unusual enchantment and interest.

Once upon a time Count Ferdinand and his beautiful countess lived alone in the great castle overhanging the sea. The only other inhabitants of this wonderland castle were the servants. Numbered amongst them was Anton, a pretty boy page, who served the countess. Boyishly, he falls in love with the countess, and as a token of his affection each day the lad placed a white carnation on the window-sill.

JOAN OF ARC

An Eight-Reel Savoia Film

The Eclair Film Co. will shortly release an eight-reel film on the theme of Joan of Arc. The title role is played by Miss Marie Jacobini, the Italian actress, who has a great reputation in Europe. The story of Joan of Arc, who was burned by the English soldiery for her religious convictions, and who has been canonized by the Roman Catholic Church, forms a fine subject for a motion picture. We are justified in looking forward to a splendid production.

FOR THOSE WHO WORRY O'ER PLOTS AND PLAYS

William Lord Wright

Just an Intimation

THE number of our readers has grown rapidly the past year. This department is read by script writers in almost every known country. We are here to please and instruct all. Are we succeeding? Have you any suggestions to volunteer for the good of the department? Do not be backward with your opinions, suggestions and experiences. We like to hear from you and assure you that your ideas are always welcomed. If we are lacking in any items of interest or instruction do not hesitate to point them out to us.

No Sample Scripts

Several correspondents have requested that we print "sample scenarios" of different kinds and designs. We honestly think that they do more harm than good. The beginner is apt to use the sample script for a model and sacrifice all else in his endeavor to get his work as much like the "sample" as possible. Every text-book published contains one or more "sample scenarios." Buy the books you see endorsed by this department. We receive them all and recommend only the meritorious.

"The Two-Reel Picture"

Captain Leslie T. Peacocke, one of the most prolific of script writers, kindly gives our readers a few suggestions under the above caption. Needless to remark that there is no script writer in the business to-day better qualified than Captain Peacocke to discourse on the subject of the multiple reel. He has written many of the features produced by the Universal Company. But we will give the floor to Captain Peacocke:

"In giving suggestions to brother and sister photoplaywrights on the building of two-reel photoplays I am, perhaps, presuming too much. The writing craft is a jealous one and there are few writers living who do not think their efforts surpass or, at least, equal those of any other worker in their own individual field. I am no better than the average scenario writer, but I have worked harder than most, I think. I have struggled and fought the fight and enjoyed the many defeats and varied success as have all scenario writers, and what little knowledge I have gained has been through experience. So, perhaps, a few suggestions I am about to give may prove of some little help to beginners in the game. The two-reel picture is now an established fact and is growing in popularity with exhibitors and the public, so writers will do well to try and meet the demand. The first thing essential is 'the plot.' The plot of a two-reel must necessarily be stronger than that of a one-reel story and must carry a big 'punch' to close the first part of the story and then work up stronger and stronger toward the climax. It must never be allowed to drag—if it does, the audience becomes bored and interest in the story is lost. Take a big subject, an original idea of course, condense your synopsis to one hundred words if you can (the shorter your synopsis the better chance it has of receiving a sympathetic reading by scenario editors and their assistant readers), make your cast of characters as small as you can, and then visualize carefully every scene. Keep in view the camera possibilities and don't run riot with interior settings. Interior settings cost money; work with as few as you can. A two-reel picture should run from 60 to 140 scenes. Do not make your scenes too long. Action is what is needed. Better to break into a scene and throw a flash of some other happening connected with the story, and then cut back to the scene which would otherwise be somewhat long. I hope I make myself clear, as this is an important factor in photoplay building. Avoid sub-titles when possible; make the action carry the story. Do not waste your time in dramatizing published books or historical topics, for writers on the editorial staff have to tackle that work when it is called for and no film company is inclined to pay for material that any member of the staff can write. Your stories must be absolutely original. Leave magazine stories alone. They do not belong to you except you happen to be the original author. Make it your business to frequent picture theatres whenever you can and study the actors of the various companies. You may then be able to grasp their probable requirements. Always have your manuscript typewritten; it is rarely ever looked at otherwise. I have never been able to master a typewriter myself, although I have bought one, and rented one often. I have no patience to learn, so have always had to pay to have my work typewritten. I found out in my early experience that a hand-written manuscript had no earthly chance of being read, let alone considered. In a two-reel subject aim for tense situations and create suspense whenever possible. Give the actors an opportunity of displaying their feelings. Don't make your story a series of incidents, but aim for continuity. Avoid carefully the actual committal of crime or any suggestion of nastiness. The censor boards won't stand for it and the censor boards hold a very strong sway in this country. So much so, in fact, that the European exhibitors are beginning to consider American pictures 'tame' and devoid of strong dramatic interest. However, writers must abide by conditions as they are and get strong situations if they can without inviting murder, suicide, robbery and other delightful aids to the pen. Original plots are harder to secure every day, so they are welcome and gladly paid for. Never get discouraged. No writer has ever achieved anything worth while except through hard work and persistency; many have starved to buy stamps; and put the best that is in you in every piece of work you do. Every good effort gets its proper reward. Your early efforts may appear to you to be very fine, but later you may probably find serious flaws in them. I have seen many of my early efforts in magazines and on the screen and have felt heartily ashamed. And most probably in a few years hence I may be just as ashamed of my present-day efforts. Every writer experiences this—our earlier efforts may have been better, but we all think we know more as we progress, and it is a good thing for us to retain our self-conceit, otherwise we should die—or seek some uncongenial occupation which is worse than death."

What, Again?

Here it is again, the old discussion as to what name to give a script. A correspondent writes us that "she is somewhat confused." She says some call 'em "photoplays," others, "pictureplays," still others "scripts," not to mention "playscripts," and "scenarios." We confess to using almost every designation with the exception of "playscript"—never that! The truth is that after Brothers Wood and Sargent settled the vexed question to their entire satisfaction a year or so ago, in favor of "photoplay," the editors, directors and authors continued to refer to "scenarios." Two-thirds of the editors speak of "scenarios" right at present. The whole blamed business seemed a much ado about nothing to us. Whether you refer to a "photoplay," or a "scenario," if you can write good ones, you will get the money.

Respectfully Referred

Here is a suggestion that is respectfully referred to the publicity agents of the various film companies. A writer suggests that instead of referring to "The Human Cruller, in Three Reels," or in "Two Parts," as the case may be, that the films hereafter be advertised as

"The Human Cruller, in Two Acts," or "Three Acts," changing the word "reel," or "part," to "act." Our correspondent thinks this act business would further elevate and dignify the multiple reel productions. Worth thinking over, at that!

A Little More of the Same

We recently observed that we hoped the time would come when the leader or sub-title could be eliminated entirely from the moving pictureplay. We continue so hoping, believing that sub-titles take away atmosphere and realism. However, others do not think so, seemingly, for we have been lambasted quite severely since our assertion. Nevertheless, do not use more leader than you have to, for there are too many so-called leaders in every field of endeavor. At present the leaderless script is a rarety, and it is better to use too many leaders than too few. This seems to be the custom, by the way, for we read a script the other day in which the leaders carried all the story there was in 38 scenes. Try and make your action take the place of leader. A telegram or a letter is less objectionable than a sub-title. They can be made to appear as part of the logical action, thus retaining plausibility. Newspaper headlines, clippings, marked items, etc., can also be employed to supplant leaders. We received a script which contained an example of the needless leader.

Leader—John's Mother Dies.

8—John receives letter. Opens it. Contains news of his mother's death. John in tears, etc.

Here is the way it could have been accomplished without leader:

8—Messenger boy comes into picture. Hands John a message. John reads:

On screen:

John Goldsmith,
Rushville, Ala.
Mother is dead. Bill.

Back to scene:—John in tears, etc.

The leader question has seemingly been so dingdonged into this particular writer that he evidently thought the leader a prime essential. It isn't. Avoid its use when your action can be made perfectly clear in some other way.

Be Systematic

Don't work in a haphazard manner. You will never arrive haphazardly. The best workers in every form of literary endeavor toil methodically. Jack London can certainly be considered at the top of the heap in fiction writing. He turns out a thousand words every day, seldom more and never less. Rain or shine, whether he "feels like it" or not, those thousand words are ground out. London does not believe that writing can be done only when the writer is "in the mood" or "inspired." He has a certain time to write and so much to be accomplished every day, and he accomplishes it. Be systematic. Photoplay writing is just hard work. It should be done day after day without the slightest regard for moods or surroundings, or time and place and comforts. Inspiration is more likely to come in the midst of work than at other times. Don't seek any and every little excuse to stay away from your desk. Rise superior to little worries and discomforts and, like Jack London and every other successful literary worker, in fact, accomplish your allotted task and surmount all obstacles. It will have to be your way if you are ever going to accomplish anything worth while.

Just a Prediction

We predict a warm time for some of these fake correspondence schools. Their paths are to be no longer strewn with flowers. One poor woman writes us and encloses a highly decorated "diploma" printed on cheap paper. She says: "This thing cost me thirty dollars. I earned the money by taking in washing. If I had read your magazine sooner I would have saved twenty-eight dollars." Wonder what these fakers will attempt next?

The Hall of Fame

Arthur Leeds, associate editor of The Photoplay Author, has worked behind the footlights and in the moving picture studio.

Edwin August is the latest to direct, write and play leads in his own plays. Really this is too much for one individual. Let photoplaywrights turn out the stories.

Editor McCloskey, of the Lubin Co., is always anxious to read good work. This in reply to questioners laboring under the impression that Lubin is out of the script market.

Forms of Rejection

A Detroit, Mich., author writes as follows: I would be pleased to know if you think an editor would write an encouraging letter to a would-be author if the author did not deserve it. I have been writing one year and received the following rejection: "The editorial department thought so well of this story that they submitted it to our directors. However, after careful consideration, they decided that while it contained considerable merit it was not quite available to our needs." Do you think this form of rejection encouraging? Of course it looks so but do they send the same statement to all. I would also like to know what you think of the following rejection slip: "The editor regrets that the MS. herewith is not available to the use of this company at the present time." Does it mean that it has a chance in the future? All my scripts are written in long hand.

Perhaps writing your scripts in long-hand is one reason they are rejected. No, we do not think any editor has the leisure to write an encouraging letter to an author unless he believes encouragement is deserved. Such letters as quoted above are not sent to each and every one. The second rejection means just what it says and if we received it, we would consider it final. And we might add that the many and varied rejection slips now in use are sometimes puzzling to the author. Why not a brief printed form such as is used by the majority of the magazine editors?

Idea Stealing

From St. Louis comes the idea stealing bug once again. This writer sent in a story and a plot something like a release. "I never met with but one person who had an idea anything like mine and he fell through a sixth floor skylight ten years ago while playing," is one statement. This was mighty tough on the idea. It is possible for two persons to think up the same idea. It is done nearly every day and some of the plots received from widely different sources are startlingly similar. Your pet idea may have been purchased long before you submitted your story. All persons having to do with would-be playwrights know that some of them are enveloped in a peculiar kind of conceit which is like no other conceit in the world. They invariably believe in themselves to an extent observable in no other profession or art, and usually quite unjustifiable by any external evidence. The more hopeless their work the more they believe in themselves and their genius. It must be the law of compensation. David Belasco recently announced that he would read no more unsolicited manuscripts of plays. Charles Frohman has had to protect himself against the virulence of disappointed authors. If this cry of "plot stealing" doesn't cease soon, the film manufacturers and editors will, in self-defense, be compelled to take some sort of action by which the trouble-makers are weeded out of the game.

A Few Don'ts

Don't write letters to film editors asking what sort of stories they need.

Don't sign vaguely worded contracts submitted by correspondence schools and which may turn out binding legal contracts.

Don't pay "experts" good money to get advice on how to write scripts. Several "experts" are making their living by stealing material from this department.

Don't write along the same lines month after month. The same ideas clothed in different wording grow monotonous. Try and have each plot as widely different as possible.

Don't enter script-writing contests. You are sure to lose money and valuable time. No one is giving something for nothing; just remember the fact

Don't write a story aimed at one particular studio or actor. Write the story that any studio can make and your chances for selling it will multiply.

Don't write a one-reel story for a two-part feature. Write a two-part story for a two-part feature. A two-part feature needs twice as much story as a one-part plot.

Enthusiasm

Enthusiasm is the dynamo of human energy. Without it, no great achievement is wrought out of the stuff of life and character in interaction. It is no mere explosion of the moment, or a month's intense application of force. It is the strongly, but steadily, burning fire of some central sun of concentrated effort on a worthy purpose. The man or woman devoid of enthusiasm is to be pitied. Still more is the literary worker. The writer must have an impelling power, a spring of action, an unceasing inspiration, a source of joy and growth, or literary life is apt to become stale and unprofitable. "You are too enthusiastic" is an editorial admonition that we frown upon. The photoplaywright cannot become too enthusiastic, for enthusiasm means stick-to-it-iveness, perseverance, the talent to meet the slings and arrows of outrageous fortune unafraid. Enthusiasm for beauty mastered Michael Angelo and made him the creator of modern art. Enthusiasm for humanity dominated Abraham Lincoln and made him the apostle of American democracy. Enthusiasm swayed Robert Louis Stevenson, an invalid, and made him a master. Enthusiasm is a qualification indispensable to the writer of photoplays, and something to be cherished. I receive hundreds of communications from photoplaywrights, real and near, in the course of my work. I like to read the letters that are enthusiastic and breathe optimism. The authors of these letters are almost certain to succeed in their work. I also receive the other kind of letters, depressing epistles full of discouragement and suspicion. The writers of these lack enthusiasm. They must foster enthusiasm before they can proceed far upon the highway of success.

THE PITFALL OF THE INSTALMENT PLAN

American

Everyday life is portrayed in this two-reel American feature which is scheduled for release on October 6th. Things as they really happen have been welded into dramatic form and served so as to be entertaining. The daily papers often relate just such incidents as this of the poor man not being able to meet his instalment obligations. Seldom, however, is the outcome as cheering as is the climax of this two-reel production. The film is interesting just because it deals with a subject of this kind in a true way. It picks out for its hero an honest man whose need for money will not permit him to entertain a grafting proposition. The scenes in it are real and true to life. While it might have been necessary to draw on the imagination at times to bring out some of the incidents these situations serve their purpose towards completing the story.

Steve Martin (Warren Kerrigan), while a good, honest and conscientious workman, through an unaccountable prank of fortune is unable to secure employment. He has not enough money to supply the immediate wants of his family whose clothes are becoming ragged, and are living on barely enough to sustain them. Through the intervention of a friend he is finally offered a position as foreman of a concrete mixing crew on a new structure being erected for a local department store. This position is given him under the provision that he obey orders that might be issued to him by the boss of the concrete workers. He is engaged for the position at a salary of $16.00 a week and is apparently making good. But one day he finds one of his crew using too little cement. By investigating he unearths graft, and is offered to be taken in on the deal, but upon his stanch refusal is discharged for his efforts.

Discouraged and disheartened, he returns to his home where the hopes of the wife of getting back to their old station in life, to better clothes and better meals, are all but realized. Steve has not the heart to impart the sad news, and he keeps it to himself, wandering about the town each day in the vain hope of securing other employment.

The wife in the meantime visits the department store where she purchases liberally and arranges to pay for the goods on the instalment plan, signing a statement that her husband is employed at the stated salary by this department store as foreman of the concrete mixers. She is given her goods and her statement is investigated. It, of course, is found that Steve is not employed as a workman on the building, and she is arrested for misrepresentation. Her pleadings are in vain and she is hurried to the jail. The note she sends to her husband is intercepted by the police matron who carries it to the captain where it is opened and destroyed.

The children waiting at home for the return of their mother grow tired, and as the day is growing dark, a lamp is lit with the customary results of an explosion, from which the timely arrival of the father saves the children. From them he learns the destination of the wife. He traces her to the station, but is denied an interview with her until the case is called in the court on the morning of the next day.

The boss of the job appears at the trial as a witness for the department store, and testifies that Steve was discharged because of drunkenness. Steve vigorously denies this and states the true reason of his discharge. On this testimony the case is dropped.

An attorney is engaged by Steve, and together they appear at the office of the department store where a claim is made for damages because of the false imprisonment. This claim is adjusted by payment of $1,000 and a promise of a position. Steve's claim of fraud is carefully investigated and proven, whereupon he is put in charge of the work and the guilty man is apprehended and prosecuted.

One afternoon, as the count was walking over the grounds that surrounded the castle, he passes the window with its love token. He accuses his wife of infidelity and unfaithfulness and wishes to know the lover's name. She, however, is ignorant, and it is only by chance that he discovers Anton the next day gently placing his little token in its usual place. The count, in his insane anger, sprang upon the boy, raining heavy blows on him, which caused his death.

Quite accidentally the count met Marguerita, the pretty sister of Anton, who permits him to woo her until she found a chance to ask that she be let into his home as page. She cuts her long tresses and dons the uniform of a boy, and so enters the home of her brother's murderer. As the days pass Marguerita allows no opportunity to slip that does not bring her closer to vengeance. The countess, by degrees and against her will, grew to love the handsome boy, and the count could neither eat nor sleep for thought of her.

The day of vengeance arrived. Marguerita plotted with the count to destroy the countess by poison, promising to marry him on the death of his wife. Deeply remorseful, but determined, the count dropped the deadly acid in her wine. Then Marguerita, promising to marry the countess should she dispose of her husband, told her of the poison in the wine. The countess, simulating sickness at the table, retired to her room. The count, convinced that she was dying, influenced by Marguerita, went to her bedside, knife in hand, to end her misery. But before he could strike, the blade of the countess sunk into him, and the murderous villain dropped dead at her feet. Slipping from the tragic scene, Marguerita changed into her woman's clothes, faced the countess, and revealed her identity. This production will be released on October 7th.

Suggestions Invited, Questions Cheerfully Answered

Address: Music Department, Exhibitors' Times

When I called at a Broadway theatre I was greatly surprised to find a real change in the orchestra. Was it the work of a new drummer, or was it that the old drummer had taken the hint and had, at last, unpacked his traps and decided to abandon his mouth effects?

The fact is that the audience was not treated to vulgar snorts and groans, but heard the running of trains—the bell of the engine—the horse trot—the falling of waters—the telephone bell—and many other sound effects that generally give life to a picture. It was a novelty for the theatre.

The musical instrument manufacturers have not been slow to see the opportunities offered them by motion pictures, for they have perfected the musical traps so as to imitate the most insignificant sounds. They have not only improved their traps, but they have patented many combinations by which, as is the case with the "Dramagraph," the traps are cleverly arranged in an ornamental cabinet for the convenience of the drummer.

The Excelsior Drum Works, of Camden, N. J., the manufacturers of the Dramagraph, have realized the fact that while many managers cannot afford the luxury of an expensive sound effect cabinet, or do not care to imitate all the sound effects, they are looking for an outfit for general purposes. With this view in mind, the Excelsior Drum Works have combined the following drummer's outfit:

One brass drum 30x14 inches.

One snare drum 15½x4 inches.

One nickle-plated drum-stand.

One direct stroke pedal.

Triangle, cymbal, castanets, tambourine, shot pad, dog bark.

Four different whistles.

If we are well informed, this complete outfit of well and carefully made instruments is quoted at $50, and at this reasonable price the drummer should be able to do some efficient work.

As I stated in previous articles, it is not a question of noise, but of giving the correct effect at the proper time, and in some cases rather leave the music out than play a selection out of place.

"The Great Physician" of Edison is a remarkable production in many ways, but sad. When the vision of death appears at the door to claim the child, it would have been far better to stop the music and leave the audience deeply impressed by the figure of death than to play a too noisy music. The orchestra leader did not seem to grasp the real situation. He thought he had to play a lively selection to represent the agony of the mother, trying to protect her child from the clutches of death. While it is true that the mother was in great agony and was trying to chase away the figure of death, she was too weak, and did not show violence or quick actions to justify a too noisy music. Such music rather exaggerated her proper feelings.

When the figure of the shepherd appears at the door for the little lamb and is seen carrying away the child, the music should have been very soft, as dying away, while the figure of the shepherd and the child fade away on the curtain.

"The Great Physician" did not create the proper impression on the audience because the music, although all classic selections, destroyed the sentimentality of the production. The appearance of the vision of death, in its long cloak and holding the scythe, made many young folks laugh and pass funny remarks, while if the music had fitted the scene, the mind of the audience would have been carried in another and proper direction.

Music has the power to either make us laugh or cry, so the selection played during the abovementioned scene had the effect to create some hilarity, instead of bringing the audience down to deep emotion.

The main trouble is that the orchestra leader is much on the order of the drummer. He believes that he must play all the time, and that if he was to stop his music a few seconds the manager would dock the wages of the whole orchestra. There may be some truth in such a fear, as we have some managers who know no better. A motion picture is a good deal like an oration, and we know that an orator who reads his speech without a single stop is a bore to his listeners and does not convey the desired impression. It is the same with the picture—we must have the stops, the punctuation.

A Correction

We are angry with ourselves; very angry. Last week we wrote:

The Exhibitors' Times, of September 13th, when printing the story "In a Serpent's Coils," omitted to state that it was one of the American Cinematograph Co.'s releases. We should have written American Kineto Company.

EDUCATIONAL AND SCENIC FILMS

I DON'T doubt the statement made by Mr. David Horsley to the effect that the European public is more fond of educational and scenic films than we are.

There is a reason, and if our manufacturers, renters and editors of magazines were more regular patrons of our motion picture theatres, they would find out the reason.

It is unfair to insinuate that our American public is not as intelligent or is more given to frivolity than other nations. This is not so. If Americans like a little fun, they are nevertheless more intelligent and more anxious to learn than most of the foreign peoples.

The fault is not with the public, but with the exhibitors, then with with the manufacturers, who make themselves the slaves of the exhibiting game.

I have mentioned it in previous articles. We have too many ignorant exhibitors, men who cannot even read and who make up their programs, not from the stories of the films, but from the posters. These push-cart and shoe-string men, who abandon the peddling game, believing that it was more easy to sell 5-cent admission tickets than to sell goods on the sidewalks, have so little experience in the show business and so little knowledge of human nature, that they form their opinion of what the public wants, not from the majority of the audience, but from the few noisy ones.

If at a theatre showing a blood and thunder picture to some three hundred patrons, fifty of them—the low, cheap, morbid element—applaud, Mr. Manager, who does not know better, cannot see two hundred and fifty dissatisfied patrons walk out, but, accepting the verdict of the fifty noisy ones, goes to his exchange and says: "This is what the public wants." Nay!

We have practically in the United States only one class of theatre. The same program is shown in all the theatres, and because the manufacturer listens to the ignorant exhibitor and to his cry of "What the public wants," he produces only films to please this class of exhibitors.

While I have not visited Europe for many years, I know that the open market was possible over there because they have different classes of motion picture theatres. They have the high-class places, where only the best films are shown, theatres where you do not meet the morbid class, but the most cultured element, members of the great "Academie Francaise." You have the low, cheap theatres for the men and women craving for blood and thunder pictures, etc.

It seems ridiculous, nevertheless it is a fact, you can see in the worst dump of the lower Bowery the very films shown at the high-class Regent Theatre. It is a mere question of price in the service.

If the cultured class is taking to motion pictures it is on account of some intelligent exhibitors who are putting up some high-class houses, yet the patronage is not growing very fast because the exhibitor spending a fortune on his theatre cannot be assured of a good, even program at all times. One day he will have an exceptionally good show, and the programs of the following days will be so weak as to keep the patrons away.

Patrons fond of good comedies are tired of going to motion picture theatres because for one good, clever comedy they may see to-day, they have to stand for a lot of poor films. Same with the dramas. As to the scenic and educational films, they are so rare that a patron must make up his mind to visit the theatre at least a whole week before he can see one on the screen.

This is the reason why the good class of intelligent Americans does not much frequent motion pictures. With the low element it is a different question. They are indifferent to the details, they do not care how unnatural the scene may be, as long as their morbid passion is thrilled by the sight of the weapon or actions of the villain.

The American public, at least the intelligent public, is fond of educational and scenic films, and I can state, without fear of contradiction, that every time a film is applauded at the Herald Square Theatre it is either an educational or scenic film.

One evening the film of the Pathe Freres' "Toad Traits" was received with loud applause from every part of the house, and the scenic "Hot Springs and Geysers of New Zealand" pleased much. It was the same the other day with the film, "Strange Traits of Serpents," also from the Pathe studios. I could go back several months and prove that all educational and scenic films are well received and please immensely.

An intelligent exhibitor of Illinois had tried a scheme. He had advertised that Monday would be the day for the children, with all good comedies; Thursday the serious day, with scenic and educational films; Friday the Western and Indian day, etc. The program was welcomed, but he could not keep it going, because he could not get the films. On Monday, when his theatre would be packed with children anxious to have a good laugh, the exchange would send him all dramas or educational films, and on Thursday, when the cultured class would travel from even a distance to see something to their liking, the exchange would send the most silly and stupid comedies in stock.

The American public is very anxious to know more of this world. There is not another nation on this earth so fond of travel as Americans; consequently scenic films always please. As America is foremost in education, industries, inventions, etc., the educational films always draw well. Evidently America, like other nations, has a low element. The whole question is, then, to have different grades of theatres for various classes and not cater exclusively to the low element.

The coming season does not augur well for motion pictures, as I see more of a decline in the good patronage than an increase, now that our 10 and 15-cent theatres are booking the sensational films of the 5-cent places. Certain well-known trademarks attract a regular patronage to a number of good houses, but if between these popular trade-marks the exhibitor is going to sandwich some of the questionable supposed feature films, he is going to lose his good patronage and compel the cultured class to shun motion picture theatres.

DARE-DEVIL LAW IN DRAGON RELEASE

Rodman Law has been engaged by the Ryno Film Company, producing "Dragon" films, to appear in a feature in which he will ascend in an aeroplane over Long Island Sound to a height of 2,500 feet, his sister, Miss Ruth Bancroft Law, who is two years his junior, controlling the machine. At a given signal she will volplane almost vertically to a height of 160 feet from the water, where Law will dive from the machine without the aid of any apparatus, and his sister will continue her flight, landing on the beach. According to the law of gravitation, the aeroplane, at the time Law leaves it, will be traveling approximately 80 miles an hour, or 119½ feet per second. Law's dive will take him to the water, where he will strike at a velocity of 225 feet per second, and the force of his weight will be approximately two tons. Mr. Law will also rescue a young lady from a burning hydroplane racing at a tremendous speed.

Motion Picture Theatre Construction Department

Mr. Henry M. Williams, a land owner of Fort Wayne, Ind., had an idea to erect a motion picture theatre on a valuable lot of his own.

He had not only a valuable lot in the heart of the shopping district of Fort Wayne, but an ideal site for a motion picture theatre, as with the entrance on the main street, he could save much rent by having the theatre proper erected in the rear, the less valuable part of the property.

Diagram No. 1

Shows us the lot: The rear part of the lot "A B," or west end, is 150 feet long by 60 feet wide. The east wing "C" is 60 feet long by 20 feet wide. This wing faces on the main street, while on the south side of the lot is an alley and on the north side a good business street.

As is generally the case, Mr. Williams called on a local architect to prepare plans. I had not the pleasure of knowing the architect, but by the plans submitted, it was easy to see that he had no experience in the theatrical line, that he was more of a village architect.

Fort Wayne is an important burg, where the property in the shopping district is quoted high enough to induce the builder to use every inch of it and not waste big back yards, as is the case in villages, where an acre can be bought for a song.

When Mr. Williams heard of me, he bombarded me with letters and sketches, as if I had no other work to do than to devote all my time on his proposed theatre. He wanted my advice on everything.

I answered Mr. Williams very politely and informed him that the plans and sketches submitted were not correct and not practical as with the great waste of land he would place a too high rent on the theatre to make it a profitable investment.

I told him that he had an ideal lot and that I could plan a theatre the rent of which would be practically free, on account of the stores, offices and apartments to be erected in connection with the theatre.

Mr. Williams was much pleased with my views and he asked me to prepare some plans. He was anxious to see my plans, as his architect, as a last resort, advised him to purchase an extra 30 foot strip of land on the north side of the wing "C" so as to have a theatre 50x120 on the main street.

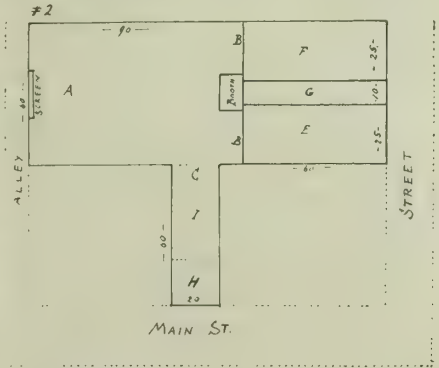
The proposed purchase is shown in "D" and the dotted lines in diagram No. 1.

Mr. Williams was greatly opposed to this purchase on account of the high value of the property.

Diagram No. 2

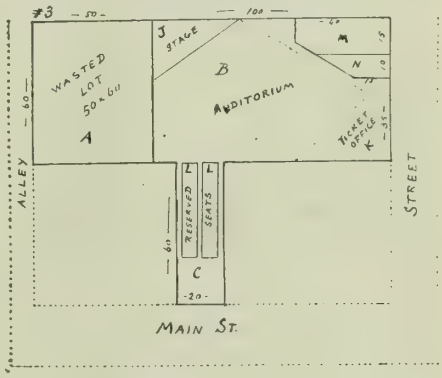
shows my plan. I suggested to use section "A" 60x90 for the theatre proper. This would have provided an auditorium large enough for the size of the town. By using the less valuable part of the lot, a theatre of lighter construction could have been erected. As this section "A" gives an alley, it would have been easy to provide many exits.

My intention was to build on section "B" 60x60 an apartment house with stores "E" and "F"; a wide hallway



"G" as an entrance to the building, with stairs for the upper floors and to serve also as an exit door for the theatre. This apartment house with stores would have yielded good rents on account of the importance of the business street. On the wing "C" I wanted to erect a four or five story office building, the two lower floors to be turned into a wide, long lobby for the theatre. As this wing has a frontage of 20 feet on the main street, it would have made a fine entrance for the theatre, and on account of the length I had suggested a front lobby "H" and an inside foyer "I." This office building "C" 20x60 would have been another source of good income.

This plan, as shown on diagram No. 2, would have occupied the whole lot with no waste whatever, and as the theatre would have been erected on the less valuable part of the lot, the rents collected from both the office building "C" and the apartment house and stores



"B" would have made the rent of the theatre practically free.

Mr. Williams was so satisfied with my original plans that he gave them to his regular architect to draw the regular plans, and after the work of the architect Mr. Williams sent me a copy of the blue prints, to have me pass on them.

While it would be too long and perhaps tiresome to the readers to reproduce in these pages all the first sketches made by the local architect, I will take the liberty to submit one, to show the space wasted and the poor idea of projection.

Diagram No. 3

shows a sketch submitted by the local architect. His intention was to use the best section of the lot "B" 60x100, for the theatre, the wing "C" for the reserved seats and waste section "A" 50x60 in a sort of back yard. There is still another great waste of space in the theatre in providing such an extra large triangular stage "J," 35 feet on one side and 25 on the other side. A motion picture theatre does not require such a stage, not even for cheap vaudeville. The box office entrance "K," as he calls it, is another great waste, as is the stage, it is triangular, 40 feet on one side and 35 on the other side.

The worst in this sketch is the arrangement of the reserved seats "L" in the wing "A." These reserved seats are not only too far but they are at a very bad angle with the picture. No one would pay an extra admission for the worst seats in the house.

As the architect has failed to indicate the operating booth, I will have to pass it under silence.

As can be seen by diagram No. 3, the auditorium is combined for about 400 chairs. Such a small house on such a valuable lot would make the rent prohibitive. The only outside income figured by the architect is a small store "M" 15x40 and a very small shop "N" 10x25.

I give the above as an illustration of some of the blunders of local architects. It is not a new case but will serve the purpose of warning the would-be builders of new theatres.

I don't know if the theatre has been erected as Mr. Williams has stopped his correspondence. As long as the plans were in course of preparation, he could give me no rest; he even wanted me to visit Fort Wayne. I could not do it without a remuneration as I had given him already too much of my time and I had to take care of my other office work.

MANUFACTURERS AS EXHIBITORS

ON another page of this issue, I warn the exhibitor against the too long programmes and the abuse of posters.

I know that I will be censured, because too many exhibitors, renters and manufacturers are sleeping on their laurels and are indifferent to what is taking place.

I compare our present supposed prosperous conditions to the position of the French Government in 1870. There was no use to warn Napoleon III or his ministers, they were sleeping on the old French laurels, they would listen to nothing and they could not see the immediate ruin of the Empire. When Napoleon was ready to declare war with Germany, he asked General Leboeuf, then Minister of War, if everything was ready. General Leboeuf answered: "Sire, if the war were to last ten years, we would not even miss a gaiter button." Less than six months later, when I was a Swiss soldier and was sent to the frontier to protect the neutrality of Switzerland, and when the starved army of Bourbaki was forced to enter the Swiss territory, we found little to disarm the French soldiers, few of them had arms, the majority were forced to go through the deep snow barefooted, half of them had rags on their backs, yet General Leboeuf had said that the government was fully ready.

We face the same story in filmdom. Because the manufacturer stays at home or promenades in Europe, he does not see the existing conditions, and, as the renters and exhibitors are too busy with the dollar of today, they do not believe in an immediate danger.

Nevertheless, the danger is at our doors, and it seems that I am a fair prophet, as a new sign, confirming my suspicions, recently caught my eye. Mr. Geo. Kleine is building a special theatre on West 42nd street, New York, to show his great productions.

Mr. Kleine is not only an importer of films, but he is a real lover of art and motion pictures, and because he cannot allow the Geraghtys and Guimonds to show in their all-night shows such a wonderful production like "Quo Vadis" side by side with the extra sensational film of Harry K. Thaw, Mr. Kleine is building his own theatres and possibly will not release his master productions to other showmen. As the Geraghtys are perhaps the first ones to give an all-night show for 5 cents and will set the example, Mr. Kleine may be the first manufacturer to run his own theatres and decide the other manufacturers to do likewise.

The smart push-cart and shoestring men, who tried to monopolize the show business by trying to put all other exhibitors out of business, with too long programs, souvenirs, etc., will be the first ones to suffer the effects of their own foolishness. What will they do when the Biograph Co. show their films in their own theatres, when Selig, Lubin, Thanhouser, Vitagraph, American, Eclair, Essanay, Famous Players, Edison, Gaumont, Kalem, etc., will do likewise? Yes, they will go to M. A. Neff to ask him to form a new league to compel the manufacturers to close their own theatres and to release their films through exchange men for the benefit of the exhibitor members of the league.

Some exhibitors claim that Mr. Geo. Kleine, as an importer of films, releasing through the General Film Co., should not run theatres himself. They go as far as to accuse Mr. Kleine of bad faith by compelling them to show the inferior productions and to reserve for his own profit the films on which easy money can be made.

While to the ignorant exhibitor such a statement may appear logical, others more intelligent do not blame Mr. Kleine, because the exhibitor in general has done nothing to encourage the manufacturer in the production of first-class films.

With the ridiculous daily change and the great objection to repeaters, a film has a short life, and when a manufacturer can dispose of sixty prints in the United States he is doing well.

An output of sixty copies can pay a manufacturer on an ordinary film, but when the manufacturer has to spend $50,000 or more on a negative, as in the case of Quo Vadis, Coming of Columbus, Last Days of Pompeii, etc., the manufacturer cannot make his money if the exhibitor is not willing to give more life to the film. We cannot blame the manufacturer to open his own theatres, to show that a good film can stand for months on the boards.

Mr. Geo. Kleine has done everything in his power to uplift the industry, he has released through the General Film Co. some wonderful productions of Gaumont and of Cines, yet he has been unable to decide the exhibitors to show these great productions more than one day. I had several talks with Mr. Geo. Kleine on this subject. Mr. Kleine has been discouraged, he did not receive the support of the exhibitor, and as he knows that the public is in favor of high-class productions, he has to follow the only course open, viz.: the running of his own theatres. Quo Vadis is still holding the boards at the Astor Theatre, after an experiment of over four months, a mute proof to the above statement. The exhibitors, blinded by their petty jealousy, could not see the bright prospects of the future, but Mr. Kleine could understand, and he is setting the pace. Other manufacturers will follow, and as they will have a chance to show in their own theatres and not be at the mercy of the foolish exhibitor, they will be encouraged to produce real master productions, and then the existence of the little dumps, managed by the push-cart and shoe-string men, will be at an end.

J. M. B.

Dr. Meyers, of the Tremont Temple, divine and preacher, whose fame is not confined to Boston alone, but who is well known over the entire country, was present at the presentation of the world-famous production, "Les Miserables," on Tuesday, September 15th, at the Tremont Temple. Some idea of the impression that this film has made on the theologian may be had when it is learned that during his sermon on Sunday last he made it the subject of a 12-minute talk.

THE BATTLE OF WATERLOO

Waterloo Film Company Five-Reel Feature

An Historic Battle in the World's History Filmed

In the United States, recently, there was a picture made entitled "The Battle of Gettysburg." Military historians placed the Battle of Gettysburg among the few decisive battles in the world's history. These historians are also agreed that in this select list of great combats the Battle of Waterloo should also find a place. Waterloo made history and changed history. The little Belgian field where this great battle was fought is visited annually by hundreds of thousands of Anglo-Saxons anxious to see the scene of the combat.

"Waterloo" has been a favorite theme with poets, painters, novelists, mainly because it brought about the downfall of one of the greatest generals in history, Napoleon Bonaparte. If this man had not been beaten at Waterloo, he had it in his power to dominate the non-civilized world by force of arms, for his ability and ambition were boundless. Personally, I am disappointed that he was beaten, because, contemplating affairs at the respectable distance of a century, it would have been interesting to know what Napoleon would have done had he beaten the Prussians and the English.

The film makes a magnificent spectacle of battle life and death. It is exceedingly popular in Europe and it should be popular in North America, where the interest in European history is hardly less keen than it is there.

My friend, Mr. P. P. Craft, who is featuring "The Battle of Waterloo," has made many successes in feature films. He is one of the shrewdest and ablest men in the business, and he should make a success of this picture. He has the finest instincts of the master showman. State-right buyers, exchanges, and exhibitors can rest assured that when P. P. Craft puts out a picture on the theme of the Battle of Waterloo it is worth looking at and exhibiting.

The picture is bound to be a huge success from the very nature of its subject. T. B.

SAPHO

World's Special Film Corporation

Story of the film, taken from Alphonse Daudet's novel, by permission of the author:

During an entertainment given by the engineer Dechelette, the former model, Fanny Legrand, meets the worthy provencal, Jean Gaussin d'Armondy, who is studying law in Paris. On the eve of breaking away from her, he hears that she is no other than the celebrated Sapho, immortalized by painters and musicians. He remains with her. Sapho called on Jean from time to time at his student's quarters, and after nursing him through a long illness she persuades him to keep her with him. Sapho is happy in finding a small apartment where to shelter their love. One day the sculptor, Gaoudal, lifted a corner of the veil that hid Sapho's past. This made Jean jealous. Sapho appeased him by the surrender of her old letters. The sudden blaze of those papers caused the chimney of the house to catch fire. Neighbors rushed in, and among the rescuers, Sapho recognized her father, the old driver. Ashamed, she dreaded that Jean's refined nature would take umbrage at this stain. But she knows how to manage him.

At times Jean is indignant and revolts, but Sapho always gets the best of him.

After high words with Sapho, and on the invitation of his uncle Cesaire, Jean takes a trip to his native home, and is thought to be safe amidst his family.

As soon as he returns, Sapho regains her hold on him. Rosario Sonchez, a former friend of Sapho, whom she has made stewardess of her mansion, invites Jean and his mistress to luncheon. On that occasion Rosario introduces Jean to De Potter, the celebrated musician. Sapho's friends make fun of her disinterested love. Disgusted at his bondage, De Potter tells Jean, as an example of what he is to expect, of the hard life he leads with Rosario. A few days later it is decided to leave the mansion and to go and live at Chaville, close to the Hettemas.

At the request of Sapho, Jean adopts a child, in ignorance that the child is the son of Flamant, condemned for forgery through his love for Sapho. That day, as a celebration of their new installation at Chaville, they all have a picnic in the woods. It is there that they meet Irene Bouchereau, niece of the family doctor, which is the cause of a quarrel, stopped by the sound of Hettema's horn. One day Dr. Bouchereau meets Jean in a train and invites him to his house. The young people are pleased with one another. Then comes Jean on the eve of marrying the doctor's niece. Sapho compels him to give up all thoughts of marriage. Recognizing that his life is bound up with that of Sapho, Jean announces to his family that he is going abroad with his friend. His family reproach and curse him, especially his father. However, he learns that his mistress has received a visit from her former lover, the father of the child, and maddened by jealousy, he insists that Sapho go with him to America. Fortunately for him, it is she who leaves him.

AMUSEMENT SUPPLY COMPANY CATALOG

The catalog recently issued by the Amusement Supply Company of Chicago is a comprehensive book containing everything necessary in the equipment of a theatre. To list everything catalogued in its 112 pages would require the reprinting of the entire index, which in itself takes up a whole page. Everything in it has been neatly and tastefully arranged by Mr. Traub, properly illustrated and well displayed.

On the inside back cover he has tacked a supplement illustrating all the parts of the Motiograph 1913 Model Arc Lamp, improved parts of the Motiograph 1912 Model, Motiograph parts, Power's Nos. 5, 6 and 6A parts. This supplement in itself is worth a good deal to the exhibitor or operator who is not thoroughly familiar with all the small and intricate parts of the machine.

Besides this feature, we find all the different makes of machines listed and their various parts. In fact, it tells about everything necessary in the operating booth, not only for the theatre in the big city, but also, in towns where electricity is not available, it lists gas-making outfits, and also tents for the itinerant showman.

For the furnishing of a theatre it lists such articles as fans, exhausts, seats, etc. For the front of the house it has turnstiles, ticket cancellers, ticket venders, and frames. Rewinds, carrying cases and exit signs also form a part of this catalog.

The catalog is printed on good quality paper and has an especially heavy colored cover, with an illustration of a theatre on its front cover. It is neat, well compiled and handy.

IN CONVICT GARB

Essanay

On September 26th the Essanay Film Mfg. Co. will release this two-part feature, which centers about the lives of several convicts whose stations in the social world were widely different, but through circumstances were thrown together. Richard Traverse does himself and the Essanay brand of pictures credit in this production by his superior acting and daring achievements, which lend to this photoplay interest and excitement. E. H. Calvert, as usual, carries his role in a convincing way, doing some very good acting in a difficult part.

In order to give this picture true color, the Essanay acting company went to the penitentiary at Joliet to secure the proper settings. One has opportunity to view the impregnable walls which surround the massive structure in which the breakers of the law are housed.

Especially thrilling is the escape of Swayne (Mr. Calvert) and the pursuit by automobile. Added interest is given this chase in view of the fact that the prison warden's daughter is kidnaped by Swayne before making his daring flight. The automobile, however, proves more speedy than the electric controlled hand-car, and with a flying leap Chub (Mr. Traverse), who has become a trusty, masters the occupant of the hand-car.

The entire film is exceptionally well staged and tells a forceful story.

The story deals with Elliott Swayne, the cashier of a bank, who is unworthy of the trust placed in him. His companions are men of the underworld who prey on society for a livelihood. One of these, through Swayne's influence, is given a position of janitor at the bank. Swayne's morning's mail contains a letter from his brokers, advising him that they must have thirty thousand dollars to cover his shortage on the market. Swayne has been using the bank's money in his gambling, and realizes that discovery is imminent if he does not secure the desired capital in time.

With his three companions he plans the robbery of the bank that night. He is sure of the success of his plans, as a reception is being held at the banker's home, to which he is invited and attends. During the course of this gathering he becomes engaged to the banker's daughter (Ruth Stonehouse). The operations of the bank-breakers work successfully through the operations of Chub, who because of his connection with th institution gains ready admittance. After the night watchman has been bound and gagged Swayne is telephoned at the banker's home. In order not to show his connection with the affair, he is immediately held up when he enters the bank and compelled to open the safe. A passing policeman in his rounds notices that something unusual is going on in the bank and investigates. After securing the loot, the trio are about to escape, after binding both Swayne and the watchman, when they are nabbed by the police. Grant (Charles Hitchcock), when he realizes the crime he has committed, confesses all to the police, including Swayne's part, in his statement.

When the news reaches the banker's daughter of the confession of her fiancé and his imprisonment in the penitentiary for a long term of years, she is horrified, but finds sympathy and consolation in an old friend of the family, Phillip Warren, whom she afterwards marries.

Several years after these happenings, Warren is appointed warden of the State prison. Swayne's punishment is all the more severe as he is compelled to witness the happiness of the Warren. family.

Because of his good behavior, Chub has been made a "trusty." He and the warden's little daughter become very good friends. Swayne, on the other hand, is rebellious and sullen. With the help of his fellow-prisoners he effects his escape, taking with him the warden's little daughter. The mother gives the alarm, which sends the warden and his men out on the chase. Chub, however, is a little in the lead, and jumps into a passing automobile and compels the driver to give pursuit. Swayne reaches the railroad and takes possession of a hand-car. Chub's machine gradually closes the intervening space until both car and machine are side by side, when he makes a sensational leap, knocking Swayne from the machine and rescuing the little girl. Swayne is captured and the child joyfully returned to the anxious parents, and Chub is promised the assistance of the warden in securing his freedom.

THE INGRATE, OR THE VEIL OF THE PAST

Union Feature—Three Reels

In simplicity and excitement of plot, as well as intensity of acting, this is one of those film plays that will surely get over with great ease. It is all so plain and, above all, so human. A young fellow is caught stealing by his employer. The latter is a kind-hearted man, and on the would-be thief signing a confession, he is let off. But the thief is also an ingrate. He robs his benefactor's safe, recovers his confession, and discovers documents incriminating his employer, a banker. Thus armed, Robert Sarton (the ingrate), tries to force his employer to give his daughter to him (Robert). On the banker refusing, Robert produces the incriminating documents. The banker is in despair, but a good fairy in the person of an actress whom the banker formerly befriended, appears.

She persuades the ingrate to take her out to dinner, and then by a trick induces him to sign another confession of guilt. So that the banker, having been placed in possession of the original confession, as it seems to be, is enabled to checkmate the ungrateful young man.

Good photography and acting make this an admirable three-reel subject.

SCENE FROM "THE INGRATE"

I have done my best to show the folly of the abuse of posters and of long programs, but on account of the general apathy of men who cannot see their own danger because they are blinded by petty jealousy, which has done so much to disrepute motion pictures, I can do nothing more than abandon them to their fate.

I welcome the following clipping, as we say in French: "Aux Grands Maux, les grands remedes," or as translated: "For the great diseases, the great remedies."

The following clipping will do more good than anything else; it will serve as an example; it is going to induce the pushcart men and shoestring peddlers, who have hesitated in the past, to go on with the game of annihilation by following the Geraghtys and the Guimonds in the foolish war of killing each other with long programs, souvenirs, etc.

"RIVAL SHOWS SPLIT TOWN"

Film War Results in All-Night Exhibitions at Monticello

Monticello, N. Y., Sept. 15.—The residents of this place are divided into two factions over the rivalry between Geraghty & Son and L. F. Guimond, proprietors of two moving picture theatres.

The Geraghtys for a long time had the only picture show in town, but recently L. F. Guimond, of Newark, N. J., built a $25,000 casino here, and immediately the proprietors of the shows advertised special attractions to get patronage. Geraghty & Son advertised six reels and Guimond made it seven. Thereupon the Geraghtys came back with eight reels and Guimond toured the town with an automobile bearing signs, "eleven reels to-night and steam heat." This prompted Geraghty & Son to engage two operators and put on an all-night show announcing "come and stay as long as you like." The house was packed until daylight.—From New York Times.

An all-night show means from fifteen to eighteen reels. What are going to be the consequences, not to the exhibitors but to the public?

The next day school children will not be in proper shape to follow their studies. The clerks and shop girls will be sleepy and not attentive to their duties. Fathers, mothers, bosses, teachers, in fact every one will have a grouch and hurl a stone at motion pictures. The only man to be happy will be the oculist, as a steady daily grind of eighteen reels will ruin the eyesights of at least three-fourths of the population.

It is useless to say that foolish exhibitors will not stop at an all-night show, but will continue the fight by offering a twenty-four-hour show with many special features, souvenirs, free lunches, sleeping accommodations, etc. This clipping is going to decide the lukewarms to follow; they have been waiting for some one to make the jump and, like a lot of sheep, they are watching.

While the exchanges and the manufacturers have realized the danger of too long programs, they have not the courage of their opinions. Like the exhibitors they are governed by petty jealousy. They are afraid that Jones would take his service away from them to carry it to another exchange if they should dare to say something to him. This silence is working against motion pictures.

For years we have fought valiantly the press and the clergy, we have practically reached the aim of our ambition, viz.: to show only clean, moral pictures. With the support of the Board of Censors and of the good manufacturers we have silenced the enemies of Cinematography, and have induced the better and cultured classes to be patrons of our theatres. Without contradiction the United States is the cleanest country in the world for its shows.

All this good work is going to be destroyed because our manufacturers, by permitting such long programs, are opening the doors wide to the miserable, immoral and questionable films from the other side that were barred from our shores in the good old past.

Our manufacturers have the hardest time to keep pace with the increased programs, and as the programs are still increasing in length, the American manufacturers find themselves unprepared to meet the situation. They are no more asking the government to impose a high tariff on foreign films; they do not even try to use their patents to protect the Americans from the Europeans; no, they seem to abandon all fight for supremacy, and they throw the doors open for anything made in America or in any other country, as long as it is a perforated band of celluloid with something printed on it. The licensed manufacturers have so well recognized the situation that they allow the licensed exhibitors to show independent pictures.

Now that long programs have afforded a chance to many unscrupulous film men to import sensational European features, we give them a stamp of approval to open a direct competition to the American manufacturers and renters. It is not rare to see an importer of foreign films visit the exhibitor, ask him to discard his domestic service to patronize the imported sensational films.

The future is easy to predict. The clergy and press are going to renew their fight, and the cultured patronage will shun our theatres. We know the fate of the two plays "The Lure" and "The Fight," so we can see what the authorities will do to motion pictures if we encourage the importation of foreign films.

The reader will be surprised when I say that the above clipping is welcomed. Why welcome such a state of affairs? Why not? The sooner the better. We cannot avoid such a bad condition of the show business as long as we keep with us the push cart and shoestring men; we cannot eject them, but we can encourage them to a still bigger fight in which the fools will kill themselves. After the storm sunshine. When the peddlers will find that there is more money in selling cabbages than in the show business they will abandon the theatrical business to better and more intelligent men, so the sooner the better.

Lafontaine was a great French fable writer, and each fable has a good moral lesson. I can cite the one of "The Three Thieves and the Ass." While two thieves are fighting for the possession of the plunder, an ass, a third thief, appears and, taking advantage of the confusion, departs with the animal, the bone of contention. The ass gone, the two first thieves have to stop their fighting for lack of interest.

While the Geraghtys and the Guimonds are fighting for the patronage we have behind the game influential men who are preparing strings of theatres, and will capture the whole show business and bring it back to its normal conditions. Again the sooner the better. These men willing to have chains of theatres are not willing to fight with the pushcart men and peddlers, consequently the sooner these undesirable exhibitors put themselves out of business the better for Cinematography.

I have tried to fight these long programmes and this abuse of posters. I have tried to bring the show business to a more dignified state, but as I said at the start of this article, there is no need to waste more time and energy as exhibitors are too imbued with petty jealousy and refuse to listen to common sense. THE WHOLE PROGRAMME FILM

(From the Australian Cinematograph Journal)

The feature film has repeatedly formed the subject of discussion in these columns. Its gradual growth has been traced, and readers of this journal will hardly have to be reminded that long before the whole programme picture was even mooted in either our English or foreign contemporaries, its coming was foreshadowed by us. But two or three years ago a picture exceeding 1,000 feet in length was so rare that it was advertised for weeks prior to its release, and though the majority of the long films proved successful, they met at the outset with a by no means cordial welcome at the hands of managements generally. "The long films," asserted many managers, "weary the audiences, and they cannot possibly last." Precisely opposite views were taken by this journal, and it was pointed out that those who did not see eye to eye with it would rue their shortsightedness. The long film was the natural evolution of cinematography having become an enormous factor in public entertainment, and of the substitution of actors who had earned their spurs on the dramatic stage for the earlier exponents of moving picture creations. And as this new element came into the field, so had simultaneously arisen a demand on the part of the public for a much higher class of pictures generally than it had hitherto been accustomed to. Picture producers were quick to recognize the change, and that both their standards and their methods needed radical alteration. From this the evolution to the longer film originated. But the way was beset with danger, and the producers went warily. The more enterprising of the managements, ever on the lookout for a means of increasing the popularity of pictures, seconded the efforts of the pioneers of the long films to demonstrate the wisdom of their new departure, and what was the result? Star films were still comparatively rare, and remained so for a considerable time. But, as one by one the managements that had held back also became eager inquirers, it gradually became an acknowledged fact that no programme could be boomed unless it included a film of over 2,000 feet.

NOTES

Warner's Features, Inc., will shortly release a three-part feature, entitled "For the Heart of a Princess."

Lester Park, who recently left New York on a business trip for Warner's Features, has done such good work in behalf of the feature program that he has been made district manager for the Western territory.

J. W. Cotter, who has been managing the Kansas City office of the Universal organization, has assumed charge of the Warner branch office in that city.

Charles Snodgrass is now manager of the Denver branch of Warner's Features. J. W. Allen, formerly in charge of the Universal exchange in Oklahoma City, has gone to the Coast, where he will fit into one of the Western offices of Warner's Features, Inc.

When Al. E. Christie put on one of two dramas as a rest from the comedies, Donald MacDonald took the chance given him in both hands to show how wonderfully good he is at serious work and to prove his versatility. There was a time when Donald did nothing but heavy work and leads, and he was well known on several vaudeville circuits with dramatic sketches as well as in stock.

William Clifford is getting to be a regular landowner. He has recently purchased another bungalow, a beauty, in Hollywood, with a gorgeous garden. He is renting his other home and is going to live in the new one. Clifford, who is doing such great work as Henry McRae's leading man, is a great believer in the future of Hollywood property and his earnings are going into real estate in that place. He is a far-seeing, wise man, too.

Jeff Dolan is now manager of the North American Film Co., 145 West 45th street, New York City.

Suit has been brought in the U. S. District Court at Los Angeles by Jack London and Frank A. Garbutt, trustee for Bosworth, Inc., to restrain H. M. Horkeimer, of the Balboa Amusement Co., from any further production or attempted sale of the Jack London stories in motion pictures.

MARY FULLER AND HER PET PIG "WILFRED"

It is notorious that the greater number of motion pictures made are not suitable for children. We have proved this out ourselves time and again by getting the ideas and views of children on the pictures they have seen. Now comes the Youth Photoplay Co. to supply this evident need. This company, with offices at 145 West 45th street, and under the management of Mr. W. W. Young, proposes releasing children's plays showing the achievements of youth, its activities, special school events, sports, travel and the like. Each production is to be reviewed and approved by Judge Willis Brown. As the letterhead of this company says, "Youth is one thing of universal appeal in motion pictures." To youth this company proposes making an appeal by means of suitable pictures."

We commend this scheme, and we shall be interested to see the company's releases. The children of today are the men and women of the future. Get their interest in the motion picture today, and their interest in the future is likely to be retained. The Jesuit formula is a very sound one: "Give us," say these great educationalists, "the children; the parents can take care of themselves," and they are right.

From our standpoint, that of faith in the future of the motion picture as the greatest mind-controlling agency that has ever been conceived we say, let us have access to the minds of the children by means of suitable motion pictures.

We wish the Youth Photoplay Co. success in its aims.

THE IMPORTANT COPYRIGHT CASE

James E. Northmore, who was arrested by the Federal authorities for making copies of George Kleine's copyrighted photographs of "Quo Vadis" and selling them in the open market, was arraigned last week in Chicago and bound over to the Federal Grand Jury in one thousand dollars bail. Northmore furnished bail and engaged counsel. Mr. George Kleine and his associates have determined to prove the value of Federal protection in copyright issues, and intend to relentlessly pursue all violators. Since George Kleine made his immense success with the Cines production of "Quo Vadis" there have been several minor attractions started who have taken advantage of his great advertising and wonderful press notices, and have even gone so far as to use his copyright photos and cuts, and in some instances to use his own press matter, misleading the public into the belief that they are presenting the original Astor Theatre production.

MOTION PICTURES PREFERRED TO MR. BRYAN'S LECTURES

The William J. Bryan tent show of all stars, showing for one week only, with the Secretary of State as an extra added attraction (at an advance in price), had strong competition at Culpeper, Va., last week in the form of a motion picture show that played just across the street from the lot where the Secretary held forth.

The Enterprise Park Motion Picture Theatre had for its attractions "The Brothers, or The Parting of the Ways"; "The Surveyors," a thrilling tale of cannibals and hairbreadth escapes, and "The Power of Money."

Against this mastodonic programme the Chautauqua offered a lecture by Dr. A. E. Turner, entitled "The Scope of Sociology." the "World Famous Florentine Concert Band" and Miss Millicent Melrose, a Boston soprano.

The rivalry was intense. The Enterprise people had an advantage, in that the prices ran from 5 cents to 10 cents, while the tent show demanded a fee of half a dollar. But the pictures held their own. The ballyhoo in front of the door chanted the praise of the attractions to be seen within for 5 cents—half a dime—and got the crowd coming.

The rivalry had an effect upon the attendance in the tent, for even the magic of Bryan's name was not strong enough to fill the seats. There were many left vacant when the "exercises of the evening" really got under way. The crowd was the poorest of the week.

But the competition to Bryan got a body blow soon after the star began his performance. The Enterprise outfit had mandolins and a banjo to supply music for the pictures. As Bryan spoke the melodies from the opposition camp came stealing into the big tent and disconcerted the audience. The Florentine band, however, which preceded Bryan must have disturbed the motion picture spectators as much as the picture music interfered with the Bryan crowd. Nevertheless, one of the county officials sent the Culpeper police force over to the theatre with orders to "stop the music or move it down the street." The police force seemed to be a bit puzzled as to just how he was going to "move the theatre down the street," but he finally went over, and appealing to the manager on the grounds of Southern hospitality and courtesy, interwoven with a few threats, finally persuaded him to run the balance of the picture dramas without the aid of the "orchestra."

In spite of that handicap, the pictures more than held their own. The manager had high feelings over the combination in restraint of trade that had been made against him, which he had been led to believe was against the Bryan political philosophy, but he said nothing—that is, nothing for publication.

APPEARANCE AND MANNERS

Suggestions Invited, Questions Cheerfully Answered

Address: Appearance Department, Exhibitors' Times

In the issue of the Exhibitors' Times of August 23rd I said a few words on the girl usher.

Since then my experience has demonstrated the sure foundation of my remarks—the girl usher can be a nice ornament to a theatre and may in some cases draw a small extra attendance of mashers to the displeasure of many ladies; as to efficient service, she does not seem to fill the bill, at least in a motion picture theatre.

I cannot blame the girl usher for taking it as easy as she can and not leaving her comfortable corner to show seats unless she is compelled to do so, as the work of an usher is far from being a sinecure. I mean the work of the usher who has at heart the interests of her employer, and who wishes to make the patrons as comfortable as possible, to induce them to call again.

On Thursday evening, September 18th, I visited a theatre on upper Broadway, New York City, showing vaudeville and pictures. After paying my 25 cents admission for an orchestra seat, I was allowed to walk up and down the aisle to find a seat. Ushers were there; plenty of them—from four to five girl ushers resting themselves against the brass railings, chewing gum and talking of the latest split skirts and fashions. I was not the only one to receive the same treatment, as several parties of ladies and gentlemen had to hunt seats for themselves. Only once during my stay in the theatre did I see a girl usher take the trouble to show a seat, and this was for a middle-aged man, who had insisted to be shown a chair in the first rows.

While I do not see the value of such ornaments, unless the manager wishes to have someone to keep thieves from walking away with the brass railings, I do not blame the poor girls. As I have been compelled more than once to take the place of the usher, I know what it means to be walking up and down the aisles for several hours per day. The waiters, who are compelled to stand for hours on their feet, wear old soft shoes, with small or no heels, but such shoes cannot be considered by the girl usher; she is not working in a theatre for the sake of the work, she accepts the job for the opportunity to show herself, consequently she must show a small foot and some high French heels, and this explains why she has to hold to the brass railings.

As I have stated in my previous article, the girl usher is a mere fad. The exhibitor who does not reason must follow the fads.

No, the work of a conscientious usher is not a sinecure, but requires much patience, good manners, clean, neat appearance and a good memory. While ushering seems to be a very simple class of labor, you will find that more or less skill, or, at least, experience, is required before a man can become a proficient usher.

Some shovelers are awkward and do less work in a day than a man who has long been familiar with his work.

For instance, some may imagine that anybody can drive a horse, or two horses. One morning I noticed a boy in charge of a delivery wagon. He turned from the curb, evidently without using his eyes, and soon found himself between two cars, one going west and the other east. Both motormen had to come to a dead stop, otherwise they would have crushed the wagon, the horse and the careless boy in charge of the reins.

Within half an hour after that incident, I saw a strong, heavy-set man driving a four-horse team with four or five tons of coal in the wagon. Without a bit of trouble and in a crowded street, he swung his team around and backed his wagon exactly opposite the coal hole in the sidewalk. There was no delay in the traffic. He knew his business and he deserved big pay. The boy knew nothing of his job, and will cost his employer big money before he learns his trade.

Take the case of firemen. Firing requires skill, and great skill at that. In big railroad systems they watch the consumption of coal. Every engine is charged with the fuel it uses, and note is made of the number of miles it covers and the loads it has hauled. The fireman is then the economist of the system.

There is another important factor in city work. A skilled fireman will not make one-tenth the amount of smoke produced by a man ignorant or careless in his work.

In short, more or less skill is necessary in every walk of life where men labor. There is no common labor.

One of the drawbacks of the work of the usher is that most of the young men who could be proficient ushers refuse to act on account of a false pride. The same false pride exists in all positions requiring the wear of the uniform. Young men believe that the uniform is a sign of servitude, consequently a common labor. A great mistake, as all work that is honest is honorable. A man should not be ashamed of the uniform which stamps him with the seal of honest labor.

A trained memory is the principal tool of the usher of a motion picture theatre. He must know how many single or double seats he has at his disposition and where they are located, so as to save valuable time and avoid the crowding of the aisles. He must keep his mind busy calculating all the time, to know how many are going out, how many are coming in. This is no easy work, when we consider that a motion picture theatre is a constant stream of patrons walking in and out, yet it is of the greatest importance to a well-managed house. The usher who can meet the patrons and tell them at first sight that he has three seats on the left of the fifth row, etc., deserves good wages. The usher must also remember the fancies of the regular patrons, as most of them have some preferred seats. If the usher can say to a patron: "I have your seat," he will please the said patron and encourage him to call again, as the patron will have an idea that the usher has reserved the seat.

As I said, the principal tool of the usher is an excellent memory for everything; he must not only try to memorize the seats at his disposition, but he must know the regular patrons and their families, and keep a sort of tab on their movements. A lady will call on the usher and ask him: "Have you seen my children, are they still looking at the pictures, or have they gone home?" The usher is supposed to know the children of this regular patron, he is supposed to know if they have been in the show, if they are still there, or if they have gone home. A male patron will give his ticket to the usher and say: "Have you seen my wife or daughter? Where are they seated?" or he will say: "My daughter is coming soon, tell her where I am seated," etc.

The intelligent usher, who has a good memory and good manners, is worth a good deal to a manager. Such an usher cannot rest himself against the brass railings, he must be on the go all the time, he must survey the auditorium to refresh his memory on the vacant seats.

This is where the girl usher fails, and a manager who would insist on having the girl ushers walk the aisles all the time would be considered a man of little principle, not to say bad manners.

The usher must be intelligent and able to answer many questions. He must know the popular actors by names, the companies, and he must not say that the picture on the screen is a Nestor when it is a Selig.

CHICAGO LETTER

From now on the campaign which has been conducted by the International Motion Picture Association against the showing of more than three reels for five cents will be more of a personal nature. The method of attack will be to have a committee of members of the Association see those few who are not in favor of the decision, and in that way endeavor to convert them by personal arguments to the necessity of taking this step.

As was demonstrated at a meeting held at the Globe Theatre last week, there were very few in favor of the larger program at the five-cent admission charge. In fact, out of the two hundred or two hundred and fifty exhibitors present, there were only seven that were of a contrary opinion. These seven were for the larger program at the five-cent charge. Without a doubt, however, the majority of these will be listed among the believers within a very short time. Some of these, it must be admitted, have very good reason for continuing the long-program policy, as their competition is very keen and is of a like nature. As a few of them stated, they are merely in favor of more than three reels for five cents because the conditions demand it from them. It is the effort and aim of the Association, however, to remedy these conditions in the vicinities in which they are found. That they will accomplish their mission is evident, as their campaign is being pursued along lines that has brought success on every hand up to the present time. Their methods of procedure have been just and equitable to all concerned, as it has always been in the past. They are strengthening another weak link in the chain of motion picture exhibitions that is bound to go down in history a credit to every member of this body.

The meeting during its entire process was taken up with arguments pro and con on the question before the body. Mr. Robert Levy and Mr. Natkin acted as chairman and secretary respectively. These two gentlemen were appointed at a meeting held a week ago in this same theatre. Mr. Levy pursued the same just course he did at the former meeting and showed no partiality at any time. Speakers of both factions were heard and their points of argument thoroughly discussed by the chair and others among those present. Mr. Schindler and Mr. Glickman championed the longer program, while Mr. Choynsky and Mr. Levy bore the brunt of the burden in defending the three reels. Mr. Choynsky is not only an orator, but a convincing talker who has thoroughly studied conditions and the effects of the present racy method of conducting the motion picture theatre. His arguments were forceful and struck home in a way that left no room for argument. Mr. Choynsky did himself and his organization credit. Mr. Levy showed a wisdom in handling large bodies of men that is very seldom displayed in a meeting of this kind, where order and parliamentary law is an unknown quantity. Mr. Schindler handled his subject in a peculiar way, in view of the fact that he is showing only three reels for five cents, and at the same time casts his arguments with the other faction. Mr. Glickman, however, is a dyed-in-the-wool believer in independence and personal control of business, this control to be exercised according to the lights of the individual, and not to be influenced by party or organization legislation. While he did not shut his eyes to what was said contrary to his way of thinking, nevertheless it was impossible to make him see the light either by theory or by practical statements.

While the opposing body was given the first opportunity to address the body, the speakers seemed somewhat timid. From their remarks it was learned that with but one or two exceptions they were in favor of the three-reel program but, because of local conditions, they could not put it into effect without a tremendous drop in their business, in view of the fact that their competition, while not running any more than three pictures, was offering additional inducements in the way of vaudeville and singers. They were able to do this because of their added seating capacity.

One of the speakers made the statement that there might possibly be a nigger in the woodpile. By this was meant that possibly one or the other of the film interests was behind the movement, and from the speaker's opinion it was the feature-film people. Should this shorter program become universal in the city of Chicago, it is really the feature-film people that will lose, and the regular exchanges will be the gainer. The feature exchanges at the present time are securing their business entirely from the overflow that cannot be supplied by the regular buying exchanges; that is to say, among those theatres which are running more than three reels. The ones really to gain by this move are the buying exchanges of all three factions —General, Mutual and Universal. As it now stands the General Film Company can go into any locality and furnish three neighboring theatres a change of three reels a day without conflicting. The Mutual can hold their patrons indefinitely on this same basis; the same holds good with the Universal. In the past the latter two factions were compelled to give up supplying a theatre after a certain period, as their program was not large enough to continually supply four and five reels for any great length of time without duplicating. In the past, in neighborhoods where the theatres were so thick that the exhibitors were compelled to stick to one program, it was necessary to keep within the limit of the supply of the buying exchanges and get their added pictures from the feature exchanges.

The suggestion that ten cents be charged, instead of reducing the number of reels, was not given much consideration. The proposition was put forth by Mr. Glickman. While he felt that he could not reduce his program, he was sure that if the increased admission price became general he could secure it. In the vernacular, the argument is as broad as it is long. If he can secure ten cents for six pictures, and his neighbors charge the same price for the same show, there is no reason why they cannot all reduce to three reels and at a five-cent admission charge. It is a fifty per cent reduction in the admission charge.

All the exchange representatives were present at this meeting, but took no active part in the proceedings. As mentioned by the chairman, they were merely present to get more intimately acquainted with conditions and get first-hand knowledge of the wishes of the majority of attending exhibitors.

It is thought that within a very few weeks the three-reel program will be in universal use throughout Chicago with but few exceptions. The necessity of conserving will soon be realized by all in the theatre business. The novelty of the motion picture must be sustained, and that by regulating the doses to be served to the public. To overeat is unhealthy, and to overfeed the public motion pictures is unhealthy for the business.

BESNARD AS FILM DIRECTOR

Paris, Sept. 20.—The news that Albert Besnard, the painter, who is intrusted with the interests of his country at the French temple of art in Rome, known as the Villa Medici, has been appointed the artistic director and censor of films for an Italian Cinematograph concern, is regarded as showing the high artistic level to which this form of entertainment is now rising.

M. Besnard, who is painting the new ceiling of the Theatre Francais and has visited Paris in connection with that work, explains that the firm's idea is to offer a valuable prize to the writer or poet turning out the best sketch suitable for Cinematography, viewed from the point of view of artistic taste and beauty.

If M. Besnard has his way all the improbable stories of adventure will disappear from the picture theatres, and will be displaced by masterpieces of dramatic and poetic art, written by the world's greatest authors.

PILAR MORIN TO APPEAR IN MUTUAL FILMS

We are happy to announce that Madam Pilar Morin, the famous actress and pantomimist, is shortly to appear in films released by the Mutual Corporation. It is evidence of Pilar Morin's popularity with Motion picture theatregoers that although it is two or three years since she appeared in films, there are requests made from Europe and Asia, as well as this country, for pictures with her in the leading parts. We have no hesitation in saying that this gifted artist will vastly enhance the popularity of any pictures in which she may appear. We congratulate the Mutual on having secured her services.

In No. 2 of the Exhibitors' Times Pilar Morin wrote what is to our minds the classic article on her own art. It expresses the requirements of motion picture acting in order that it may be convincing to spectators. We await with interest the films in which Pilar Morin is to appear.

"Zuma, the Gypsy," is the Kleine-Cines two-reel which made such a sensation abroad and which is to be released by George Kleine in America, Tuesday, November 4th. This is the "Cines" in which Madame Hesperia dances with a python. Madame Hesperia plays Zuma, the gypsy girl, and is hired to perform the dance with a big snake in a mammoth reception hall.

Iva Shepherd, a prominent member of Edwin August's company, was injured at the shore on the rocks when she injured her kneecap, being thrown on the rocks by a big wave. She has been incapacitated for a week and will not be able to move freely for some time. Miss Shepherd is an emotional actress of great parts. The wave which threw Miss Shepherd against the rocks threw Edwin August and the camera man off into the water, and this time the camera went, too. All this happened at Point Firmin.

Mr. and Mrs. William Bechtel, of the Edison Company, are taking their first vacation since going into motion pictures, five years ago.

Charles Horan, director of "Dragon" films, who has produced "The Blindness of Courage," "Her Last Ride," and others, is producing a three-reel film of Rodman Law.

Clarkson P. Ryttenberg, general manager of the Ryno Film Company, producing "Dragon" films, states that there are a few exclusive territories still open for the three-reel "Dragon" feature, "The Blindness of Courage" or "Between Two Loves."

The American Kineto Corporation announce that the following territories are still open for "In a Serpent's Coils": Oregon, Washington, Michigan, Texas and Indiana. The next release of this company is the "Waters of Death" in three reels.

The World's Series baseball games between the New York "Giants" and the Philadelphia "Athletics" will be photographed and shown the same nights as the games are played, by the Commercial Motion Picture Co., 102 West 101st street, New York City.

Mr. Elmer J. McGovern, formerly of the advertising staff of "The Exhibitors' Times," is now publicity manager of the New York Motion Picture Company. He is a capable and intelligent young man, and we wish him every success in his new field of endeavor.

George Kleine left Chicago Tuesday last en route for Italy. Mr. Kleine called for a few days at his New York office before sailing. Mr. Kleine proposes to arrange for a series of new multiple-reel subjects and to take care of the subjects now in making abroad.

The Exclusive Supply Corporation's program will be strengthened by the addition of a Gaumont two-reel feature subject, to be issued every Saturday, beginning October 18th. This is in addition to the two other longer features issued by the Gaumont Company on the 15th and 30th of each month.

Mr. Benjamin Judell, formerly with the Western Milwaukee & Mutual Film Exchange, Minneapolis, has been engaged as manager of the Minneapolis branch office of the World Special Films Corporation, which will be located in the Temple Court Building. Mr. Judell has been in New York for the past week and leaves Monday afternoon for Minneapolis.

Phil Gleichman, vice-president and general manager of the World Special Films Corporation, has returned from Philadelphia, after having made arrangements with William C. Karrer to take charge of the Philadelphia branch office, which will be located at No. 1316 Vine street. Extensive alterations are to be made in the building, which will delay the opening of the office until about October 1st.

During the fire scene on board the ship in Edison's two-reel picture, "Hard Cash," Robert Milasch was up on the main mast while the flames were reaching for him. "Bob" is built along the lines of a lath. He tried to keep his legs drawn up out of reach of the flames, in which he was only partly successful, as his shoes and stockings were scorched, but he stuck to the mast until the scene was over.

How a clever swindler, mingling in the best society in Paris, by means of an ingeniously contrived box containing a great white diamond manages to tempt his friends to steal the jewel, and then, catching them by means of a photograph taken instantaneously with the attempted theft, and by offering to turn the negative over to them at a fancy price, is the central theme around which a Kleine-Eclipse two-reel feature has been made. The title of the picture is "The Rajah's Diamond Rose," booked for release Tuesday, October 28th.

NOTES

Allan Dwan is leaving the Universal to join Aubrey M. Kennedy, of the Western Features Film Company, which concern starts work about the middle of September.

Helen Case is back after a long holiday with her folks in the East. She is considering several engagements, but has not definitely decided upon any particular one yet.

Art Ortega, the impersonator of Indian parts, goes with Frank Montgomery to the Kalem. Ortega has always been a part of Montgomery's company and his step seems a natural one.

Wallace Reid, of the Universal, with Ed. Brady and Dorothy Davenport and Marcia Moore, is putting on the second of a series of cracksman pictures, which Reid will write, direct and act the lead in.

M. J. McQuarrie leaves the Universal to join Kennedy and Dwan in the Western Feature Film Company. Director Otis Turner and Allan Dwan have both expressed the opinion that McQuarrie is one of filmdom's greatest character actors. A master of make-up and a conscientious actor, he is a desirable man.

Rupert Julian gave a wonderful performance in "The Mask," and the sudden change of his facial expression is nothing short of marvelous. Mr. Julian has jumped into the front ranks of photoplayers and his success is due to the unselfish efforts of Lois Weber and Phillips Smalley, who have not hesitated to write him strong parts with themselves.

On Saturday the members of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League, which had finished their congress at San Diego, visited the Universal studios and ranch and were worked into Henry McRae's picture, "The Cowboy Magnate," in a novel manner. They were feted and dined and had a generally good time.

Mary Fuller had a bad fall from her horse the other day, when, after a long gallop, the horse suddenly stumbled and fell, going down immediately upon the horse in front. Miss Fuller was still in the saddle as her horse slid along the ground (a tribute to her horsemanship), but the flying heels in front being in immediate proximity to her, she rolled away into the ditch, to rise a minute later, much to the relief of the rest of the party, with only a swollen hand.

S. P. Hetteberg assumes full charge of the new Cincinnati branch of Warner's Features, just opened at 111 West Fifth street, to serve exhibitors in southern Ohio and the northern parts of Kentucky and Tennessee. Mr. Hetteberg has a wide and favorable acquaintance with the trade in the Cincinnati territory. For the past ten months he has been with the Mutual Film Corporation, and previous to that he managed the Central Film Service Company, of Cincinnati.

Eugenie Ford, of the Frontier, writes from Santa Paula that the five hours' trip from Los Angeles to Santa Paula took them just twenty-four hours to make. Vicky Ford and Eugene Ford were in the party. They had two blow-outs, then the inner tube went, and they traveled most of the way on the rim, being unable to get an inner to fit. Then the rain came down and soaked them all, and finally they had to put up at a small country cottage over night. She says they are all working hard and like the place very much.

Mr. Chas. A. Brady, of 145 West 45th street, New York City, has purchased the State rights for a "Boy and the Law," a multiple-reel picture which portrays the story of a Russian boy who, persecuted by Russian law, became a hater of all law. Escaping from jail to this country, making his way to Salt Lake City, there becoming a lawless boy of the streets, he soon came under the notice of Judge Willis Brown, of the Juvenile Court. The judge took this boy, with other misunderstood boys, and instituted the first boy city. This Russian law-hating boy became the first mayor of a real city of boys. Willie Eckstein, the boy, now an American citizen twenty-three years of age, acts the latter ten years of his life, with scenes in Russia and in various parts of this country. Judge Brown himself appears in many of the scenes. The picture has been produced under Judge Brown's personal direction. Some of the boys who were in his court are in the pictures.

CHICAGO NOTES

B. W. Beadell, representative of Edison in Chicago, installed a machine in the operators' union at Milwaukee, and also one at the headquarters of the operators' union in Chicago.

Mr. Wm. J. Mullen recently opened his new 650-seat theatre in Aurora, Ill., which he calls the Aurora Theatre. It is said to be a very pretty theatre and up to the minute in its many appointments.

Mr. L. P. Breen, who has successfully conducted a theatre at 3355 W. Chicago avenue, will soon break ground next door to his present showhouse for a new theatre, which will seat between six and seven hundred. A 14-foot stage will be included in the new theatre. This theatre will be called the Rose Bud.

The Thelma Theatre, one of Edgewater's most popular moving picture houses, is enjoying a successful career under the management of E. J. Bracewell. This theatre since its erection some four years ago has had a checkered career, being under a new management every few months. It now, however, is under the management of a lady whose conception of the wants of the people is causing a steady flow of nickels into the box office. She has studied the conditions of the locality with a keenness that shows rare judgment, and is offering an entertainment of exceptional merit.

The General Feature Film Company, of 112 N. La Salle street, has been sold by Joseph Hopp, et al., to Wm. Hershberg and A. K. Spencer. The consideration is said to have been $11,250. Mr. Hershberg was formerly an exhibitor and operated the Magnet Theatre on Twelfth and Kedzie streets, while Mr. Spencer has long been associated in the motion picture business in its many branches. Mr. Spencer was at one time manager of the Special Feature Film Company for Mr. Hopp and knows all the details of this business. It is said that Mr. Rogers, the retiring manager, intends entering the feature exchange field.

Many of the exhibitors of Chicago recently received a letter from a source unknown and which was merely signed, The Committee, by the typewriter, requesting them to attend a meeting to be held at the Globe Theatre for the purpose of asserting their independence on the matter of running not more than three reels for five cents.

This meeting was well attended, but it consisted mostly of those who favored the three-reels-for-five-cents rule, in fact before the gathering broke up it was in the hands of this element.

It was first attempted to secure a chairman, and after much futile effort on both sides it was decided to pick an impartial person not interested in the motion picture business. A lawyer was chosen who knew little about the business, but showed partiality.

When an effort was made to form the organization it is said that only six of those present signed the application list. This makes it appear that there are only six exhibitors in the whole of Chicago who do not favor the three-reels-for-five-cents method of doing business. And some of these six showed their selfishness in their arguments. According to their own statements, their efforts were for the almighty dollar, regardless of the harm done the business and those in it. Their only argument for wanting to do as they saw fit in this matter was that their independence was being taken from them if they were compelled to submit to the ruling of the majority. Independence was their only argument. We must admit that independence is a fine thing, and so is dynamite if handled properly. They are both dangerous and are liable to work havoc if not properly used.

The meeting finally resolved itself into Mr. Levy, a member of the International Motion Picture Association, which is pushing this shortened program, being elected chairman, and Mr. Natkin, another member of this organization, being elected secretary. It must be said in all truthfulness that these two gentlemen conducted the meeting in fairness to all parties concerned, and in some instances gave the insurrectos a little the better of it. A committee was appointed by the chair to request the association to call a special meeting for all exhibitors in Chicago at which time the question under discussion could be threshed out. It was also requested that the decision arrived at to put into effect the three-reel program be postponed. This program, however, went into effect on the day appointed.

After the committee meeting at which only four members of the six appointed on the opposition side appeared, a few of these were converted to the cause.

At the subsequent meeting held by the association it was decided to hold this special meeting on Friday, September 19th, at the Globe Theatre. This meeting was called by three members of the association and three members of the other faction. Members of the committee were: E. F. Glickman, Mr. Levine, A. W. Roth, Sam'l Berlin, J. H. Brown, Geo. Heinze, Fred Shafer, J. D. Rose, Mr. Christy and R. O. Proctor.

Mr. M. A. Coynski delivered a convincing address in favor of the three-reel program before the whole body during the meeting.

BRISTOL'S EQUINE WONDERS

The Biggest and Best Horse, Pony and Mule Exhibition in the World

15 — BEAUTIFUL COLLEGE EDUCATED ANIMALS — 15

Elegant Stage Equipment and Paraphernalia. Special Car Required. Five People Travel With the Organization.

TWELVE MILITARY PONIES, groomed and caparisoned to the highest degree of perfection, performing a series of evolutions and maneuvers that are a revelation in animal training. The most beautiful exhibition of the kind ever presented. An equine phalanx par excellence.

"RUBY," Funniest of All Trick Mules. Not the ordinary, vicious, "unridable" type, but a real comedienne. Her funny antics bring roars of laughter from young and old. She dearly loves a romp with the children at the daily receptions after matinees. Her rocking chair reposes are unique.

"DIAMOND," the trotting-bred contortion horse, whose demonstration of animal intelligence and feats of agility surpass the imagination. For over 20 years WILLIAM BRISTOL has been acknowledged the "Superman" of the horse training craft. He has had many an imitator, but never an equal. Bristol's Record Breaking Equine Paradox is a SURE-FIRE HIT. If you want to increase your business, address the only authorized manager,

Simplex — A Mechanical Marvel

BUILT FOR TWO PURPOSES

FIRST:—To project perfect motion pictures.
SECOND:—To withstand hard service.

The majority of the trade agrees most heartily that we have succeeded in our purpose better than any other who has attempted to build a motion picture projector.

If you are among the few who still doubt our claims to supremacy in design, material and workmanship, write us for proof and you will get it by return mail.

Watch It Grow!

That brand new comedy brand of film on that Universal program is going to make a big hit from the very start. It is the kind of stuff you've been demanding—the kind that keeps your patrons in an uproar from the first scene to the last. Now remember:—There will be two "JOKER" comedies every week, Wednesday and Saturday. The first one comes on Saturday, Oct. 25th, in place of the Saturday split "Imp," which will be discontinued. The other takes the place of our Wednesday "Powers" release, which is to be moved up to Monday.

Please notify your exchange right now that you want two "Joker" comedies every week as quickly as your exchange can arrange it.

That Universal program now includes 28 reels every week, never less than six features every week, and a comedy every day.

ANNOUNCEMENT

We are now printing the word "Eastman" on the margin of all our Cine film. We want the exhibitor to know when he is and when he is not getting Eastman film. It will be to his advantage—and ours.

Of course it will take time for such identifiable films to reach the consumer—so don't expect results at once—but it's a step in the right direction—for your interests and ours.

A Common Sense Argument

Mirroroide advertisements have been read the world over. We do not depend absolutely on advertisements to accomplish the results we have attained. We may quote to you from page 1060 of the Moving Picture World issued last week, in which Mr. R. W. Buzzell, of the Plaza Theater, Northampton, Mass., writes: "I have a good union operator and a Mirroroide screen, and will back my picture against any other exhibitor." This is partly an abstract. Read it for yourself. This was contained in the Moving Picture World, Sept. 6th issue.

The common sense of the argument is this: that we will cheerfully back Mirroroide up against any screen or projection surface in the world today. Backed up with any amount of cash that any other of our competitors care to designate, as to the merits of a true projection surface and the resulting accomplishments. These tests are to include angle views, close up views, and the practical perspective of the said projection. We have read a number of advertisements from our competitors. Can they do as they claim? We claim they cannot. Then again, Mirroroide is put on the market at a price within the reach of every exhibitor, because we are equipped to turn out, if necessary, two hundred screens weekly, which ensures no delays. We have the proper factory facilities, cash capital, and the proper machinery to do as we claim. If you doubt, our large free samples are convincing.

If you desire recommendations from any portion of the entire universe write us, and we will gladly inform you who has one of our Mirroroide screens in use. There are 4700 Mirroroide screens in use today, which warrants the assertion that Mirroroide is the best by test, and has proven to be superior to any other screen now on the market, barring none. Get our large free samples. Postage prepaid. Test any way you desire against any other curtain or screen in your town. This is a common-sense argument, and what your eyes see you can't help but believe.

THE ARRIVAL OF THAT MIGHTY AMBROSIO CREATION

"THE LAST DAYS OF POMPEII"

In three acts of two parts each.

Search the literature of ages—from the papyrus of Egypt to the modern novel—from Aristotle and Zola—and find, if you can, a fiction masterpiece so well adapted to the motion picture!

We promise you the steady undercurrent of a story sublime—we promise you the thrills of spectacular scenes—the panic of a multitude—the annihilation of a great and powerful city—the swirl and rush of adventure—and all staged amid settings of transcendent beauty.

"THE LAST DAYS OF POMPEII" was made at Pompeii and Turin, Italy—practically on the site of the once gay and populous Pompeii—the home of the idler and the dreamer.

A picture made at fabulous cost, employing 4,000 people in the making—months of time—and the entire resources of one of the world's greatest studios.

"G. K. S."

The "S of Essanay"

ONE of the least known men in the business is one of the men whom people would like if they knew him, and that is George K. Spoor. You can be well known and not liked, and you can be liked and not well known. G. K. S. is a well-liked and likable man. I had the advantage of meeting him once for twenty-five minutes in a New York club. He behaved as a man and a gentleman, and I was sorry to have to take myself away from his excellent company.

GEORGE K. SPOOR

George Spoor has had years of experience in many aspects of the show business. That has humanized him. There isn't any business on this planet which makes for the making of men like the show business. There was once a real man whose gigantic statue looks out from the green plots of Bridgeport, P. T. Barnum. He was a great show-man and a great man if ever there was one; enterprising, kind-hearted, human and successful. George Spoor is all these. Though I hope to God it will be many years before they give him a statue, because for the sake of this business—this motion picture business—I wish him all the years on this earth that he can possibly wish for himself.

Comparatively early in motion picture making, Spoor turned out some nice work, and allowed G. M. Anderson to make name and fame with him. G. M. Anderson is a versatile actor, with a great opinion of himself, like all actors. Which no doubt will increase my unpopularity amongst the actors. But, like my charming friend, Eva Tanguay, "I don't care." G. K. S. is a good man of business, has made some of the finest comedy subjects I have ever seen, and at the present time is making some excellent multi-reel pictures which are selling well throughout the world.

I will tell you one of the many reasons why I like G. K. S. Here it is: Some two or three years ago I had occasion to unfavorably criticise the details of one of his pictures. It was an English story, and the facts were wrong. G. K. S. didn't complain or squeal about stopping his "ad." He just asked me for my reasons. These were given him and accepted. And when a group of motion picture makers decided to boycott and freeze

THE TARIFF AND THE PICTURE

LONDON at the present time is the greatest distributing center of the motion picture on the earth. In that city each week hundreds of thousands of feet of film are released. These films are made in all parts of the world. Eighty per cent of the total films released there are made in this country. It is common knowledge that the American film makers have to go abroad to make the greater part of their profits.

The fact that London does this large amount of film business is due to one patent fact. Namely, that Great Britain is a freetrade country. There is practically no tariff there. The result is that whenever a new industry like the motion picture arises, great profits are quickly made out of it. This is why American manufacturers are competing for British trade.

The boot should be on the other foot. This is a greater country than Great Britain. It has double the population, it has South America at its feet, Canada as its neighbor and when the Panama Canal is open, its transit facilities will be unequalled on the globe.

This last week there have been made tariff reductions on films. Of course, these reductions have been opposed by vested interests. Nevertheless they had to be made and have been made. The result, we think, will be that there will be considerable import of raw stock and films into this country. This will not hurt the United States manufacturers. On the contrary, we think it will promote competition in quality. Also, we think it will lead to a more proper condition of affairs. Universal free trade. With universal free trade and unrestricted competition, no nation would have a right to complain. The time has gone by when the United States needed a protective tariff. It is no longer a young country. It is a matured and rapidly growing country. It has room for millions more of people in its boundaries. At the present time it is the greatest country in the world, and it has the potentiality of being still greater. And one of the things that will promote its greatness will be the abolition of the tariff, in other words, free trade.

This, of course, is not a political publication, but it represents a great industry. And we welcome the removal of the tariff on motion pictures and raw stock because it encourages competition and makes for the betterment of quality.

Meanwhile, as showing the popularity of multiple reel subjects in Europe, we give prominence to the following cablegram from Mr. George Kleine, who is at present in Paris:

"After running one week at prices from one dollar and fifty cents down, the Paris Hippodrome, seating thousands of people, has not even standing room for the Photodrama Company's 'Last Days of Pompeii.' Gaumont paid twenty thousand francs for one week's rental with Paris priority. The picture is also a tremendous success in Italy."

We conjecture that when the Kleine "Last Days of Pompeii," as referred to in our pages of August 23rd, is shown to the American public, it will also be a great success. It is interesting to note that contemporaneously with the success of the Kleine "Last Days" in Europe the Kleine photo-drama house de luxe in New York is rapidly materializing.

By J. B.

SINCE I last figured on this page, I have added to my innumerable adventures by dying. Not for the first time. The fifth. The others were as follows: Item, drowning; item, a large overdose of quinine in sulphuric acid; item, ammonia gas; item, a street accident. The fifth was an accidental overdose of nux vomica. The most interesting sermon I have ever heard was that of a clergyman who, snatched from the grave, gave his congregation his impressions while in the act of dying. Then, after a few days, he went and died in reality, and, like the prophets of old, was gathered to his fathers.

* * * *

Sir Oliver Lodge's address the other day, which was copied in all the newspapers and which sought to establish a link between life and death, was illustrated in one publication I read by a picture well known to many, entitled "There is No Death." This photograph was from a painting which gives you a picture in a family circle of a spirit form—one of those disembodied essences which people call or think are ghosts, entities or what not. What not for choice.

* * * *

What do you think I was thinking when I was struggling through this phase of partly suspended animation? Simply this, that as still photography has often been used to demonstrate the alleged fact that the departed revisit the glimpses of the moon, motion pictures might be made to serve the same end. So I just thought that if I had to pass in my checks by the strychnine route, I might be of use to the terrestrial motion picture industry by manifesting my incorporeal self in motion pictures.

* * * *

Talking about death, it is not by any means the terrible thing that some of us dread. You just cease to be. There is a sense of relief. Everything that you are taking leave of is an abstraction. You are no longer interested in it. But in passing through this fifth leave-taking, I was really interested in motion picture work and was feeling sorry that I was obliged to quit such an interesting game. Believe me, boys, if I did not die right off the reel, it was nearly so. VERY NEARLY.

* * * *

There is a vast business done in spirit photography. It is a money-making proposition and has been for the last thirty-five years. It is good for the makers of plates, papers and films. I throw out the suggestion in all seriousness that the same thing might apply to the rollable film. Upon my word, we should get some edifying-looking subjects if we could impart motion to the psychic figures. The idea is well worth the attention of those who want to turn an honest penny by unusual means.

* * * *

What I am anticipating is that a number of those who are interested in the occult will read this page and will make their experiments by means of the motion picture camera instead of the still camera. I am really serious in the suggestion. Before me as I write this paragraph is one of the classic books of the subject, "The Veil Lifted." This by means of photography seeks to demonstrate that "there is no death, what seems so is transition."

* * * *

My word! It would be some attraction to see motion pictures of the dear departed who come back and appear to us at these spiritualistic seances. John Knox, Charles Dickens, Shakespeare, Julius Caesar, Napoleon Bonaparte and others. These interesting personages frequently, according to our photographic friends, "revisit the glimpses of the moon." I think that Sir Oliver Lodge should at the next meeting of the British Association detail a number of experiments with the motion picture camera and show us these persons in movement on the screen.

* * * *

Also, I commend the idea to the millions of spiritualists in all parts of the world. Let them have done with still photography and take up the motion picture as a means of demonstrating that the dear departed do really come back to us. Personally, I am glad that they don't. Nor do I, as an individual, think they can or do, but I am interested in these alleged phenomena, and I would like to see the motion picture used for the purpose of investigating them. It would give a fillip to the business and lead to the making of some interesting copy in this paper.

And this leads, of course, to a more serious suggestion: that so far the motion picture has not been used for—or, at any rate, has not been largely used for the purpose of investigating some phenomena of which our knowledge is at present limited. Ordinary photography, for example, is used to chart the heavens and to study stellar and planetary conditions. I have yet to learn, however, that any of the great astronomical observatories are using the motion picture for recording the movement of other worlds than ours. When you come to think of it, there must be a devil of a lot of motion in the universe—that is, off this little ball of ours. It would be a fine thing if we could see this animation on the motion picture screen. There are fixed stars, there are shooting stars, there are comets. Space and inter-stellar space are quite busy places. And it is quite time that we knew by means of the motion picture what was going on there. I commend the idea to some progressive motion picture company. Clearly that enterprising body, the Universal Film Mfg. Co., which is always on the lookout for new sensations, is the one to avail itself of this idea. So now, Carl, my boy, get busy, and give us an Imp picture of Saturn, Neptune, Uranus and the other big fellows in an All-Star astro-film. Astro-film! Hark ye, this is copyright.

G. K. S.

out a publication of which I was editor, G. K. S. was the last to quit, and that, I believe, simply because he had pledged his loyalty to his colleagues. So, all in all, G. K. S. is a fine man and a credit to this business. I am only sorry that I don't see more of him.

As a show-man and a cultured show-man, G. K. S. clearly has a soft spot in his heart for great show life and show-men's lives. The burden of years, of course, has placed itself on the shoulders of my quondam friend, the Honorable Colonel William F. Cody (Buffalo Bill), who delighted me and a few millions of other people and some ladies in London twenty-six years ago. Several men have tried to do the famous scout in motion pictures. I have seen these pictures and the film makers haven't done justice to the subject at all. They haven't shown the Wild West show as posterity will probably want to see it.

Now comes along Mr. Spoor to take the work in hand and spend a lot of money on it, and to do the thing properly. It takes a show-man to handle such a theme as this in motion pictures, and G. K. S. has all the mental and other qualifications, as well as the technical equipment for the work. Spoor is one of the magnates of the game. The word magnate is used loosely and ignorantly by the average scribe. It is a fine word, and it suggests greatness. In parts of Europe the local bigwig is known as a magnate, implying that he might be a duke, or earl, or president, or what not. G. K. S. is a great man in this business, and hence he is a magnate. He is doing great work, and if these pictures of Colonel Cody and his doings turn out as we all expect them to turn out, that is, good, then Spoor will have done some great work. As he is a young man, I look for greater work than even this.

I wish some cultured American film maker would get down to the work of filming the history of the United States, let us say from 1776, before it is too late. History is a science, it is a thing of accurate knowledge. And there are more lies told in the sacred name of history than any other subject, except maybe love. Historians all lie more or less, and all women, bless them, lie about love. We can't do without history, and we can't do without women, but lets have them both good and—and truth-telling.

To be serious, such a work as this, as the filmization of history, done consecutively and scientifically, is the kind of work G. K. S. could devote a few years of his life to with credit and profit. I am sure if you will look at Spoor's portrait in another part of this book you will believe, with me, that he is the type of man quite capable of handling the work.

Go to it, G. K.! T. B.

AN EXCLUSIVE SERVICE

General Film Company Outlines a Working Plan

An exclusive service scheme which has long been talked of, but has always been considered inpracticable, has at last been perfected. The General Film Company has been working for the last three months on the plan, and have held back the introduction of the idea until they had worked it into shape and were sure it would operate smoothly and successfully.

All arrangements are now completed, and October 13th has been announced as the date of the first release.

The exclusive service as presented by the General Film Company means twelve reels in three multiple and six single reels per week, divided into three programs of one multiple and two single reels, to be supplied to the exhibitors every second day.

These films are selected especially for the purpose, will include only the highest class and most meritorious subjects, and are made up far enough in advance to allow ample time for advertising, etc.

Guarantees are given to protect whatever territory the exhibitor may wish to protect, the price to be regulated according to the extent of territory desired.

The service being so extraordinary, the General Film Company is confident that exhibitors will continue without a contract. Two weeks' notification is all that is necessary to terminate service. The advantages of this exclusive system are: No contracts. Conditions change so that no one can foresee what may happen a few months hence, and thus a long contract might be disadvantageous. The user has a superior program upon which he can depend, and no one else can benefit by his advertising.

GEORGE KLEINE RELEASES "THE LAST DAYS OF POMPEII"

Mr. George Kleine has just launched the six-part photo-drama production of Lord Bulwer Lytton's love story, "The Last Days of Pompeii." The essential details of the story are related in detail. Mr. Kleine is exploiting "The Last Days of Pompeii" under his own management, doing the booking from his own offices in New York and Chicago, and will not only present it in the leading theatres and picture houses of the larger cities of the United States and Canada, but also in the best theatres and picture houses of the smaller towns. "The Last Days of Pompeii" will no doubt sustain the reputation made by Mr. Kleine with his glorious production of the Cines photo-drama, "Quo Vadis." "The Last Days of Pompeii" was made in Torino, Italy.

MOTION PICTURES BY WIRELESS

By C. Francis Jenkins

HOW would you like to sit in your favorite theatre and see, actually see, what was transpiring at that moment in a distant city? How would you like to sit in a Keith theatre, for example, and see the ever-shifting scene on the Atlantic City boardwalk; or, on the 4th of March, about 3 o'clock, watch the inaugural parade as it passes the President's reviewing stand in front of the White House, or watch the progress of a prize-fight simultaneously with those at the ringside. Well, all this is in a fair way of being accomplished. It is no more impossible of belief than that the Fort Myer station, near Washington, should convey intelligence to the Eiffel Tower station in Paris, which is being done.

The transmission of pictures by wire has been the aim of scientists and inventors for years past, the generally followed plan being to either photograph or to directly ink a series of broken parallel lines, laid on one line at a time, until the whole of the picture surface was covered, the picture being composed of the light and shade effected by these broken lines. It is somewhat similar to a picture made up of the large and small dots of a half-tone imprint. The impulses sent over the wire in this process are usually caused by a raised metallic contact of the picture to be sent, the stylus passing in parallel lines over the surface of the master picture mounted upon a cylinder and rotated. A stylus at the receiving end of the line inks the clean paper, wound upon a similar cylinder, in like broken parallel lines, the two cylinders rotating in synchronism meanwhile.

A more nearly truly electrical process is that in which light, passing through a glass negative at the transmitting station, falls upon a selenium cell, the latter in series with the transmission line. Selenium, it is well known, has the property of changing its electrical conductivity when light falls thereon. This, then, causes an undulatory impulse over the line wire, the undulation corresponding to the light and shade of the negative through which the light passes to reach the selenium cell. These line impulses are in turn translated into a correspondingly undulating strength of light-beam at the receiving station. This beam of light falling on a sensitive photographic plate chemically affects the plate so that, when developed, the picture appears.

There have been many variations of this method, and some eminent men have given it their attention, with more or less practical results. Owing to the sluggishness of recovery of the selenium cell, some have preferred the cathode ray which permits considerable increase in the speed of transmission. A variety of devices have also been employed at the receiving end of the line, among others an imponderable shutter made by locating a bisulphide cell in the path of a polarized beam of light, the cell forming the core of a solenoid. The effect of the undulating line current passing through this solenoid is to correspondingly rotate the polarized beam so that it passes in greater or lesser degree through the analyzer set in the end of the cell.

Speaking about this matter to Mr. C. Francis Jenkins, of Washington, D. C., he describes what he is doing, and what he hopes to accomplish, for the information of our readers:

"It seemed not impossible that, if the most active of these means were properly employed, one might with a reasonable degree of confidence expect to transmit motion pictures by wire, or even perhaps by wireless.

"It seems reasonable to suppose that if one were to employ any one of these approved means for sending our electrical impulses analytical of the picture image behind a photographic lens, and approved means for receiving and handling these rapid impulses, they might, with a considerable degree of certainty, be translated into a pictorial reproduction of the distant scene. But how are these extremely brief pulsations of light to be continued for so long a time that the eye may hold them, by persistence of vision, until the whole picture is seen?

"Twenty odd years ago, when I took up the work of producing the now standard motion picture projection machine, every other worker in that line had contented himself with a very brief view, or a very brief illumination, of each single picture of a constantly moving series of related pictures. Of this class was Marey's very creditable work in Paris, in the early 90's; also Anchutz's Tachyscope exhibited at the World's Fair in Chicago, 1893; and Edison's Kinetoscope, exhibited at Atlantic City, in 1894, all machines into which one looked to see a small picture.

"It is now a well-known fact that with this brief illumination it is utterly impossible to get enough light through the picture film to illuminate a large screen, though several patents were issued which claimed it.

"Present motion picture projection is based on the now well-established method of impressing the eye for a relatively long time with the picture, and substituting the next in the series in the briefest possible part of the sixteenth of a second which is allotted each picture. Thus, by making the duration of the light period very long, relatively, a fully-illuminated picture on a large canvas is possible, as was first publicly demonstrated by me in the fall of 1894 in Washington, during a number of exhibitions given on F street, northwest.

"It occurred to me, therefore, that if it were impracticable in the transmission of pictures by wire to let fall directly on the eye a sufficiently strong beam of light without destroying one's eyesight, then a substitute for persistence of vision must be found, in some material which could be given the proper form, for example, a plate-like surface upon which the picture would be made to appear.

"There are a number of substances which more or less fully meet these requirements, some of the best of which, however, are non-conductors when cold. For example, take the rare earths out of which the little rods are made which serve as glowers in the Nernst lamp. It will be remembered that these little rods must be heated before they become conductive, but that thereafter they glow with great intensity owing to their high resistance.

"If, therefore, a large plate of this substance were heated to the proper degree to make it conductive, and thereafter current were applied thereto in such a manner as to localize the effect of the current, the plate would glow with varying intensity in different parts of the plate represented by the picture.

"This is somewhat analogous to the localized magnetic field which Prof. Poulson employs to record and reproduce sound on a steel disc.

"The effect of this method is this: that every point on the whole of the receiving plate in the back of the camera at the transmitting end of the line is covered about fifteen times per second, and corresponding electrical impulses are sent out over the line to the receiving station. Here these electrical impulses are caused to affect the plate, as described, because every point of the whole plate is covered in synchronism with the instrument at the transmitting station, and it is immaterial whether these controlling pulsations are sent by wire or wireless.

"It will thus be seen that this thorium plate glows with a surface intensity corresponding to the picture at the distant station. It now remains only to reproduce it so as to be readily seen by a large audience. This is done by mounting a 4/4 lens in front of it to project the picture upon the canvas facing the audience. The use of a large lens for projecting gives wide latitude in the size of the glowing plate, so that it comes well within permissible dimensions.

"More complete details will be published later, being withheld for the present because it is believed that improvements can be made which will materially affect the results. For example, it has been found difficult, even with a hundred miniature gas flames, to keep the plate evenly heated, and it is believed that this can now be satisfactorily accomplished with an electrically heated grid supported in close proximity to the back of the plate."

CAUGHT IN HIS OWN TRAP

(Great Northern)

A MOTION picture theatre, with staff of attendants and a brand new film, are the ingredients of this comedy drama. Randal, the manager of the motion picture theatre, is enamored of the young woman in the ticket booth, but Oda, the daughter of the proprietor, takes exception to their conduct and complains to her father, Mr. Corna. Randal and his sweetheart become enemies of the young woman and this enmity is extended to Linck, the operator of the motion picture machine, who is in love with Oda. The latter, by the way, is the pianist of the theatre, and during the intermission Linck pays her a visit and leaves his booth unprotected. Shortly before his departure the proprietor has entrusted him with a valuable feature reel subject and warns him to be careful of it.

During the absence of the operator, Randal enters the operating-room and with a knife slashes the film that had been entrusted to the care of the operator. Randal cuts himself accidentally and when the film is placed upon the screen the audience demands its money back on account of its mutilated condition. An investigation follows and both Linck and Randal are called to the manager's office. The cashier and Oda later appear and the climax arrives when Oda explains that it would have been impossible for Linck to have mutilated the film, because he was seated at her side during the intermission. When it is noticed that there is blood on the film and that Randal's hand is bandaged, Manager Corna puts two and two together and dismisses both the manager and the cashier.

The distinguished emotional actress, Gertrude Coghlan, recently commenced work at Selig's, under the direction of Producer Oscar Eagle, in a pictorial revival of her father's play (the late Charles Coghlan), "The Royal Box."

SCENE FROM "CAUGHT IN HIS OWN TRAP"

CHARLES URBAN AT HOME

By William H. Hickey

MR. CHARLES URBAN, one of the leading figures in the motion picture business in England, whose name is associated with Kinemacolor, has recently acquired an estate at Teddington, near London, where motion picture production on a large scale will be carried on. The estate is just outside the gates of the Royal Park of Hampton and faces Chestnut Drive, Bushey Park, which is one of the show places in the vicinity of London. One portion of the grounds, which are over a mile in circumference, the area being thirty acres, is devoted to Mr. Urban's private residence, a handsome old house which has been artistically brought up to date. Mr. Urban, as is well known, is American born, and evidence of his sympathy with American ideas is to be found in many of the conveniences added to the mansion, and not least in the gilded eagle that watches over the portals.

The greater part of the grounds are to be devoted to the production of dramas and comedies in Kinemacolor and to this end has been erected a large and well-equipped studio. The building that provides accommodation for motion picture actors and actresses, administration offices, producers' rooms, scenario editors' offices, wardrobes for the costumes required for production on a large scale, etc., measures over 200 feet long and has been constructed with a view to being introduced into picture stories when occasion requires. Included in the building is accommodation for painting scene canvases; scenery, however, is stored in a separate building not far away.

There are in different portions of the studio handsome suites of rooms for the use of actors and actresses respectively; there is sufficient space for from three to four hundred persons to effect a change of attire at one time if required, and in the wardrobe rooms are stored thousands of costumes representing periods of history, classic and modern.

In front of the studio at such a distance as to be within call, is the stage on which, as a rule, "interiors" will be produced. It is circular in form, is 40 feet in diameter, and is constructed to revolve.

Suppose a scene is set in the best light available at the time, but that clouds then obscure the sun for an hour or so. When the sun shines again part of the scene may be in shadow. With a revolving stage all that has to be done is to move the whole erection a few feet, when everything is as perfectly placed as it was in the first instance. Provision of this kind, of course, is especially necessary in England, where the climate is always more or less unsettled and days of continuous sunshine, enjoyed as a matter of course by producers elsewhere, are of infrequent occurrence.

CHARLES URBAN

Another advantage of the revolving stage is that a second scene can be set while action is taking place in one already arranged, the new scene being turned to the light when required. As a matter of fact on the stage at Teddington four large scenes can be set at one time. There are other little refinements in connection with this stage. One is a track with a substantial platform running upon it at right angles to the stage. The camera can be placed on this and advanced or withdrawn accordingly as close or distant views of the scene are required. This arrangement will come into use when greatly magnified views, familiar to motion picture audiences when a point in the story has to be emphasized, are required.

There is also a pit at the edge of the revolving stage for the convenience of actors whose part requires them to perform an exit either by going downstairs or by descending into a cellar, or ascending to roof tops, etc.—exigencies which, it will be common knowledge to picture lovers, will often occur.

It will be hardly necessary to explain that although "interiors" will be photographed on this stage, the stage itself is not under cover but is in the middle of an open space, unshadowed by trees or any obstructions. An indoor scene in a motion picture never has any ceiling and has only two walls. The space where the other two walls would be, is occupied by the camera and the producer, and the top is open to the light. If this peculiarity of motion picture staging has never occurred to the reader before, let him consider that, if the range of the camera is never permitted to extend above the two walls that do exist or beyond their extremities, the imagination of the spectator takes the rest for granted, and on this fact the producer relies for obtaining his effects in indoor scenes.

Beyond the revolving stage are grounds of considerable extent suitable for the production of plays on the largest scale. The scenic beauties of a lovely countryside have been considerably enhanced by artificial means, and there are within the estate ravines, mossy banks, lakes, rustic bridges, dells and waterfalls, which, although not Nature's own handiwork, are so beautifully contrived and are, many of them, of such long standing that they have become part of the natural contour of the place. These improvements, by which infinite variety of setting is afforded, provide the good backgrounds for motion picture stories.

Among other advantages of the estate are a private electricity supply, an artesian well and a water tower, decorated in a castellated fashion to be available if required for a picture story. Every detail of equipment on the estate, in fact, has been arranged with a view to being useful in this way. Thus one finds between two portions of the grounds a five-barred gate which will serve in some rural story, while the gates of the mansion itself will often be the scene of the departure or arrival of the characters in a story of society life. In accordance with this idea, also, sheds and outbuildings are beamed or thatched to serve as the exteriors of country cottages as well as for the mundane purposes of holding stores. In addition to a garage there is stabling for tweny horses with a full complement of saddles, harness, etc.

The proximity of Mr. Urban's estate to London has special advantages which, in fact, had not a little to do with its choice. It is intended to use in the service of Kinemacolor the talents of accomplished and notable actors; these will be able to perform as usual in the theatres of the British metropolis in the evenings and spend a portion of each day at the Kinemacolor studios, being able easily to return to London in time for the evening performances. Many well-known actors have promised their services.

An important side of motion picture production is that of the application of Cinematography to education and science. Every possible equipment for this purpose already exists at the Kinemacolor laboratories at Southgate on the other side of London from Teddington; nevertheless, while alterations were being made at the latter estate, the opportunity was taken to provide facilities for a new method of taking pictures devised by Mr. Urban's scientific department.

This is the photographing of life under water and for this purpose a chamber has been constructed under a lake in the Teddington estate from which the fish with which the lake is stocked may be seen swimming to and fro. Such pictures as an otter catching a fish under water, a snake being destroyed by the deadly water beetle, a trout fighting for its life when hooked by an angler, have already been secured by the new method of taking moving pictures, and the special facilities at Teddington will enable still more to be done in this direction.

The estate has many advantages from the point of view of facilities for scientific film production. The farmyard will contain poultry, wild birds, horses, and cattle of all countries; there will be a small menagerie, in which the animals will be housed as far as possible amid surroundings resembling their natural habitat.

For more general purposes, also, the Thames, and especially the reaches of the upper river, are easily accessible and parties of actors can readily be conveyed by automobile to the most suitable spots. There is also a lake twenty acres in extent within easy reach of the estate, and Hampton Court Palace and Bushey Park are in the vicinity.

As a member of the Lubin players, Florence Hackett is doing able work in Arthur Johnson's support. During the past year she has scored conspicuously in all Mr. Johnson's two-reel photoplays: Iris in "The Power of the Cross"; Rosa, the Italian, in the "District Attorney's Conscience"; Julia Radnor, the financier's daughter, in "A Leader of Men," and many other important roles.

Protea

I had the privilege to witness the exhibition of the advance copy of "Protea," of the Eclair Company.

Protea is an adventuress in the employ of the chief of police of Messena. The object is to seize a treaty on the eve of being signed by the State of Slavonia with a friendly nation.

The film is full of clever incidents showing the resourcefulness of Protea and of her faithful companion, Eel. It is a continuous change of disguises, some of them in the most trying conditions.

While the production is four reels, it is not tiresome, as the incidents follow so rapidly as to keep the audience in a constant suspense. Some of these incidents are clever, ingenious and in many cases amusing.

There is a splendid fire scene, where some real rich furniture is sacrificed to the mercy of the flames. The most wonderful scene, the real climax of the production, is when the detectives, to keep Protea and Eel from passing the frontier with the stolen document, decide to burn the bridge. The scenery is beautiful, representing woods and rocks divided by the river with its fine rustic bridge. With the detectives in a rowboat, watching the bridge burning and falling, and satisfied they have cut off the only way of escape, they are dumbfounded when they see Protea coming down the road on her bicycle and, without the least warning, leap over the open precipice. It is a clever piece of work.

It is needless to state that the acting is the cleverest, all the staging details are carefully watched and the photography, the regular high-class work that made famous the name of "Eclair."

Zuma the Gypsy

Kline-Cines

An unusual theme forms the story of this multiple reel subject. Because of its difference it has added interest and exceptional entertainment value. The faithfulness and deep-seated love born of gratitude is the undercurrent which causes the many heroic actions and deeds on the part of Zuma to protect her master and his household from the machinations of evil friends, and finally from her own overpowering love for the hand that feeds her to cause her to sacrifice her life in a spectacular manner, which, to the throng gathered, seems accidental.

The Cines director, in his usual thorough manner, has built a two-reel feature that contains all the requirements expected. He has given it beautiful settings and backgrounds. He has also supplied it with pretty ladies who also have the ability to act. The men of the company are also well versed in their art. There is one scene especially noticeable because of its grandeur and completeness, representing a ballroom in which a mask affair is going on and which employs several hundred people for its enactment.

A traveling gypsy show goes into camp on the outskirts of the city, and Zuma, the gypsy girl, is sent out to give out handbills announcing the evening's entertainment. In wandering along the road she comes across a splendid residence owned by a rich count. Zuma's quaintness and grace attracts Claudia, the wife of the count, and at her suggestion a party, including her guests, is formed to visit the show that evening.

The crowds gather to visit the performance and among them we see the count and his guests. Zuma is cast as a dancer, and with a hugh snake wrapped about her body she glides through weird and quaint steps that are appreciatively applauded by the audience. Zuma is later complimented by the count and countess on her skill. The proprietor of the show sees her talking to them, rebukes her, and in his anger strikes her with a whip which he carries. Although he ceases his cruelty at the command of the count, Zuma, upon reaching the camp, continues to be illy treated and decides to run away and seeks refuge in the castle of the count. Though the proprietor of the show follows her and demands her release, the countess beseeches her husband to buy Zuma. With several banknotes in his possession the proprietor departs to his waiting camp.

The new life she has entered is novel to the gypsy girl and she swears eternal faithfulness to her masters over a sacred fire she has built. She demonstrates this when Luciana, a friend, arrives to visit the countess. Luciana is a natural flirt and endeavors to win the affections of the count. Zuma, noticing the growing love between the two, threatens to kill Luciana unless she departs at once. Her threat is effective of the desired result.

A visiting friend of the count's, the Baron D'Angelo, is fascinated by this gypsy girl and discusses with the count her attractiveness. This causes the count to take more notice of her and Zuma in turn falls in love with him. She, however, does not show her affections, fearing she will cause Claudia to become unhappy.

Some time later the countess plans a mask ball for charity and Zuma volunteers to give her dance. A snake is secured from a distant coun-

FOR THOSE WHO WORRY O'ER PLOTS AND PLAYS

By William Lord Wright

An Uppercut

CALDER JOHNSTONE is bringing the Universal script department once again into its own, and his policy is recalling the halcyon days of Editors Warren and Hoadley and others. Under the Johnstone management the best writers have turned again to Universal, and the latest popular move is the announcement that poster credit will be given deserving authors. With this deserved introduction we will permit Editor Johnstone to uppercut a director's statement which recently was given space in this department. Mr. Johnstone's statement hits the nail squarely on the head and there is more truth than poetry in his remarks. He says: "In your issue of August 30th in the department devoted to 'Plots and Plays,' we note certain comments by a contributor in which he says:

"'All this cry about editors editing and directors directing is plain rot. Just as long as there are artistic directors employed just so long will the director, who has to shoulder most of the responsibility, work his pleasure with any script he likes. You can take it from me that there will be no editors handing out scripts with orders to produce exactly as written. That would be an impossibility for many of the best producers of this day and age. . . .' He further says: 'If the director likes an idea in a script and accepts the script and pays for it, it is up to him to make the picture. If he wishes to change the action radically, it is his privilege and will be just so long as there are artistic directors.'

"As an observer for over three years of approximately seventy-five per cent of the motion picture output in America, including importations, and as scenario editor of what is now the largest individual concern manufacturing pictures here or abroad, I beg to take issue with your contributor. If to have approximately thirty thousand dollars worth of films stored away on the shelves, because of the incompetency of the directors who were permitted to have carte blanche in the producing of films is 'rot,' then I beg to inquire of your contributor as to his meaning.

"Every manufacturer in the country can attest to thousands of dollars lost through negligence, carelessness and incompetency of directors. The opinion of a director as to what will be successful is, after all, but the opinion of one man. The well-organized scenario department is not directed or run by one individual. With most firms to-day scripts are prepared by individual writers, and after consulting with the other trained members of the staff are finally presented to the directors for production. I also note that your contributor states that the director pays for the script. The director does not pay for his script. His employer pays for the script in every instance unless the director is whole or part owner of the concern he is directing for.

"In our concern we have had during the past few weeks some glaring examples of carelessness on the part of the directors and also of total incompetency where they have been privileged to make radical changes. In four instances stories were so badly manipulated as to be almost not worth releasing. These stories were written by two of the most successful scenario writers in the business. One of these could actually not be released. Two others had to be so badly cut because of censorship requirements as to make them almost worthless. Your contributor refers to 'artistic' directors. How many of these are there? The general complaint of motion picture critics is that the average program is monotonous and inartistic.

"If this be true whose fault is it? In nine cases out of ten the directors have had full sway. The motion picture business is nothing more or less than a new variation of the theatrical business with more mechanics applied. Where would the owner of a regular dramatic stock company find himself if he were to permit his stage director to select his own plays and alter them to suit himself? Where would the Broadway producing manager find himself if his stage director were permitted to alter the average new production indiscriminately without consulting with the author? Some of the most successful motion picture concerns today run their business with the scenario department as the paramount starting-point.

"There are some companies whose names are known the world over for the excellence of their productions, who never permit a director to materially alter a script without consulting with the scenario department or a general director. The president of one of the largest companies in America informed the writer that his concern had come to the point where this was absolutely necessary and accordingly he is to-day paying more money to his writing staff than heretofore to his directing staff.

"In conclusion, permit me to express my hearty appreciation of the remarkable work of many directors. What is undoubtedly needed is cooperation, but to treat the scenario department as an ordinary 'hack' is silly on the face of it. It either shows your contributor is unduly 'peeved' or knows not whereof he speaks."

We have long contended that the story was the most important part of the pictureplay. That Mr. Johnstone supports this contention is indeed encouraging. The department is open for further discussion of the question, if any other director or editor thinks further discussion necessary after Mr. Johnstone's comprehensive and logical argument.

Possible, But——

"To me the beauty of many of the pictureplay plots is spoiled by their complexity. Isn't it possible to portray a perfectly simple, human story vividly enough to touch every one of the spectators?"

The above inquiry comes from Bowdoinham, Me. According to the advance notices of the gentlemanly publicity agent, all stories released are simple, vivid and human. But there are some that will take exceptions to the press notices in many instances. The story that is vivid enough to touch everyone is the story greatly to be desired.

From Tamarack Lake

Maibelle Heikes Justice is the only script writer we know of who goes straight to a locality after "local color." She is away up in the North woods right now turning out some Northland features for several film concerns. She writes the department:

"I am located in a pine lumber camp in the North woods and I can set my typewriter on a stump (where it is now) and seek an inspiration from any vantage. I am among the lumberjacks and salmon fishermen, with nothing but pines and sand for surroundings, and many beautiful views. I am writing some photoplays of the North woods and some fiction. One thing I notice that some critics advise and that is for the script writer to find his field and stay in it, falling either to drama or comedy and holding to it. Well, not for me! I've tried nearly every environment but that of the uncouth, unbathed-looking Indian and his melodrama (which doesn't appeal to me at all) and I've never been told yet where I did the best work. Don't believe I want to know, for it might kill my inspirations and crowd me into a rut, where, if I lost the variety, I might not do as good work.

"Up to date I am fifteen or sixteen scripts ahead and under production and none of them are alike, going from Western to desert plays, to Eastern and society, historical and romance, and stories of the sea. This month I shall go deep into nature up here among the pines and try and satisfy some of my own spirit and craving for the wild.

"A Duluth exhibitor has sent word that he would run my 'When Toney Pawned Louisa' (Lubin) next week. He is Manager Parker of the Sunbeam theatre—and it is real nice of him. The lumberjacks are going in to see it, too. I hope that all the companies will finally credit authors on posters and screen. Ssh! I see a pictureplay plot coming down the shore in blue overalls and a garnet sweater, an ax on his shoulder and frisking with a collie dog. He is six feet tall, young, and I know he has a story—I see it in his very strange and melancholy eyes despite the smiles and apparent glad heart."

And here we leave Miss Justice working on the plot of her latest picture play—garnet sweater and all. And like Miss Justice, some day, beginner, you will acquire the habit of looking for plots anywhere and everywhere. It will become second nature, and a qualification that will ofttimes prove bitter sweet but highly essential to ultimate success.

A Few Questions

A lady writer of Los Angeles asks these questions: "Is a person who has been writing picture plays for twenty-one months, and has in that time made seventeen sales, on the road to success, regardless of the fact that the sales are only about a fifth of the output?" Unusually successful, we think. Now take the other four-fifths rejected and spend more time on their rearrangement. Perhaps haste has made waste in your case.

"What can a writer do who is unable to distinguish between comedy and drama, occasionally? Two of the seventeen offered as dramas were released as comedy. The laugh-raisers were original scripts and not changed by the producer." Maybe your real forte is comedy. It frequently happens with beginners that scripts submitted as drama are unconsciously comedy—all the better because there was no straining after comedy effect. Experience, and a close study of comedy (real comedy) on the screen, will aid you in distinguishing.

"When a play comes back marked, 'Same idea, done before,' what does it mean? If the author is secure in the knowledge that she has not plagiarized, is it permissible to send out the play again?" The check mark may mean that particular concern has released a picture with a similar idea. It also may mean that some office boy has checked the slip. Certainly, if the idea is original with you, offer the script elsewhere.

"Do you not think that the company that sends a check promptly for accepted work is going to get the cream of the output eventually?" Purchased goods of any description should be paid for promptly. The idea of waiting for several months after accepting a script and so informing the author never made a hit with us.

"Do you think that it helps a writer to see the actual making of pictures?" It certainly does but not every author gets the opportunity.

"Is it good policy to place on the title page of your script, after your name, 'Author of'—naming your best work already released?" The custom may do no harm but it will not aid the sale of the script with any experienced editor. Every script must stand on its own merits, or should. We don't like to receive stationery from photoplaywrights, however, filled up with the names of past scripts. It does not impress us in the least. It is the modest ones that generally get there, the writers who make the least noise.

Sheer Nonsense?

We noticed an article headed "The Scissors" in the current number of The Writer's Magazine, and as we have handled scissors more or less for twenty years we read it. When we got to the end we saw Wheeler McMillen's signature. If this is our old friend Wheeler McMillen, who used to wear his hair à la Fra Albertus, then we are glad. We knew Wheeler when we were on the "City Desk," and he applied for a job on the news staff—but why recall painful memories. The article about the scissors is given herewith:

The writer's scissors may not be as indispensable as his typewriter, but they are an important adjunct to his outfit. Many a good idea has escaped for want of a convenient pair of scissors. The most prolific source of plots and other ideas for the author is the newspaper. The newspaper is perhaps as rich a field as life itself, because it covers a wider range than the vision of the most fortunate observer, with the dramatic points already bared. The scissors on the desk make it easy to glean from the newspaper field. A clipping, made in a second, will hold an idea longer than the memory. Properly filed, it is available at any time. Scissors will quickly cut out for reference the work of authors who are making good and whose work is worth study. For a little more or less than a dollar an ideal pair of scissors can be bought. They should not be any buttonhole or embroidery style, nor unwieldy tailor's weapons, but a light, sharp pair with long blades. Seven inches is an excellent length for the cutting edges. A dollar's worth of scissors will provide many dollars' worth of ideas.

Thanhouser Makes "Robin Hood"

COMING out in October, "Robin Hood" is a four-reel Thanhouser special that tells the story of the famous son of an English nobleman who, with others, was reduced to the position of a vassal. Lloyd F. Lonergan, who wrote the scenario, made the most of the climax of every scene, and there are many thrilling ones. The story opens by showing Robin Hood, bow in hand, searching for Marian, whom he finally meets, and together they see a notice on a tree which reads that no Saxon shall slay a deer in Sherwood Forest.

And this sign soon plays an important part in their lives, for Robin ignores it, shoots a deer, and the next picture shows his table spread for a feast and surrounded by guests. They knew that the penalty for disobeying this law was to cut off the ears of the person who did it, so great consternation seized them when the sheriff and his men came to arrest Robin, and, not being admitted, they fired their arrows into the court, one of which struck Marian's father, and he screamed and fell dead.

The sheriff and his men retreated, only to return reinforced by more soldiers, and a bitter hand-to-hand fight took place on the drawbridge, showing men dropping into the water as Robin and his men were slowly making their way to safety, the women having reached the forest by a secret underground passage. They were later joined by Robin and his men, who, after Robin and Marian were married by the Friar, pronounced them King and Queen, and took an oath to punish the rich and cruel but aid the poor and oppressed.

Alan-a-Dale appears on the scene, and is made a captive, but after he tells his story, they agree to help him. He seeks the hand of a young lady whose miserly father wants her to marry a decrepit old nobleman, who promises her parent money if she will marry him. Marian disguises herself as a gipsy and visits the girl to assure her that Robin and his men will aid her at the critical moment.

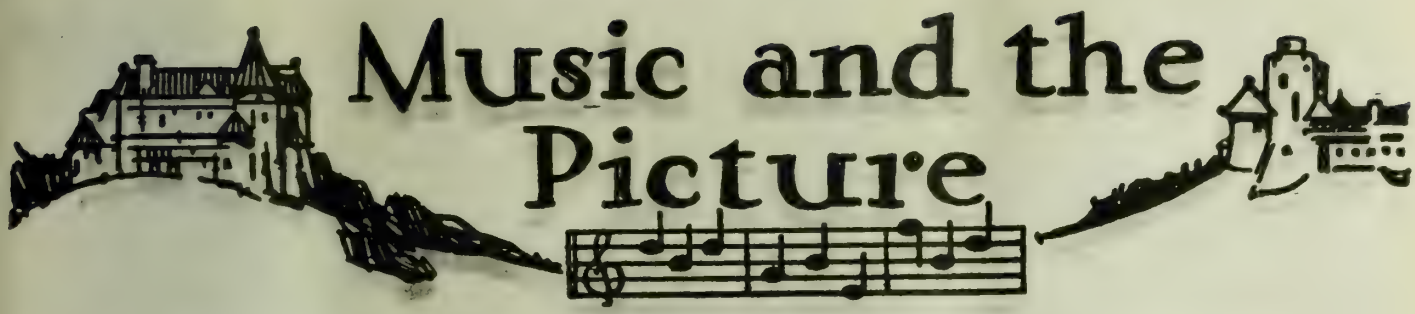
They are ready, and when the Saxon maiden is standing before the Bishop, who is about to pronounce her the wife of the nobleman, Robin Hood and his men pour in through doors and windows, and Friar Tuck places her hand in Alan-a-Dale's and pronounces them man and wife, whereupon they all return to the forest where they are free from molestation.

On one occasion the sheriff arranged for an archery contest, open to all comers. Robin appears in disguise and wins the prize. The King, disguised as a mendicant, is shown such consideration by Robin Hood and his men that he returns to the palace and pardons them for all past offences. William Russell has the title role. Gerda Holmes' work as Maid Marian is noteworthy.

MR. BRYAN IN MOTION PICTURES

Mr. H. S. Ritchie writes to the New York Times:

Apropos of Mr. Bryan doing something to add to his income, would suggest he get into communication with some live moving picture concern and obtain a contract to appear in the pictures of the old play, "The Silver King." I think it would be a big hit.



Suggestions Invited, Questions Cheerfully Answered

Address: Music Department, Exhibitors' Times

WE all love music. When baby cries a little music will change its disposition. When grandpa is downhearted with the pains of old age, play a familiar old tune, and he will forget and see life under brighter colors. Music is so much in the air that even the savages have musical instruments of their own.

On the other hand, how many of us go to the landlord to complain of the girl next door, because her hammering on her piano works up our nerves to a high pitch.

In other words, there is music and music, or, to be more correct, music and noise.

I had a wonderful experience the other day in Philadelphia. I visited the Colonial Amusement Palace, on Lancaster avenue, and I did not enjoy the show; in fact, to tell the plain truth, I walked out after seeing only part of the programme.

It would be unfair to say that the pictures were bad yet they did not please me. I had to find fault with the acting, the photography, the projection, the ushers and even with the audience.

All this was the fault of the pianist. From my seat I could not see if it was a woman or a man at the piano, but surely it was not a pianist; it was more of someone trying to memorize a few notes from various selections. It was a "pot-pourri" out of tune and out of time. It was like the music of the girl next door, a music to work on the nerves and the bad temper of the most patient patron.

The audience was noisy, talking and making many comments, as the picture did not seem to capture the attention of the patrons.

When I left the Colonial I invested a dime to visit the Leader, also on Lancaster avenue, and there I enjoyed a very good show. The audience was so attentive that you could have heard a pin drop. The ushers were very busy, as standing room was at a premium, but they knew how to watch for vacant seats, guide the patrons to said seats in such a quiet manner as to not disturb the audience.

The music was excellent, so appropriate as to make the picture talk, and consequently enhance the value of the show.

I was not the only one to pass such a verdict, as the great popularity of the Leader is a silent proof that our American public enjoys what is good and is willing to pay the price for the best. The admission at the Leader is 10 cents, while it is only 5 cents at the Colonial Palace. While the two theatres are in the same neighborhood, only a few doors apart, the audiences are very different. The Leader has a refined patronage, while the Colonial shows to the lower class, to the noisy fellows, to the street boys, and has a strong colored patronage.

While the picture is the backbone of a motion picture show, the way the picture is presented to the public has much to do with the success of the place.

A fine piece of meat can make a delicious or mighty poor steak, according to how it is cooked. The same with the picture; the exhibitor can enhance or ruin the beauty of the picture. I have seen some very poor films, films that had been criticized, yet called successes all on account of the music. Frenchmen eat and relish snails, while many of us cannot see a good morsel in such an insignificant animal as the snail. The fact is there is no taste in a snail, it is, when cooked, a sort of piece of leather; but what makes the taste of the snail so pleasing to the Frenchmen is all the ingredients used in the cooking—the bouillon, best butter, fine herbs, spices, etc. A clever pianist or orchestra leader can act like the cook, and by giving the proper sauce to a bad picture make a success of it and save the reputation of the manager.

Music has the power to carry away. Walk up the street slowly, with your eyes riveted on the pavement as if you were downhearted, and watch for the effects at the first notes of a passin music band. Your first impulse is to straighten up, and then change your step as to get in the march. It is instinctive, you cannot help yourself, you are under the charm of Dame Music, you have to laugh or cry according to her dictation. A good musician can then make the picture talk if he wishes to pay some attention to the scenes depicted on the screen.

The musicians at the Leader Theatre followed so nicely the picture that music and projection were one; the music seemed to be part of the picture. It was a different question at the Colonial, where the pianist and the operator seemed to be two different persons, working one against the other, and as there was no harmony between the two the music sounded worse than it was in reality.

I do not favor talking pictures because I have not heard one reproduce the natural voices to harmonize with the picture; they are not in unison, and these voices, as coming from underground, rob the picture of all its poetry. One day in Wilmington, Del., ladies sitting behind me said: "These talking pictures can be a great novelty, but I prefer the silent ones, they are more natural."

The piano, the drums, an orchestra or a pipe-organ can act like talking pictures; they can spoil the whole story if they are not in perfect unison with the picture. Inventors have spent fortunes to devise means for a perfect synchronization; but what is the use of finding a perfect mechanical device by which the phonograph can be made to follow the actions, as they are depicted on the screen, if the deep, cavernous voices are to ruin the beauty of the picture.

I remember a Biograph film that made a deep impression on the audience. It was a splendid film, as the Biograph knows how to produce them, but the drummer is the man who created the deep impression; he knew how to take advantage of certain scenes to enhance the beauty of the picture and show his ability.

One scene was a beautiful Western river, on both sides of which were seen forests. It was grand natural scenery. Coming down the river was an Indian paddling his canoe slowly, as if he was in no hurry. This scene impressed everyone as a peaceful scene, and many patrons would have wished to be in the place of the Indian. The drummer understood; he asked the pianist to stop, and himself abandoning his drums and other instruments, centered his attention on the canoe, and each time that the Indian worked his paddle the drummer would give a perfect imitation of dripping water. Once in a while he would imitate the cry or song of some birds, as if these little creatures were the only ones to disturb this restful scene. It was wonderful, and this simple scene made such a good impression that the picture was the talk of the town for several days. The drummer did not do much work, but what little work he did was just to the point, and brought many high compliments.

Such efficient drummers are worth high wages, and if the exhibitor would encourage both the pianist and the drummer he would add much to his own profits.

It is not a question of noise, the whole secret is to work in perfect unison with the picture and often to win the audience; it is better to stop the music, and in other cases to let the music die out.

A lady pianist of Montgomery, Ala., made a great hit as she allowed her playing to die out in unison with the work of death as depicted on the screen.

CHICAGO NOTES

M. G. Watkins, who for the past year has been connected with the Almo Feature Film Co., has resigned from that company. Mr. Watkins represent this firm in the capacity of general traveling representative. During his connection with this firm Mr. Watkins opened territory for them which included all the central states. Evidently M. G. has something big up his sleeve, although he is not saying anything at the present time. We feel sure that he has, as M. G. is never idle. He has initiative and he has ability, therefore we expect big things from M. G.

Mr. Fred McMillen, who was formerly connected with the General Feature Film Company, is now associated with the M. & F. Feature Film Service Company. Mr. McMillen's knowledge and experience in the film game is wide. Mr. McMillen is therefore a valuable asset to the M. & F.

William Bertram, so long associated with Frank Montgomery, goes to join Director Thomas Ricketts at the American. "Bart" takes the good wishes of everyone along with him.

The Washington street exchange of the Mutual Film Corporation has consolidated with the Majestic branch in the Mallers building. The combining of these two exchanges took effect on September 29th. Mr. Flaherty, manager of the Washington street branch, will have charge of the local advertising campaign which the Mutual intends to launch in the newspapers and signboards.

Mr. A. G. Spencer, of the General Special Feature Film Company, while in Milwaukee appointed O. H. Jacobs their official representative in that city. Mr. Jacobs is located at 133 Second street.

WM. WINTER JEFFERSON AS BOB ACRES IN "THE RIVALS," KINEMACOLOR CO.

IN Le Courrier Cinematographique, of Paris, I find the following lines from the pen of Mr. Weiss, of Munich, the correspondent of the Projection, of Berlin.

I am pleased to translate the said article for the benefit of the American exhibitor, and there is a personal satisfaction to find that European editors deplore, as strongly as we do, the growing tendency of an abuse of posters.

Mr. Weiss says:

"At the present hour, where so many critics work for the betterment and uplifting of motion pictures, it may seem superfluous to take under consideration such an insignificant matter like the poster. However, we cannot pass the poster under silence if we wish to give all the importance due to the reform of cinematography.

"While the theatres, circuses, expositions and other amusements devoted to pleasure or education are compelled to attract the attention of the public in some manner or another, there is no need to be vulgar.

"While the legitimate playhouses are satisfied to have neatly-framed signs, the cheaper places want to make an abusive display of large and ugly posters. It is this bad example that motion picture theatres are trying to follow, and their only excuse to do so is that they are catering to a low-class patronage.

"We see, following each other, long strings of posters, showing exaggerated positions, for the sole object to attract attention. It is most of the time some sensational scenes, which on account of their high colors work on the morbid passions of the public.

"Is the motion picture theatre really such a low place of amusement to be in need of the deplorable advertisements of the cheap circus side shows?

"We don't think so, and the proof to the contrary is that many managers are satisfied to-day to post in front of their theatres photographs of artists and of some actual scenes only.

"If the poster is absolutely necessary let us reject, at least, all these loud and sensational compositions which are, in fact, an attempt against the good taste of the public.

"The exhibitors who believe that they cannot run their show without such out-of-place advertisements should realize that the élite of society—and it is just the element we are seeking—will go in preference to the theatres presenting the most attractive and inviting fronts. The patrons do not fall for an entrance hidden under an abuse of posters, some more ugly than the others.

"To the casual observer the exterior appearance of a theatre stamps the value of the show. The clean, attractive front conveys the impression that the show is refined, while a dirty-looking front, cheaply decorated with vulgar posters, denotes that the theatre is on the order of a cheap Bowery show.

"On the other hand, it is a great mistake to think that the less cultured class is passionately fond of this vulgarity. They look at them for the want of a better display, but try to show them things well done and you will see that they will prefer them to others.

"It is absolutely necessary to conduct a motion picture theatre in such a manner as to give it a prestige—which we are sorry to state has not been observed in former years. A building can, at a small expense, be transformed into a good-looking motion picture theatre and be a sort of ornament to the street, but if it is to be covered with ugly posters it will then be objectionable to the immediate neighborhood.

"As the films are becoming more and more perfect, why should we not follow the same line of improvements by giving more decorum to our advertisements?"

These lines speak for themselves, and as they confirm much of what has been already said in these pages, I do not deem it necessary to comment on them.

Souvenirs have proved a good drawing card, especially for matinees and the dull days, but the drawback with souvenirs is the difficulty to find novelties to please the ladies.

The Cosmo Specialty Company, of New York, offers some imitation drawn-work handkerchiefs in three different patterns. These handkerchiefs are such a perfect imitation of the genuine drawn-work as to deceive the eye, and will consequently not only please the ladies but make one of the best souvenirs ever offered in a motion picture theatre. These handkerchiefs will tempt many men to visit a show for the sake to carry home a suitable souvenir to their sweethearts. The prices charged by the Cosmo Specialty Company are very moderate, and should tempt the exhibitor to try to increase his matinees by offering the handkerchiefs. At least a trial will not cost much and will surely prove a good investment.

In the line of souvenirs, the Takito, Ogawa Company, of Chicago, have issued a concise circular in which they suggest to the exhibitor to issue a coupon with each admission, said coupons to be collected until the desirable number is secured to obtain an article of real value. For instance, a Japanese vase to cost to the exhibitor $5, but with a retail value of $8, could be delivered on the presentation of 350 coupons. The scheme is good, as when a lady has half of the coupons needed for the desired article she will urge her friends to visit the theatre in question for the sake of getting the remaining coupons.

For nearly two weeks the Herald Square Theatre has advertised, through posters in the lobby, slides on the curtain, and heralds distributed in the auditorium, "The Captivating Countess" for Monday, September 29th.

The words: "A Wonderful Photo-Drama Presented in Nature's Colors," were enough to force many patrons of the theatre to remember the date.

About the 24th of the month the manager stopped all the advertisements.

On Monday, September 29th, many persons made a special trip to the Herald Square Theatre to see "The Captivating Countess," but were disappointed.

It would have been proper for the manager, when he stopped the advertisements, to make a public statement to the effect that for certain reasons the exhibition of this special film had to be postponed.

On the Road

ARE motion pictures on the increase or the decline?

We cannot feel the pulse of the public by the business done in large cities, where motion picture theatres are like other sorts of amusements, an attraction for the transient element.

The man who goes on the road is more apt to answer the question.

I have found less theatres in Trenton, Burlington, New Haven, Hartford and many other towns than they had a few years ago, and this fact alone should be a warning. If the theatres now in operation were of a better class we could say that larger and better equipped houses are taking the place of a number of small theatres. This is not the case, as the theatres doing the business of to-day are the same as they were four years ago. This lack of improvement does not show an increase in the popularity of the little pictures.

What is the reason? My answer is, too long programmes. This subject of too long programmes will be discused in other columns.

Spring City, Pa., is a small town. In 1908 Mr. James A. Sturges erected the "Gem," and spared no money to have the finest theatre in the section, as can be seen by the accompanying photograph. Everything was so much up to date that the attendants were uniformed.

During the past years the public interest has declined so much that the Gem, while still doing a good business, does not see the need to increase its small seating capacity of 200 chairs.

The second theatre of Spring City has been closed for some time and is for sale.

Royersford, Pa. — Crossing the bridge over the Schuylkill River, we find Royersford, another small but prosperous burg on account of its stove and glass works.

In 1908 Royersford had two regular motion picture theatres, with the Opera House showing pictures also. To-day, while the Opera House is still showing pictures, the "Star" shows only twice a week, while the other house has been closed and transformed into a store.

The Star was a model theatre in many ways, had its own transforming plant, etc.

Phœnixville, Pa., is not much more prosperous. In 1908 Phœnixville had three regular motion picture theatres, with the "Colonial," the opera house of the place, showing pictures. To-day two of the local shows have closed their doors, leaving the "Phœnix Theatre" the only one of the trio in operation.

The New Phœnix Theatre is not a new house, but on old second-story auditorium with a seating capacity of 398 chairs. The Phœnix holds its trade because Mr. Louis R. Walters is an experienced showman. He shows a good picture on a moderate-size screen. Lovers of motion pictures do not object to climb one flight of steps when their efforts are rewarded with a good projection. In talking of the size of the picture, Mr. Walters said: "Horses on a big screen look like elephants," and he is right.

The Colonial, the Opera House, is still doing a good business. Why not? The Colonial has the best location, is well known, and its manager, Mr. H. R. Brownback, is not only experienced but extremely popular.

The Savoy was erected about six months ago to take the place of the two defunct ones. It is an old market-house remodeled, with about 400 chairs. The owner and manager is a Mr. Kulp, a livery-stable man, who did not feel inclined to give any information, not even his name. He was interested in nothing, except to take up the tickets himself. It pays a manager to keep posted on everything pertaining to motion pictures and to read some of the magazines. The curtain is too large for the size of the auditorium. A big picture destroys the photographic quality, shows the defects of the film and magnifies the scratches and dirt of old films. The arrangement of the side lights of the Savoy Theatre is very poor and does not answer the purpose.

Philadelphia, Pa.—The new theatre in course of construction on Market street, near Seventeenth street, to be managed by Mr. Frank W. Buhler, of the Bijou, of 1205 Market street, will prove an ornament to the neighborhood and should be a money-maker. On account of the neighborhood it is the intention of Mr. Buhler to pay a good deal of attention to the music, and for this purpose he is installing an expensive pipe-organ. The new theatre is expected to open by the middle of October.

Mr. Walter C. Foley is planning a $100,000 vaudeville and motion picture theatre on Fifty-second street and Chester avenue.

Mr. Geo. W. Bradenburgh and his successful film exchange are now located in their new quarters, 802 Vine street.

As we enter the second floor—28x120—we find a spacious, well-lighted reception-room. On the left of the reception-room, and facing Vine street, are the private offices of Mr. Bradenburgh, of Charles Mack, the manager of the film exchange, and the sales department for cameras, projectors, perforators, etc. On the right of the reception-room is the exchange department proper.

TRADE NOTES

Mr. Adam Kessel, Jr., president of the New York Motion Picture Corporation, became the proud father of a little girl last week. Congratulations, "A. K."

The True Feature Company, of the World's Tower Building, 110-112 West Fortieth street, is opening up branches in various parts of the country. "True Features" should succeed, and we hope will.

General Manager Isidore Bernstein is a happy man, for Mrs. Bernstein and his little girl, "Tommy," have arrived in Los Angeles and are comfortably installed at his Hollywood bungalow, in the foothills, with his sister, Mrs. Janowitz. They are a jolly party. It is a little too early to ask Mrs. Bernstein, "What do you think of the climate?" but this will come very soon, it does to everybody, often before they get off the train.

Here is one on Carl Laemmle. While on his recent Western visit he had occasion to go to the studio offices late one night. He drove up to the office door in the auto and started in, but was stopped by the night watchman, who demanded to know what he wanted. What is more, Mr. Laemmle had to get someone to identify him before he got into the offices of the company of which he is president. The watchman murmured, "This is where I lose my job," but was surprised when he was personally complimented by Mr. Laemmle.

Suggestions Invited, Questions Cheerfully Answered

Address: Construction Department, Exhibitors' Times

CONSTRUCTION, APPEARANCE, ADVERTISING—THREE IN ONE

AS so many exhibitors take such a deep interest in our Construction Department by submitting plans and asking for particulars, and as a great number of architects are subscribing to "The Exhibitors' Times," and offer to loan plans, photographs and even give us some notes on theatres they are building, we have decided to increase the Construction Department.

The increase will be in the shape of contributions from such well-known architects as Messrs. De Camp, Nathan Myers, Stewart & Stewart, Borzner & Wood and many others.

In our next issue we will publish notes, plans and views of a theatre designed by Mr. Nathan Myers, the well-known architect of Newark, N. J.

While the reader may not contemplate the building of a new theatre at the present time, we never know what the future has in store for us. The theatre of the owner may be destroyed by fire, he may have a chance to dispose of it at a good advantage, in fact unforeseen circumstances may place him in the need of a new house. It is then wise for the exhibitors, ready or not to build a new theatre, to read the Construction Department and to keep posted on its numerous features.

While I am in charge of this department I will continue my personal investigation of theatres, and, as in the past, praise the good features and criticize the blunders of certain supposed architects, who have no knowledge whatever of the requirements for a motion picture theatre.

A general bad disposition of the front doors is to have them to face both the audience and the curtain. As soon as such doors are opened they send a disagreeable draught over the shoulders of the audience, and, during the matinees, they throw too much light on the screen.

I take the liberty to submit the following plan, Fig. 1:

A shows the lobby.
B B shows the auditorium.
C shows the ticket booth.
D E shows stores or store-rooms.
F shows the partition between the lobby and auditorium.
G shows the entrance door.
H shows the main exit door.
J shows the rays of lights from door G
I shows the side wall of the auditorium.
K L shows extensions to partition F.

The dotted lines show the rays of light, how they will strike the side wall "I" when entrance door "G" is opened, and not reach the curtain during the matinees. The same dotted lines will show that the cold air will not reach over the shoulders of the audience but break against the side wall "I."

If partition "F F" extends on both sides beyond the frames of the doors, as shown in extensions "K L," the results will be still improved.

The side doors "G H" as suggested offer another advantage; they allow enough space on both sides of ticket booth "C" to insert extra exit doors "M N," to be used in case of emergency.

While I do not like to find fault, it is necessary to criticize certain bad features to put the exhibitors wise. Fig. 2 shows us the poor side light arrangement of the Savoy Theatre, of Phœnixville, Pa.:

A shows the ceiling.
B shows the side wall.
C shows the reflector.

From the ceiling "A" and only a few inches from the side wall "B" is suspended a reflector "C," in which is an electric bulb "D," as shown. From this disposition of the lights, the light rays strike the side wall "B" and practically illuminate only the upper part of the house, just under the cornice. This arrangement of side lights is worthless and nothing less than a waste of current, without giving sufficient illumination to find the seats.

Most likely the architect and the livery-stable man, the owner of the theatre, have heard that side lights were required, and placed them at any old convenient corner, as long as they could save some wiring.

A very common bad feature in theatres with a balcony is that the stairs are made to reach the last row of the balcony, forcing the patrons to climb too many steps.

When the stairs, as in some theatres, reach the first row of seats of the balcony, the climb is so much easier as to not be objectionable to the patrons.

At the Parkway Theatre, of Chicago, it was practically impossible to have the visitors to patronize the balcony on account of the long and steep climb, while the same persons would rather enjoy the balcony of the Orpheum, also of Chicago, on account of its short, easy stair-case.

In our Broadway theatres the admission is 15 cents on the ground floor and 10 cents on the balcony. On account of this difference in price the managers find enough persons anxious to save 5 cents to climb the long stairs. At the Orpheum, of Chicago, the admission is 10 cents all over the house, and often I have seen more persons on the balcony than on the ground floor.

It is true that by having the stairs to reach the upper part of the balcony some few seats can be saved, but then is it policy to make the balcony objectionable to the patrons for the sake of saving a few seats?

Sapho

The Motives of the Story Explained

(By a Moralist)

PROBABLY no good woman ever lived who did not, at some time, wonder how a bad woman could possibly fascinate a self-respecting man. The terms "good" and "bad" in this relation are comparative. No good woman ever existed who was perfect —no bad woman has even been utterly unworthy of some consideration.

The book, "Sapho," as Alphonse Daudet wrote it, portrays a woman not wholly bad. The Nethersole play, dramatized from this book, lost much of Daudet's delicacy and gave the impression of a woman whose thread of life we would prefer not having touched. The film adaptation, however, as acted in six reels by Florence Roberts and presented on the States-Rights plan by the Sapho Feature Film Company, can be described as human.

As those who read the book may remember, Fanny Legrand was picked out of the gutter by Caoudel, the sculptor, who used her as the model for his statue, Sapho, the creation which made him as a sculptor. For some time she was faithful to him. Their life was idyllic. Then Caoudel left her, and she was taken up by La Gournerie, the rhymester, who abused her. The famous Dechlette, engineer, explorer and statesman, honored her with the shelter of his roof for one night—the most any woman could ever say of him—and made her as celebrated as himself by this attention. Then came Flamant, the engraver, who spent his all, and eventually forged for her. Always the fascination for men of brains!

Finally came Jean Gaussin, the young provencal destined for a consular career. With their first meeting at Dechlette's bal masque, the story really begins.

She attracted him by her combination of ingenuousness, knowledge of the world and a certain delicacy which other girls lacked. To her, he was youth personified. They left Dechlette's in the early morning—infatuated. She murmured the question: "To my house or yours?" He took her home. She admitted fatigue after the night's dancing and he carried her up the stairs to his own quarters. That climb epitomized the merging of their lives. At the first flight, proud of his strength, he swore she was light as a feather. At the top his heart seemed bursting, his lungs suffocating, and the burden he bore one of stone or lead. She left him after two days. Afterward she came again, never importunate, never complaining when his studies prevented his receiving her, always stimulating his imagination, always watchful as to his little needs, the sort which make for a man's comfort or discomfort.

Presently she received him in her house, and while they were breakfasting on the terrace, Flamant, the engraver, came begging her to return to him. The noise of the squabble penetrated to the terrace and spoiled Jean's breakfast. To his amazement, he learned that Flamant had provided her with the house and gardens, and this instance is the only one in the whole story in which Fanny betrayed the man who was supporting her. Eventually she made up to him for it.

Jean left her for several weeks after her quarrel with Flamant, but constantly placing herself unobtrusively in his way, she soon melted his resolution and they set up an establishment together. Here comes a strong situation in the story. While dining at a cafe with Caoudel, Dechlette and La Gournerie they fell to discussing the perennial Sapho, unaware that Jean had not as yet suspected her identity with Fanny Legrand. Each in turn describes her life with him. As each of the men describes her relations with him, the scene of the four men dining at the cafe dissolves into a superimposed scene of the occurrences at the moment being described.

Finally, with his brain reeling, Jean can listen no longer. Making his excuses, he leaves the cafe and returns to their apartment, where he finds her asleep in the moonlight, and notices, as never before, "in the treachery of sleep, wrapped in the silence of death" the lines of age and experience upon her neck and breast. She wakens. Sensing his mood of disgust and renunciation, she follows him out to the living room and shows him the letters in a locked box which has, more than once, piqued his curiosity. In these letters her former relations with a dozen famous men are laid bare—and he feels a thrill of pride at the fact of his sharing her with such men. At least, there had been always in her personality that "something" which placed her in a class by herself, in a different world from the woman of the streets.

Again Jean yields to her fascination. They take a place in the country, and here, as a solace for the hours when he is away from her, she commits the mistake of sending for her child by Flamant, and of installing as housekeepers an elderly couple of her former acquaintance whose table and other manners annoy Jean.

He leaves her again. During his absence, Flamant returns after twelve years in prison as a forger, and begs Fanny to marry him. She consents, and is moving out when Jean returns for the last time, asking her to go with him to his consular appointment in Peru. At first she consents, then realizes that she is too old for such a complete change. She marries Flamant, who is thus, in a measure, rewarded for what he has done and suffered on her account. As for Jean, we get the impression of a broken, useless life.

There are some things in the story which are unpleasant, but not more so than in life itself. Sapho is true to life. In her story there is both a lesson and warning to every "good" wife against taking her supposedly established position too much as a matter of course.

Will M. Hough, author, librettist and feuilletonist, a graduate of the University of Chicago, who has since his graduation in that institution, after having furnished many mediums for the college entertainments, stepped easily into the wider ways of the world and the stronger desire of the public for comedy to the theatrical stage, and furnished many notable successes that have added to his fame and fortune, has been engaged to write exclusively a number of original comedies for pictorialization by the Selig Polyscope Company.

APPEARANCE AND MANNERS

Suggestions Invited, Questions Cheerfully Answered

Address: Appearance Department, Exhibitors' Times

I MET an exhibitor somewhat worried at the building of a new theatre close to his place. As this new theatre, according to the plans and advertisements, will be the most modern picture show in the neighborhood, there is good ground to fear serious competition.

I have investigated matters, and I have found that while the owner of the new place is willing to be liberal with his money on the construction of the theatre, he has no experience in the show business and believes, like too many other exhibitors, that he can win by giving the quantity.

My advice to our friend exhibitor, who for the past years has conducted a good, clean and decent show, is as follows:

You need not fear the coming competition, unless the owner should decide to engage an experienced manager. There is really no danger of such a move as the owner, like so many of his class, has an idea that anyone can show motion pictures, like the Italian who hires an organ and goes along the streets turning the crank and collecting the pennies.

Your new competitor is no more an enterprising young man and never had any experience in the show business. His life has been spent at his livery-stable, all the time near horses and keeping company with men who in general have not the manners and language of a parlor.

That he will offer you a bitter competition there is no doubt, because he is just the man to offer an extra long program at the start, and to offer all sorts of inducements to get the patronage away from your theatre. If you know how to conduct yourself, if you pay no attention to his competition, if you do not try to follow him in his foolish policy, but remain dignified, you will win. The chances are that he will put himself out of business before he forces you to close.

This is not the first case, and will not be the last one, as each day we find a horse-shoer, a livery stable man, a peddler, etc., anxious to invest his savings in a motion picture show, with the desire to close the theatres of his competitors and monopolize the business to himself.

Thus far, you have conducted a clean, decent show, you have made a good name, you have a fine patronage; it is up to you to continue in the same line and not vulgarize your theatre by giving a too long program or by offering all sorts of inducements.

A WELL-UNIFORMED ATTENDANT

In this world we cannot get goods without paying for them. A long program costs more money and if you cannot afford to pay the difference, you have to lower the quality for the sake of the quantity and consequently displease your patrons and force them to go elsewhere.

If to meet your competitor you increase your weekly expenses $50 for extra reels, extra posters and advertisements, extra singers and souvenirs, you increase your yearly expenses something like $2,500, and what do you get for this amount? Practically nothing, except a lot of worry. Your competitor will still increase his program to force you to go deeper and deeper into your bank account.

Do not fight your new competitor on expenses because he has made much money in trading horses, and he may be financially the stronger man. Fight him on a ground strange to him, fight him on appearance and manners, on appropriate music and good projection, fight him on what the lovers of motion pictures expect from a manager—good, courteous manners and the quality in preference to the quantity.

My advice is to remain dignified. Your new competitor, with his ideas of a livery stable, will not be particular on the selection of his pictures; he will be governed by the posters and to give a long program he will be satisfied with a mediocre pianist and cheap attendants. His long program of sensational films will bring him undoubtedly a good patronage of the undesirable element, noisy and boisterous fellows, who on account of incompetent ushers will have the place to themselves and keep the real lovers of motion pictures from visiting his place.

Clean your house, give it a fresh coat of paint if necessary, show a moderate size picture, see that your projection is the best. Abandon the use of posters but purchase some neat brass frames for hand-painted signs. All that the patrons care to know is the title of the picture and the name of the maker. Such hand-painted signs do not cost much, yet they give an appearance of refinement to a theatre, they draw the best patronage and keep away the undesirable element.

Complete the good appearance by uniforming your attendants, and before you spend more money on inducements or souvenirs, pay better wages to secure clean-cut, polite and courteous employees. The cultured class expects a clean service and much courtesy and if you follow this advice you will not only retain but increase your patronage.

If you read my article on Music on another page of this issue, you will see that the Leader and the Colonial, two theatres of Philadelphia, only a few doors apart, have very different patronages. The cultured patrons of the Leader would not think of visiting the Colonial, while the patrons of the Colonial would not visit the Leader, as they would find themselves outclassed.

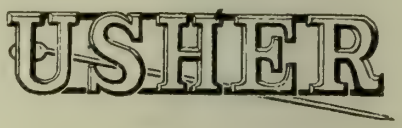
Be the leader. Let it be known that your theatre is the rendezvous of the elite of society and your success will be assured.

Evidently, you will suffer for the few first weeks, as a new theatre always draws as a matter of curiosity, but when the novelty will wear off and when the better class will find that you show the best pictures, that you have the best projection, the most appropriate music, the neatest, cleanest and most courteous service, they will soon return to you.

To win you must be refined in everything, and if you take my pointer and uniform your attendants, give them a neat uniform, something like the one represented in the following cut, make them look dignified and feel at their ease. Do not make monkeys out of them with gaudy uniforms of bright colors, over-trimmed with gold lace, etc. Have your attendants to wear the uniform correctly, always buttoned, clean face and hands, fresh collar, polished shoes, etc. The employees must appeal to the public by their neatness and polite manners, and as ladies always appreciate a good, clean service they will always go where they are assured of some courtesy.

Remember that there is always some sunshine after a storm, so do not get downhearted with the prospects of some new competition, but hold your temper, remain dignified and better days will return to your theatre.

In closing, I wish to call the attention of the reader to a novelty which is meeting with a great demand, as it is badly needed by the manager wishing to maintain the good appearance of his uniforms. It is a sort of a brooch made of metal letters to form the words "Usher," "Doorman," "Lyric," "Orpheum," etc., to be pinned on the cap or coat of the uniform to take place of the gold embroidered letters. The following cut gives the exact size of said brooch. These metal letters will retain their color and can last a lifetime and are remoable at will. The embroidered gold bullion letters tarnish in no time and when the letters turn black they give a shabby appearance to the whole uniform. While these metal letters are more durable than the gold embroidered letters, they are also cheaper as they retail at 6 cents per letter or 30 cents for the word "usher," 42 cents for the word "doorman," 54 cents for the word "fire guard," etc.



The Exhibitors' Times will give three of these brooches (from five to seven letters each) free with one year's subscription.

FANTOMAS: THE MAN IN BLACK

(Gaumont)

The second series of detective tales to be made by the Gaumont company are truly worthy successors of the first set, both in excitement and in their ability to hold the attention of the audience from the first to the last foot. It seems that the French manufacturers have the ability to make pictures of this class better than their American rivals. The story starts with the suspicions of Juve, the sleuth, being aroused by the fact that although a man enters a cab in one disguise he leaves in another.

He watches the man for a time and sees enough to fully justify his keeping "tabs" on him. While his assistant is watching the "girl in the case" Juve follows the man, who is one of many aliases and disguises, but unfortunately loses him. The assistant has, however, been able to follow the girl and traces her to a depot, where he gets in the same compartment with her. It is learned here that it is the intention of the "gang" to relieve a messenger of a large firm of some $30,000 through the assistance of this girl. The feature of the drama is the wrecking of the Northern Express. Several fights ensue between the detective and the robbers following the train wreck, one of them in the cellar of a house being particularly exciting. The end is good; both detective and Lawrence alias Fantomas, alias, etc., are apparently killed in the deserted mansion which the latter blows up. Whether they are really dead is not made certain, but they will probably be resuscitated soon.

Both in acting and mechanical make-up the film deserves a prominent position on the week's roster.

RUBY, THE CRIME SPECIALIST

Film buyers should find interest in the operations of Leon J. Rubinstein, managing director of the Ruby Features, at 145 West Forty-fifth street, New York.

He has made good in a field which he had to conceive in order to enter, that of the "educational sensational." In giving the trade a production entitled "The Gunmen of New York," he presented, not a faked Rosenthal tragedy, but an educational document written around the problem of juvenile delinquency. Mr. Rubinstein found, in marketing this picture, that the feature exchanges were prepared to buy all he could turn out along these lines, and he immediately set to work gathering material. His investigations led him into every den and dive in the metropolis, and he eventually gained access to the files of the Detective Bureau, for authentic plots. The Prisons Department of the State of New York co-operated, offering entree into the penal institutions in the State so that the Ruby Features will not need to fake prison scenes.

The first release from date will be "The Hounds of the Underworld," in which Ruby treats of a species of criminal strange to all save the professional detective; this is the "stool-pigeon," the man who is cornered in crime and forced to aid the police; he turns informer on his cronies to save his neck, and as soon as he makes a false step the deferred sentence is passed on him.

The cast is the Ruby stock company, including Henry Sharp, Robert Gemp, Christine Mayo, Will Cowper and Fred Nichols.

ADOLPH ZUKOR REPORTS EUROPEAN SUCCESS

Adolph Zukor, president of the Famous Players Film Company, who has been making a two-months' tour of Europe in the interests of his company, reports from abroad that foreign conditions are favorable to American films of the higher standard. Mr. Zukor has established offices in London, Paris and Berlin.

Motion Picture Exhibitors Association of Greater New York

At a meeting of the East New York Branch of the Motion Picture Exhibitors Association of Greater New York, held at the Rockaway Theatre, No. 547 Rockaway Ave., Brooklyn, the following officers were elected: Chairman, William H. Hollander; vice-chairman, Michael Farshower; secretary, Charles Fisher, and the following members were present: A. Taffelstein, G. Barton M. Kernan, H. Rosenberg, A. Freiberg, Mr. Friedle, J. Turtle, B. Levine, Mr. Spencer, R. Miller, Mr. Vergesslich, Mr. Forster, Miss Schwank, Mr. Reddy, M. Marias, and representatives from the following theatres were present: Kerman's Vaudeville Theatre, Mt. Morris Auditorium, Saratoga Theatre, Rockaway Theatre, Old Post Office Theatre, Saratoga Auditorium.

The chairman in opening the meeting told of the ills existing in that locality through unfair competition, such as giving souvenirs, running six or seven reels of pictures, and in some theatres the admission fee was two for five cents. This sort of thing, he stated, is obviously harmful to the good of our business and unfair to a majority of the exhibitors in Greater New York. A resolution was then passed that ten cents should be the admission fee charged on Fridays, Saturdays and Sundays, and that at the next meeting, to be held at the Saratoga Auditorium, 2026 Fulton street, Brooklyn, the question as to the number of reels to be run will be thoroughly threshed out and adjusted so that every exhibitor will show no more than four reels for five cents.

A number of the officers of the parent body were present and spoke on the advantages of organization, and stated that it is the intention of the Motion Picture Exhibitors Association of Greater New York to form local branches and endeavor to cement the friendship and bring about better conditions amongst local exhibitors. The meeting was both instructive and interesting. Sixteen exhibitors joined the association.

The Lure of New York, or Life in Chinatown, Bowery and Coney Island

Regina, a young girl, living in a small town in Bavaria, after the death of her father, decides to look for solace in the new world, where she has a brother who has not been heard from for many years.

The old mother, though broken hearted, consents to part with her, but exacts a promise from the child that she will try hard to find her brother, and that she will remain a good girl, notwithstanding any temptations; she also gives her a locket in which is a photograph of her brother when only 16. Regina makes acquaintances on board the steamer. One of her friends is a certain Miss A., who is also on her way to New York. They arrive together in the city; the young lady is met by her lover, but there is no brother there to meet Regina.

The couple take Regina to their home. Some time later Regina is bewildered to find herself in the midst of such very strange environments. She is given new clothes. She is invited to theatres, cabarets and to a trip to Chinatown. She sees curious sights, and is appalled at the rough and uncouth ways of her friends. Although they pretend to be friendly to her, she now suspects their motives, and their sincerity.

Her letters to and from her mother are intercepted by them; they assure her that her brother cannot be found. She resigns herself to her fate and is now compelled to defend herself against her evil companions. One night when they are about prepared to entice her into the depth of degradation she makes her escape through the fire-escape.

She fortunately falls into good hands. A young man who is the enemy of the companions that Regina was forced to associate with offers her a home in his mother's house. Regina believed in him, and the old woman is pleased with the little girl.

Regina secures employment in the same mill where Paul, the young man, works. She is quite happy and contented; Paul is in love with her.

Here begins a new chapter in Regina's life. One day, while going to her work, she encounters a fashionable lady in an auto. The lady drops her purse; Regina picks it up and returns it. The lady offers her a reward, but she refuses to accept it. Whereupon the genial lady hands her an open invitation to call at her home. Much to the dismay of Paul and his mother, Regina is now welcomed into her new home. The lady takes a great fancy to her and adopts her.

Amidst these conditions Regina is bewildered. She plunges into society, and becomes the envy of all her new companions. She is presented to people and meets many friends. At a reception given by the hostess Regina is the attraction of the evening. A wealthy clubman makes love to her. She is now very cautious, but he is persistent, and receives her consent to call. Her benefactors are pleased. Regina becomes coquettish.

Five years elapse since Regina has left Bavaria. Her poor old mother has almost given up all hope of seeing her child. She, too, comes to America, and is seeking employment.

Meanwhile Regina's lover proposes marriage and offers her all she may ask for. She demands another servant, and one is sent for.

An old woman is seated alone and forlorn. It is Regina's mother; she is sent to Regina as a servant. Regina orders her around, and asks her to change her slippers. The old woman obeys, and Regina looks at her gray hairs; she asks her where she came from; the old woman tells her; from Bavaria. She asks her name; the old woman tells it. Regina is stunned; she makes an effort to speak, but is seized with hysteria. The old woman is about to run for help, when Regina stops her. Slowly she tells her who she is. The mother is overwhelmed, and denounces her girl for her seeming neglect and her apparent life. She relates how she prayed for her all these years, and is now to meet her under these conditions. She inquires about her son, and what she has done with the locket containing his picture. The girl pleads, tries hard to convince her poor old mother how pure and good she has lived all the while during these hard trials and temptations. Her benefactors substantiate her story, and our hero, who has just become the possessor of the pawn ticket for the locket, runs to redeem it and brings it. He slowly opens the package then opens the locket, and, to his astonishment finds his own photograph and soon discloses the news that he is the long-lost brother.

The old mother's heart softens. She falls into the arms of her children. The picture fades away, leaving the happy people reunited.

THE PAN-AMERICAN

H. M. Russell, of Los Angeles, capitalist, who has purchased the controlling rights in a number of feature films, added to his holdings on the 26th inst. by buying up the Pan-American Film Manufacturing Company, a New York corporation. Offices have been opened on the ninth floor of the World Tower Building, 110 West Fortieth street. All branches of the feature film business will be handled with the exception of the laboratories, which have been disposed of. Arrangements have been made with over three thousand of the first-class theatres of the United States and Canada for bookings upon a theatrical basis.

WALTER BELASCO WITH NEW YORK MOTION PICTURE CORPORATION

On a recent visit to San Francisco, Mr. Thomas H. Ince, general manager of the New York Motion Picture Corporation, secured a valuable acquisition to the motion picture stage in Walter Belasco.

Manager Ince believes that directors are born and not made. Confidence in this belief emanates from the fact that temperament has made him one of the foremost directors of moving pictures to-day is an inheritance, as his parents were well known in their day as performers of merit. Mr. Ince, it will be remembered, recently staged "The Battle of Gettysburg." Having faith in this theory, Mr. Ince insists he will find lurking somewhere in the person of Mr. Belasco the latent germ of the born director that has made his brother, David, the recognized peer of all directors of the legitimate stage in America. Walter Belasco is now working diligently in the ranks of the Kay-Bee and Broncho.

CHICAGO NOTES

The Chicago attorney who so valiantly defended the more than three-reel program for the minority exhibitors of this city, now comes forth with a circular letter to the buying exchanges of Chicago and other interests who are fostering the three-reel movement, threatening suit under the Sherman act or some other law. However, regular attorneys say that he hasn't a leg to stand on.

Motion pictures as a means of education is growing wider every day. The Ford automobile people have installed a complete motion picture outfit including a Bell & Howell camera and apparatus for the purpose of taking pictures of the making of their machines, which will be demonstrated in every Ford agency in the country. For this purpose they have purchased a large number of Pantoscope motion picture machines.

One of the recent entrants into the feature film exchange business in Chicago is the Union Film Company located at 167 West Washington street, under the management of R. N. Rogers and W. R. Wreden. Mr. Rogers is well known in the feature film game in Chicago.

Still the Standard Film Exchange remains unsold. Joe Hopp returned from New York City on Monday morning minus the startling news we expected to hear. However, another appointment is made for the latter part of this week, at which time it is expected the deal will be culminated.

On Saturday morning, September 27th, Mr. S. S. Hutchinson, president of the American Film Manufacturing Company, returned to Chicago from a stay at Santa Barbara, Cal.

Mr. Hutchinson states that the new plant and equipment is progressing in a satisfactory manner. The property holdings have been practically doubled and the construction of the buildings, with other improvements to be made on the property, will entail an expenditure close to $100,000. The roads and walks have been graded and landscape gardeners have been at work for some time past, and the premises are rapidly assuming a delightfully artistic aspect. To set the palms it was necessary to blast deep holes, which were filled with the proper soil, into which were placed ten and fifteen-year-old trees.

The tile used in some of the walks was quarried from the ground on the premises. The road-bed is of quartz assaying $2 to $5 per ton.

No expense is being spared in the equipment for the taking of pictures, as also for the comforts of the employees, the number of which is steadily increasing.

Mr. Byrnes, sales agent of the Pantoscope, advises us that Mr. A. A. Schmidt has been appointed exclusive agent of this machine for New York City.

THE NATIONAL FEATURE FILM SERVICE

Mr. L. Germain, who has long been connected with various branches of the motion picture industry, has placed all of his motion-picture feature interests with the National Feature Film Service, Inc.

Such productions as Sarah Bernhardt in "Camille," Madame Rejane in "Madame Sans Gene," Helen Gardner in "Cleopatra," have been the class that he has offered to motion-picture exhibitors.

The latest feature that he has secured for the States of New York, New Jersey, Pennsylvania, Delaware, Maryland, District of Columbia, Ohio and Indiana is Ambrosio's masterpiece, "The Betrothed," from the romance by Alexander Manzoni, in six reels.

It has taken the Ambrosio Company nine months of effort, regardless of expense involved, to complete this work.

Headquarters have been established at 552-554 Fifth avenue, Brooklyn, N. Y. ('phone 516 J South), with branches at Philadelphia, Pa., New Jersey, Dayton, Ohio, and Cleveland, Ohio.

TRADE NOTES

Mr. Charles Dickson, well remembered as star of the comedy classic, "Incog," and several other Broadway successes, is not only producing picture dramas for the Reliance Company, but will be seen in the leading role of a picture dramatization of his popular sketch, "The Buffer," which will be released on October 6th.

Charles Dickson is as well known as an author as he is an actor, having written the musical successes, "The Three Twins" and "Bright Eyes," in addition to his more serious works, which include a large number of one-act sketches in vaudeville.

The début of Lillie Langtry in motion pictures will be occasioned by her appearance in "His Neighbor's Wife," a drama to be released by the Famous Players' Film Company, October 10th. Mrs. Langtry was pleased to have an opportunity to be enrolled in the gallery of Famous Players. In the rôle of a faithful wife who attempts to sacrifice her life for her false husband she has a part that will command sympathy. She depicts the brave suffering, the nobility and the loyalty of the wife without exaggeration.

Mrs. Langtry is supported by Capt. Leslie T. Peacocke, Sidney Mason, Irma La Pere, and the child actress, Mimi Yvonne.

Frank E. Wolfe, author and producer of the Socialist picture "From Dusk to Dawn," has made arrangements to sail for London and the Continent early in October, for the purpose of placing his picture upon the market in those countries.

The Vitagraph director, Mr. Wilfrid North, who was seriously injured by the premature explosion of a yacht-cannon, was reported as losing his eyesight. He is now said to be very much better, and his eyesight has been saved. It is expected that he will be at work again in the studios about the 15th of October. He was engaged in directing a two-reel picture entitled "Miss Tomboy" at the time of the accident.

Mr. Costello is directing a picture every week, either in the regular or special Vitagraph releases, appearing in them with Mary Charleson, who assumes the opposite.

The New York Motion Picture Corporation's five-reel feature, "The Battle of Gettysburg," is meeting with great success in Europe. A cablegram arrived at the Long Acre Building Tuesday, in which Mr. Roy Aitken, of the Western Import Company of London, asks for thirty prints more, which will be shipped this week. This makes a total of forty prints the Western Import Company has now.

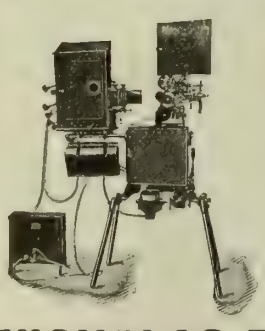
WITH A

Power's Cameragraph No. 6A

All Seats Are Equally Good



Have you ever noticed in some theatres (where they do not use Powers No. 6A) the first three or four rows are always vacant? That is due to imperfect projection. The flicker is more pronounced when the picture is viewed at close range. The projection of POWER'S CAMERAGRAPH NO. 6A renders a perfect picture without flicker, viewed from any part of the house. WITH IT, YOU CAN ALWAYS FILL YOUR HOUSE CLEAR UP TO THE SCREEN. We quote from recent letter:—

Baltimore, Md., 1115 S. Sharp St., Sept. 19, 1913.

"We have your 6A machines with loop setter with direct current—and a silver curtain. What more does an operator want? Our pictures are clear, steady and flickerless. The front rows in our theatre, which are very seldom occupied in any theatre, are always filled." Very truly yours, (Signed) FRED MEISTER, Operator.

NEW CALIFORNIA MOTION PICTURE CORPORATION

The California Motion Picture Corporation is the name of a new enterprise, incorporated for $1,000,000, in which articles have been filed here by thirteen leading business men of San Francisco, more than half of whom are rated well above the million-dollar mark. Herbert Payne, a local capitalist, is president, and his board of directors consists of twelve men whose reputation in financial circles is countrywide. They are: Robin Y. Hayne, Thomas B. Eastland, A. M. Johnson, Baldwin Wood, Clarence Payne, James Woods, Thomas A. Driscoll, Thomas Magee, George Lewis, Henry T. Scott, Walter S. Martin and R. P. Schwerin.

The first release of the new corporation will be made before January 1, 1914. Special attention will be paid to the depicting of events in the early history of California, including the famous gold discovery at Sutter's Mill in 1848. Two and three-reel feature dramas and a weekly pictorial news service confined to the Pacific Coast, but booked for production throughout the world, will also be features that will be put out.

The company is erecting a studio at Menlo Park, a fashionable San Francisco suburb.

TRADE NOTES

J. R. Freuler, vice-president of the Mutual Film Corporation, has just returned from Europe on the Mauretania, after an extended tour of several months through England, Germany, France, Holland and Switzerland.

Accompanying him were his wife and two daughters, Gertrude and Loraine.

Mr. Freuler, in addition to enjoying a very pleasant trip, was a careful observer of film conditions in Europe, where he has a number of business interests, which, he reports, are operating on a most favorable basis.

On his return, he spent a number of days in New York, prior to returning home. A warm welcome was awarded him on his arrival at Milwaukee.

George Tetwilliger, who before Saturday, September 20, was the undefeated swimmer of Lubinville, met his Waterloo before about one thousand spectators in the Schuylkill River in racing with Isadore Schwartz, assistant studio manager. Others in the race were Edwin Barbour, L. S. McCloskey, H. A. D'Arcy and Robert Lusk, who came in the order named. (Cheer up, George.—Ed.)

So successful has the Famous Players Film Service of Pittsburgh been with the Famous Players Features in Western Pennsylvania, West Virginia, Ohio and Kentucky that it recently applied for and obtained the states of Illinois and Indiana. These states are considered profitable feature territory and the Famous Players Film Service should more than duplicate its previous success. This concern contemplates establishing Western headquarters in Chicago.

TO "G. K. R."

We congratulate our friend George King Rolands on his production of "The Lure" in New York, the story of which is printed elsewhere. Miss Jennie Goldstein plays the part of Regina in this film. G. K. R. is a capable and scholarly producer of motion pictures, and we would be gratified to see him have the best opportunities in carrying out his artistic and dramatic ideas.

Power's Cameragraph finds favor in many lines of endeavor. There has just been installed one No. 6A in the Y. M. C. A. of Newark, N. J., one No. 6A with the Hudson & Manhattan R. R. Co.

Feature Film Notes

Among the sale of Itala features in the week is that of "The War Correspondent" to the Eagle Feature Film Co. of New York, who have purchased the Greater New York, Northern New Jersey and New York State rights.

Encouraged by their success with the program of the Exclusive Supply Corporation in Eastern Pennsylvania and Southern New Jersey, the Electric Theatre Supply Company, represented by H. O. Schwalbe, last week consummated arrangements for the handling of the Exclusive program in their neighboring territory: Delaware, Maryland, District of Columbia and Virginia. J. W. Morgan, of Kansas City, Mo., has entered into negotiations for the Exclusive programme in his territory.

Owing to the fact that the World Special Film Corporation could not reach the Western exhibitor at once, arrangements have been made with the Progressive Motion Picture Company, of San Francisco, to handle California, Oregon, Utah, Nevada, Arizona, New Mexico, Colorado, Wyoming and Montana on the "Two Sergeants."

During the past week, the World Special Films Corporation have made arrangements with W. A. Sherman to manage their Cleveland offices with George Stocton as assistant.

Offices have been opened in Room 420, the Columbia Building. Messrs. Sherman and Stocton have both been affiliated with the Lake Shore Film Exchange. Philip Adler, formerly of the Du Quesne Film Exchange, Pittsburgh, has been made manager of the Pittsburgh office of the World Special Films Corporation.

Reports from Warner's branch offices indicate rivalry among exhibitors to secure exclusive rights to the feature program just inaugurated. A. Warner telegraphs from New Orleans: "Prospects wonderful; genuine demand for our program throughout the South." The first releases, "In the Power of a Hypnotist," featuring Gene Gautier and Jack J. Clark; "The Living Corpse" in four reels; and "Jephthah's Daughter," a Biblical tragedy in three reels, have created no end of favorable comment. They will be followed by such noteworthy features as: James J. Corbett in "The Man from the Golden West," "For the Heart of a Princess," "Francesca da Rimini," "Sleeping Beauty," and others equally strong.

Marion Leonard's first feature production for Warner's program, "In the Watches of the Night," is ready and will be released at an early date.

An invitation is extended to exhibitors at large to call at the new offices of Warner's Features, Inc., 126 West Forty-sixth street, New York, and inspect the model projecting room which has been installed there. Every Tuesday at 2 p. m. features for the following week's program will be run off.

Within the next week the World Special Films Corporation will have two more branch offices opened, one in Boston, Mass., the other in Detroit, Mich. Mr. Charles Stern, formerly of the Universal, will be in charge of the Boston office and will be located on Boylston street, and Mr. Dickerson, formerly with the International Feature Film Company, will be at the head of the Detroit office.

State rights on "The Voice of the Wild," the second subject of The Film Releases of America, have been sold as follows: Golden Gate Film Exchange of Los Angeles and San Francisco; Northwestern Film Exchange of Portland and Seattle; Famous Players Film Company of Boston; Weiland Film Co. of Pittsburgh; Electric Theatre Supply Co. of Philadelphia.

The All Star Feature Corporation has sold to the Gaumont Company the exclusive rights to "Arizona" for England, Ireland, Scotland and Wales. The purchase was made with the proviso that the All Star Feature Corporation would give the Gaumont Company an option for the English rights on all future productions.

One of the most spectacular two-reel subjects made by Cines is promised for early release in an adventure story where many of the scenes were made some fifteen feet under water around the sunken hulk of a seagoing vessel. The attempt to photograph under water has frequently been made by other companies with indifferent results. However, the Cines Company secured some splendid negatives in this way due probably very largely to the remarkably clear water of the Italian coast. The two divers are seen walking about among the seaweed and peculiar ocean vegetation.

Eva G. Lynch, of the "Herald Films," who was removed to Roosevelt Hospital with typhoid fever, is reported to be improving. She will not be able to appear in pictures for at least two months.

The Dante Features have moved their renting offices from 20 East Fourteenth street to 1 and 3 Union Square temporarily, until larger and better offices can be secured up-town.

"Wild Beasts at Large" will be released about the middle of October. It has caused much comment and is looked forward to by all with much anticipation. It was shown at the motion picture exposition at Grand Central Palace recently and created much favorable comment.

ZUMA THE GYPSY

try still bearing its fangs. Zuma is advised of this and requested to remove them before the dance. She sets out to do this, but her growing love, which she knows is overpowering her day by day, causes her to disregard the instructions. On the night of the ball Zuma does her strange dance in the crowded hall and concludes by permitting the snake to thrust its fangs in her arms. She is taken to her chamber, where she dies.

"THE LAST DAYS OF POMPEII"

Pasquali Feature

This is the longest picture I have ever seen, with the possible exception of a fight picture which Mr. Lubin made some years ago and which was shown in London. That ran continuously for about three hours. The Pasquali "Last Days," shown at Wallack's Theatre, ran without intermission for about two hours and forty minutes. This is an entire afternoon or evening's display. It is the second of similar experiments, "Quo Vadis" having been the first. "Last Days" is in eight reels and by this time is probably made into three parts. This experiment, which is something in the nature of a repetition, is, I think, justified, for the picture is on a theme no less great and awe-inspiring than "Quo Vadis."

Criticisms of pictures of this kind are more or less in the nature of personal impressions. And I am giving the reader just a personal impression of the Pasquali "Last Days." I read Lytton's book and in order to do justice to this picture have steeped myself in the history of the epoch.

It seems to me that the book has been very well treated by the makers of the picture. The scenic wonders of the film would exhaust the copious supply of adjectives. But it is not necessary to draw upon that supply. I was asked before writing this review by a prominent film man, who has himself been identified with great productions, what I thought of the picture. I replied, "I do not see how it could be done better." And my friend who has, I believe, some respect for what I say, very pointedly regretted that he had not exercised an option that he had on the picture.

It is a wonderful piece of work. The scenes in the arena, the lions, the gladiators, the eruption of Mt. Vesuvius, the destruction of the city—these supply the spectacular parts of the picture.

But there is a very human love story running through the film which is bound to hold the suffrages of the audience. Human nature 1900 years ago was, it seems, pretty much what it is to-day. Lydia, the blind Greek slave, loved Glaucus and in the end, after the destruction of Pompeii, when Glaucus and his bride departed for Greece on a convenient boat, Lydia buried her sorrows in a watery grave, but through several reels of the film this magnificently played character showed wonderful devotion and intuition. It is a finely played part.

Arbaces, the priest, was a very wicked person indeed, and Ione a very charming lady. These characters made up a story of love and hate and self-sacrifice which makes the human side of this great picture. It looks as if Pasquali had exhausted all his resources in the making of this picture. The settings, the architecture, costumes, the temple interiors and exteriors, look so wonderfully real.

The films are full of very fine pictures and groupings, and the acting is superb. I haven't the smallest doubt but what the picture will be a great success wherever shown. It is a picture, and a great one. It could not possibly be made here. It is typical of Italian picture-making art, and above all it is of educational value because, aside of its dramatic motive, it presents us with a very good aspect of life as it was probably lived in those times.

THE VITAPHONE

It Is Heard in Texas

Our friend George Greenbaum should be pleased with the write-up which our contemporary, The San Antonio Light, published in far-off Texas, gives his talkies. George has been working hard to popularize his talking motion pictures, and the Texans have evidently taken kindly to them, or we should not read this very laudatory article. The local management has included the following subjects in the programme:

Harry Lauder's popular hits in the Scotch dialect, "She's My Daisy," "I Love a Lassie," "Trixie from Dixie"; also Ada Jones and Lem Spencer in "Hans and Gretchen," "Trail of the Lonesome Pine," "Katherine's Valentine," "Don't Turn My Picture to the Wall," "The Same as His Faither Was Before Him," "Hilda Loses Her Job," "When It Is Apple Time in Normandy," "The Whistling Bowery Boy," and extracts from a number of comic operas and musical comedies, among them being "The Mikado," "The Count of Luxembourg," "The Geisha," "Merry Widow," "Carmen," "Faust."

GRIFFITH LEAVES BIOGRAPH

Lawrence Griffith, the well-known producer, has it is said quitted the employment of the Biograph Company. His future plans are not at present ascertainable.

A PITFALL OF THE INSTALMENT PLAN

American, October 6th

When Warren Kerrigan plays the lead and Jack Richardson interprets the heavy, one is almost sure to have a good film. This one is so good that it deserves a place among educational pictures. Steve, the hero, gets a job from the foreman who is building a large store. He, however, refuses to steal cement for this man and is discharged. He does not tell Alice about it and she, thinking that he is still working, opens an account at the department store which is to move into the new building. When the investigator starts to look up her husband he cannot be found. The girl is consequently thrown into prison. Here is the only part of the picture which is incongruous. The girl is thrown into a dirty cell without a chance of an explanation and a letter which she has written to Steve torn up. That is a little exaggerated to the mind of the reviewer. Steve, however finds her, the plot is unveiled, the foreman arrested, and Steve and Alice rewarded.

WEBER & FIELDS AND KINEMACOLOR

A new feature film-producing company has just been formed. Under the name of the Weber & Fields Kinemacolor Producing Company, New York, a five hundred thousand dollar company has been organized for the purpose of exploiting popular German comedians in a series of feature films. It comprises amongst its directors Messrs. Weber & Fields, William Klein, Morris Ely, A. P. Barnard and A. H. Sawyer. The Kinemacolor studios will be utilized, and the first series, consisting of a full evening's entertainment, will be commenced immediately.

Roy McCardell, the World's humorist, has written the first libretto, entitled "Mike and Meyer Around the World." It opens with a scene where these familiar characters sell out to the Delicatessen Trust, and start on a globe-trotting tour. Among the scenes may be mentioned their jump into the bay from the deck of the Imperator, and subsequent adventures at the bottom of the sea—these latter scenes being rendered realistic by the Kinemacolor submarine pictures, taken with real fish and aquatic animals. Mr. McCardell is at present in Panama, and it is probable that he is arranging to send "Mike and Meyer" on a trip through the Canal. This is only the first of a series of comical adventures of the famous comedians which will be filmed in natural colors by the Weber & Fields Kinemacolor Company.

THE HEART OF A PRINCESS

Warner's Features

Director H. C. Matthews, who made the Warner's feature for "The Heart of a Princess," is to be congratulated upon his selection of the theme and his treatment of it. He has gone to our old friend, the Arabian Nights entertainment, and has taken a story which I think I read a long time ago in which there are three competitors for the hand of a beautiful princess. These competitors hope to win her heart by finding the most wonderful thing in the world—one finds a telescope, the other found a magic carpet, the other an apple. There are archery contests in this pretty story, which is a series of what we might imagine pretty pictures of Oriental life in the time of the great caliph, Haroun-Al-Raschid.

Have you ever seen a Drury Lane pantomime? This is the great Christmas spectacle in the oldest theatre in London. It is generally built around fairies, genii, wonderful adventures and the like. You get Ali Baba and the Forty Thieves, Sindbad the Sailor, and similar subjects put up in spectacular form. This film reminds me of these entertainments. It is gorgeous, Oriental and pretty to the eye. I suppose the picture was made out in Los Angeles. Wherever it was made, it is a wonderfully good thing. It will delight the eye and interest the people in virtue of its pretty story, for the Princess and successful wooer live happy forever aferwards and steal away in a very pretty barge.

If Warner's features can give us many pretty subjects like this, the new venture is sure of success.

The third floor, also 28x120, is divided into several departments: The Poster Mounting, Sign Painting, The Title and Manufacturing, etc.

Mr. George W. Bradenburgh is well located and has spared no expense to have a most modern and well-equipped exchange.

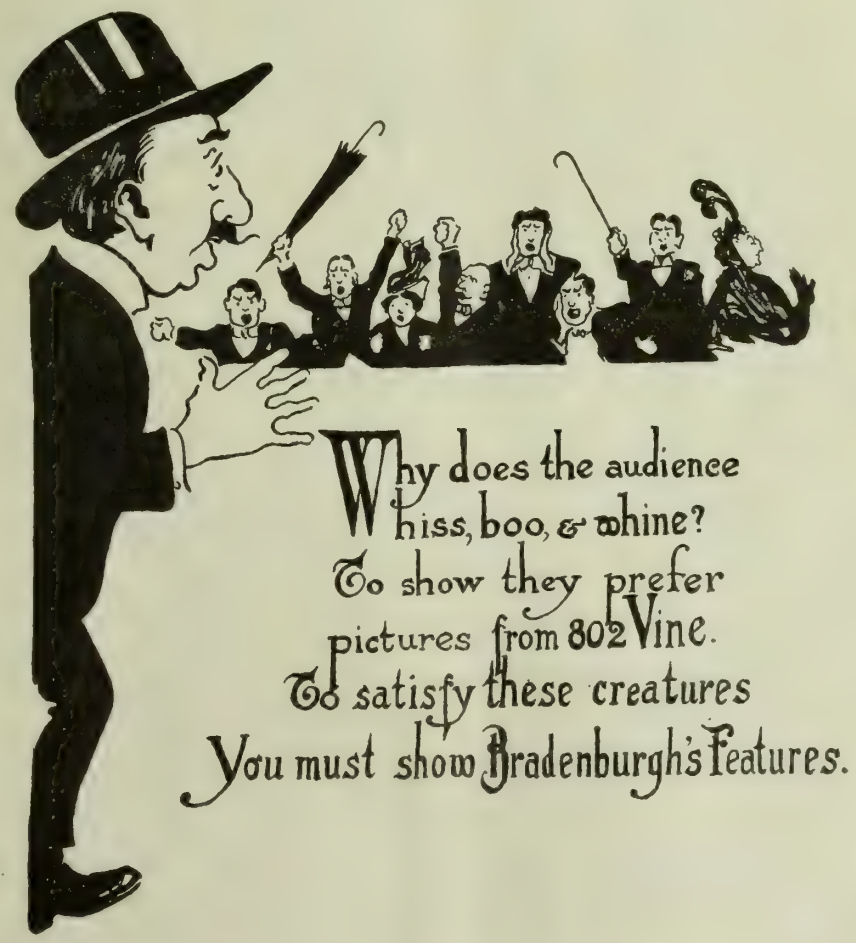
The move was made necessary as the old place on Eighth street was getting too small to accommodate the constantly increasing business. It is correct to state that Mr. Bradenburgh is not only a strong believer in printer's ink, but he composes some very clever advertising cartoons, as can be judged from the accompanying cut:

In many cases the name given to a theatre is not appropriate to either the location nor to the style of construction. We often find a theatre called the "Grand," when it is in fact the smallest in the town. The word "Colonial" on a construction of pure Moorish style. "Bon-Ton" to designate a theatre given to the roughest element of the town, etc.

"The Leader," I am pleased to tell, is an appropriate name for the handsome theatre on Lancaster avenue and Forty-first street. It is a leader in everything, in architecture, in decorations, in lighting, in excellent pictures, in a fine projection, in appropriate music and in a most polite and courteous service.

After leaving the Leader visit the Colonial Amusement Palace, also on Lancaster avenue, and you will agree with me that the Leader is the refined theatre of the neighborhood. The Colonial is doing a good business, but it is an entirely different patronage.

J. M. B.



Why does the audience
hiss, boo, & whine?
To show they prefer pictures from 802 Vine.
To satisfy these creatures
You must show Bradenburgh's Features.

BRISTOL'S EQUINE WONDERS

The Biggest and Best Horse, Pony and Mule Exhibition in the World

15 — BEAUTIFUL COLLEGE EDUCATED ANIMALS — 15

Elegant Stage Equipment and Paraphernalia. Special Car Required. Five People Travel With the Organization.

TWELVE MILITARY PONIES, groomed and caparisoned to the highest degree of perfection, performing a series of evolutions and maneuvers that are a revelation in animal training. The most beautiful exhibition of the kind ever presented. An equine phalanx par excellence.

"RUBY," Funniest of All Trick Mules. Not the ordinary, vicious, "unridable" type, but a real comedienne. Her funny antics bring roars of laughter from young and old. She dearly loves a romp with the children at the daily receptions after matinees. Her rocking chair reposes are unique.

"DIAMOND," the trotting-bred contortion horse, whose demonstration of animal intelligence and feats of agility surpass the imagination. For over 20 years WILLIAM BRISTOL has been acknowledged the "Superman" of the horse training craft. He has had many an imitator, but never an equal. Bristol's Record Breaking Equine Paradox is a SURE-FIRE HIT. If you want to increase your business, address the only authorized manager,

BROOKLYN, N. Y.

Studio Notes

Director J. Farrel MacDonald, for the Universal, is putting on a Western photoplay which is adapted by Richard Willis from the poem "Lasca." In one scene there is shown a stampede of cattle, which sweep over the bodies of a cowman and a woman, killing her. The photoplay is interesting from the fact that the two principal characters are taken by an old-time cowboy, Harry Gant, a man who is known all over the Colorado ranges, and who has, moreover, posed as a typical cowboy for several well-known artists, and Jane Bernoudy, a champion rider who has just returned from Pendleton, Ore., and who is an artist and writer of note as well as an actress and rider.

Harry Pollard, of the Universal, is putting on a story by Richard Willis entitled "The Lesson the Children Taught." In this, Buster Emmons, Fay Brierley and Kathie Fischer will take all the "fat." Ed. Alexander, Edna Maison and Adelaide Bronti take the grown-ups. In this photoplay the elders see themselves impersonated by the kiddies, and it brings about happiness.

In "Freckles Wins the Day," Harry Pollard, of the Universal, has put on a comedy in which he pokes a little quiet fun at the motion picture makers. He has his girl join a picture concern, and she is N. G. and gets a hard time with the director. Eventually her father takes her away after smashing things up generally. Later Harry Pollard, as Freckles, licks all the boys in sight to win the girl, and at the end he makes the amorous curate marry them instead of licking him, too.

Phillips Smalley and Lois Weber, of the Universal, are putting on a picture in which the relationship of Jew and Gentile is shown. The story is by Lois Weber.

Augusta Phillips, of the Universal, Mrs. H. Fahrney in private life, and who writes the scripts put on by Mr. Fahrney, is always accompanied in her auto by Waggles. Waggles is curly-haired and boisterously young, also extremely joyful, and the Fahrney auto is a sight, with its scratched cushions and wood-work, but then Waggles is Waggles, and there you are.

"The Tomboy's Race," built around the recent Corona Road Race in California, has just been finished at the Majestic studios under the direction of Lucius Henderson. The race was an exciting one from the start, and Arthur Cadwell, head camera man, was doubly interested, as his racer was entered in the "medium car" event. Gradually the car fought its way to the front until, at the finish, amid the deafening applause of the crowd, Cad's car came in second, incidentally making its owner one thousand dollars richer.

Frank Montgomery, of the Kalem Company, has finished a Western story by Richard Willis, which contained a part for Mona Darkfeather, a Western girl who is roused to courage by her husband's peril. Mr. Montgomery is starting upon another story by the same writer, this time an Indian subject taken from a new standpoint. The same cast will be used with Eagle Wing and other prominent Indians and Daisy Cullington. Mona will have one of her Indian parts.

There is a coincidence connected with "The Haunted Bride," now being produced by Phillips Smalley and Lois Weber, of the Universal The day after Miss Weber had finished the script there was an article in a Los Angeles paper giving an account of a jilted lover who had committed suicide, and who sent her a letter threatening to haunt her, and the article went on to say that the girl was in a sate of collapse with fear and remorse. This idea is incorporated in the photoplay being put on.

The Lubin Comedy Company, Arthur D. Hotaling, director, left Philadelphia last week for the Jacksonville, Fla, studio, where they will spend the winter. The principal players are Mae Hotely, Hazel Smith, Margaret and Frances N. Moyer, Julia Calhoun, Jessie Milton, Leola May, Peggy Anderston, Dorothy Betz, Jerry Heverner, Raymond McKee, Garry Hotaling (chief operator), Frank Griffin, James Levering, William Betz, Walter Heires, William Bowers, Neil Morton, Henry Bard, and a host of stage carpenters, camera men, electricians, scene painters and property men. Mr. Hotaling is having lights installed in the studio so that hereafter he can laugh at the rain.

Frank Montgomery has resigned from the Universal to join the Kalem forces. The deal was settled one night and Frank started in the next morning. He will put on a variety of plays, Western and otherwise, and will have a number of his old company with him. Prominent among these will be Mona Darkfeather, for a Montgomery production would not be complete without Mona. This clever lady is so closely associated with Indian plays that there are many who really think she cannot play anything else. As a matter of fact she is very versatile and at one time had never played an Indian part.

Dustin Farnum has been secured by the All Star Feature Corporation to play the role of "Clay" in the photodrama version of "Soldiers of Fortune," soon to be produced. The part to be played by Mr. Farnum in the production by the All Star Feature Corporation is that in which Robert Edeson starred.

The original dramatization of "Soldiers of Fortune" was made by Augustus Thomas from the novel by Richard Harding Davis. From the novel and from his own original dramatization Mr. Thomas has prepared a scenario upon the basis of which he will supervise the staging of this successful romantic melodrama as a "silent" drama. In this version for the photoplay there will be, of course, many times the number of scenes that were shown upon the stage. Richard Harding Davis will actively co-operate with Augustus Thomas in the staging of his novel for the camera.

A love story which is also educational to a large degree is "Through the Sluice Gates," by Phillip Lonergan, a coming Majestic release featuring William Garwood and Belle Bennett in the leading roles. Produced by John Adolphi, this picture shows scenes along the new Los Angeles aqueduct, that great engineering feat of the Southwest now rapidly nearing completion. One of the strongest scenes in the play is a thrilling man hunt in which the unjustly accused hero is aided by his sweetheart in escaping through the sluice gates of the aqueduct.

ELECTRIC GENERATING SETS ESPECIALLY BUILT FOR MOTION PICTURE THEATRES

DIRECT CURRENT LOW VOLTAGE OUTFITS THAT REDUCES ELECTRIC BILLS 50 TO 75 PER CENT

"Our plant operates to within five per cent of rated capacity for twelve or thirteen hours a day, seven days a week. The regulation for load variation is excellent and has to take care of a variation from constant load (momentarily) of 96 amperes. Generator is rated at 80 amperes. The cost of operation is about twenty per cent of that charged for Central Station service. The light is absolutely steady and produces a wonderful result in pictures projected—over that secured through the use of alternating Central Station service. This plant has been in operation since 1911 and has given us no trouble whatever. We consider the 15 H. P. Generating Set the ideal outfit for the average picture theatre. NICHOLAS POWER

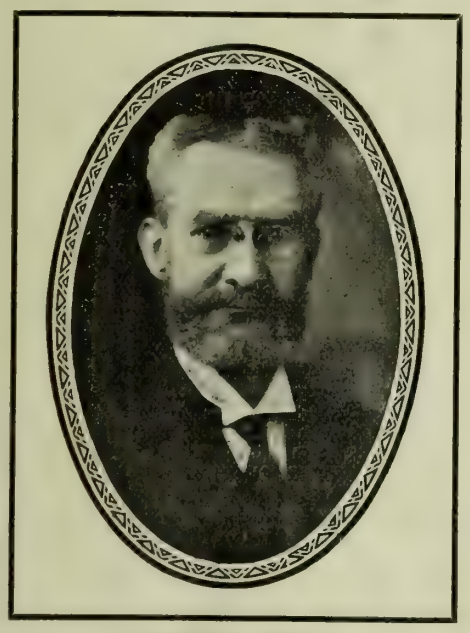
(Cameragrapher)

IN my photographic days, quite the most, or at any rate one of the most original, men in that business was a witty Irishman. He lived to a fine old age; died the possessor of a nice estate and plenty of money. He used to make photographic cameras, big and little, which were a joy to handle. Have you ever seen a microscopist fondle over a Zeiss high-power, high-grade microscope? I have. And I have done a great deal of the fondling. I was once the possessor of a beautiful Zeiss microscope. I seldom used it in actual microscopic work. But it was a joy to me to turn the milled head and feel the exquisitely wrought out movements of the machine. I write "wrought out" advisedly. The finish of these scientific luxuries is imparted by hand—oh, but if I tried to put my feelings on paper on handling delicate optical instruments I should fail, even though I exhausted Webster in the process.



NICHOLAS POWER

Well, my Irish friend whose name was "Pat" (never mind the surname) made cameras as delicate in their movements as beautiful microscopes. They were built of Spanish mahogany years and years old. It had been pickled. It had been ripened. And oh, the beautiful polish he put on those instruments. They were good to look at and to use. Those were the happy days when it was a distinction to be a photographer. Now it ain't. The kodak is omnipresent. "Everybody's using it, using it, using it." My camera friend began life in a back shop, slept under the counter at nights, but died in a bed that a wealthy society beauty might envy.

I don't want my friend Nicholas Power to die for a long, long time to come. Of course, he has got to die like the rest of us. But he is such a treasure to the motion picture field that we must keep him as long as we can. Nicholas Power is witty, clever and warm-hearted. One of the happiest experiences in my last lustrum was to sit and listen to his mordantly humorous story of his wanderings in the East. He had taken a vacation and probably needed it as much as he deserved it. We all need vacations. Not everyone of us deserve them. I deserve vacations, but I don't need them for I hate holidays.

I theorize that Nicholas Power in the projection machine field is the analogue of my camera-making friend. I believe that Nicholas Power (more power to him and all power to him) began business life in a back shop and slept under the counter. Slept with parts of his machine, as my camera friend did, and as that absolutely unmanageable and erratic Thomas Edison is said to do now. These men are the despair of their wives, daughters and families, BUT they get there. They produce. They "deliver the goods."

One of the most interesting exhibits at the New York Motion Picture Exposition in July was the Nicholas Power exhibit and one of the most interesting figures there was Nicholas Power himself. He did not see me, but I saw him and it pleased me to see the evident interest Mr. Power took in explaining not merely the practical uses of his much-loved cameragraph, but to expound the optical principles involved in projection. To this day I can remember the

THE DARK HOUSE AND THE PICTURE

ONE effect we hope of the erection in Central New York and the centers of other large cities of photo-drama houses, especially and exclusively for the exhibition of the motion picture, will be the disappearance of the dark house. The dark house is an abomination in the eyes of all lovers of good motion pictures properly projected amid suitable environments. The dark house is a melancholy confession of theatrical failure or ineptitude.

The dark house is dark because there are no plays to fill it. There are plays, but the people who put on plays are mostly unable to tell a good play from a bad play. That is why these theatres are dark.

In Central New York, and indeed in some of the outlying sections of the city, there are always these dark houses. Sepulchres of buried hopes; graveyards of unrealized ambitions; tombs, mortuaries, morgues—we just hate to see them because they typify failure. Into these morgues comes the savior of many a diminishing bank balance, the motion picture. At the present time in the Broadway section of New York City there are a dozen of these places. Pictures are put in and indifferently projected and hastily arranged music flung at the picture as our confrere, J. M. B., is constantly pointing out elsewhere. The picture becomes literally a feature of these mausoleums. A substitute, any old thing you like, as long as the house is kept from going dark.

Of course, it's business—pro tempore—but the picture suffers in public esteem. Mr. David Horsley is talking about building high-grade theatres. Well let him start on Broadway or in the center of other large cities; tear down these dark houses and put real motion picture theatres in their places. Because in New York the best motion picture houses are away from the center of things. It is a moot point whether the New York center of things is the best of things with regard to amusements. Broadway, according to keen observers, is being rapidly shorn of its glories. Even New Yorkers, the most pleasure-loving people on the face of the globe, are becoming sensible in their pleasure-taking. They can get high-grade theatrical performances and good motion picture exhibitions on their own doorsteps, so to speak, so why should they worry about Broadway? Especially when there are so many dark houses there and so many other theatres which are but registrations of failures and the fatuity of infatuated angels.

SYRACUSE UNIVERSITY MOTION PICTURE SCHOOL

The photographic school at Syracuse University will probably, by the end of the year, be housed in a home of its own, as plans are now under consideration for a special building comprising on the ground floor a lecture room, studio, four darkrooms, plate, lens and shutter-testing rooms and the usual offices. On the first floor will be built a portrait and motion-picture studio, 30x60 feet, in which it will be possible to stage any ordinary play.

Professor E. J. Wall, who is in charge of this department, hopes to have installed in the new building a Hurter & Driffield plate-testing machine with its complement, a special photometer, a complete optical bench, these instruments now being on the way. With these he hopes to make the school a reliable testing establishment for lenses, plates and papers. There will also be put in, at the earliest possible date, a shutter-testing machine. A photomicrographic department is to be fitted up and spectrographic work is to be undertaken; the necessary equipment being all on the spot, only want of room preventing its being installed ere now.

The department has received many donations in the form of apparatus. George Eastman has given a complete series of kodaks, developing tanks, etc.; the Edison Company has donated projecting machines; F. J. Marion, of the Kalem Company, a motion-picture camera and printer; the Ansco Company, two of their printing machines; the Bausch & Lomb Optical Company, a complete set of lens-grinding tools and a lens in the various stages of grinding from the raw glass;

By J. B.

A LITTLE help is worth a ton of sympathy. Two months ago my heart began to bleed for Mr. Arthur Hopkins, for I knew by instinct and reasoning that he was backing a forlorn hope. His destruction was about as certain as the ship, the loss of which has led to the erection of a beautiful monument parallel to the axis of the Park Theatre on Columbus Succle, New Yark City. Columbus Succle is a morgue, the graveyard of many reputations, good, bad and indifferent. It has a statue of Columbus, the Maine monument, a Café Des Enfants. So it's out of the theatrical running on this showing and will never be in it.

* * * *

I was determined to see "Evangeline" and did. Strange though it may read, "Evangeline" is an English classic—not by any means entirely an American one. It finds a place in British school books. The story has been familiar to me since boyhood, and the character of the beautiful girl who lost her lover in a military mêlée only to find him years afterwards a dying man in a pesthouse is one of the most beautiful of all time. Longfellow immortalized himself with this type of beautiful, patient, suffering womanhood.

* * * *

With Edna Goodrich in the star part, an adequate support, good staging and costumes, "Evangeline" should have been a success in the land of its birth. It never stood a chance of success here in New York, because New York, as Madam Simone recently pointed out, does not stand for the imaginative, the intellectual, the thought-provoking in its plays. It wants rapid action, surprise, change, excitement, first, last and all the time. It does not want poetry on the stage; it wants drama of "Within the Law" type, or surprise of the "Seven Keys to Baldpate" kind.

* * * *

"Evangeline" is one of the most weird, haunting productions I have ever seen. I have seen some of the most beautiful productions by some of the greatest stage producers of the world. To me the presentation of the poem in dramatic form was almost flawless. As for Miss Goodrich in the part of Evangeline, she approached within measurable distance of my ideal of the character. She was intensely good. There is all the more reason for regretting, therefore, that in the opinion of those who stand for good in the play world this production was spattered with mud by the baser kind of New York critic. Believe me, some of these critics are a pretty bad lot, backed up by pretty bad influences. However, as I surmised and expected, the production is good enough for multiple reel form and I hope that Mr. Hopkins, his associates and Miss Goodrich will take this friendly hint and turn Evangeline into a five-reel motion picture and sell it on the state-right plan. They will make more money that way than they possibly could by attempting to force this poem upon people who don't want it. The motion picture public is not so easily led away from its ideal as the theatrical public. Thank heaven!

* * * *

Last week the theatrical men of New York held a meeting and wondered why their houses were so often dark, why so many of their plays were failures, and why they could not now get $2.00 a seat with the readiness that they could at one time. Mr. Hopkins supplies the reasons in his failure with "Evangeline." Such a thing is against the "interests" of the New York theatre. It is against the syndicates, it's against the "angels," it's against the "powers that be," in fact, of the New York stage. It's against the trust or trusts, the rings and the inner rings; it's against the grafters and the crooks who vitiate and dominate New York theatricals. It is not necessary for these men to hold meetings on this subject; they know or ought to know that the public has been frightened away from New York theatres. They have been frightened, and are being frightened, into the motion picture theatre, thank goodness. And the motion picture theatre at last is out of the hands of the crook and the grafter. It has defeated the "interests," and all the king's horses and all the king's men will never again put the motion picture theatre of this country in a subsidiary position.

* * * *

I don't know anything about Mr. Hopkins or his entourage, but I give him this advice on his record: That he get into the picture game as soon as possible. That is if he can make "Evangelines." This is the kind of feature film that we want. We in this country want the classics of the country sympathetically filmed. Why, such a picture as that of "Evangeline," if made now, can be used as a complement to or supplement of school books for centuries. Children, while studying the poem for its English, could have it also illustrated by means of such a picture as this. Mr. Edison, a wise and shrewd man, argued recently that school instead of being unattractive to the average kid could be made really attractive by means of motion pictures. Mr. Edison is right. All boys and girls when they reach adolescence or intelligence are interested in the motion picture. So I hope to live to see "Evangeline" made by Mr. Hopkins and his associates passing through the schoolrooms.

* * * *

I read Mr. Hopkins' letter in the New York Times the other day. He hit out at some of his critics good and hard. No doubt they deserved it. I have been a critic myself and a pretty severe one. I have also been a dramatic author and the most roasted writer in London. I once wrote letters like Mr. Hopkins did and got whacked for my pains and troubles. The whacking I got made me a motion picture man with faith in the boundless future of the motion picture. Nothing like the argumentum ad hominum. Go thou and do likewise, Mr. Hopkins. And upon me sivvy, I would like to see lovely Edna Goodrich on the screen. She looks to me as if she would be a fine image in pictures.

* * * *

More and more the theatrical men are turning to the picture field as a refuge—something to which they can turn with the certainty of getting back the money and labor which they expend in their productions. The stage at its best is full of uncertainties. If you got the truth from Mr. Frohman, you would probably find that his failures vastly outnumber his successes. Also that some of the other great theatrical names are not always synonymous with uniform or even comparative successes. The picture, on the other hand, is establishing a different reputation. It is this: That with given conditions, success may be made a matter of almost mathematically calculated exactitude.

* * * *

In other words, you can put down so much money and calculate upon a certain return. I should be betraying secrets (but I won't, s'welp me, never) if I told you how much money the All Star put down for "Arizona"—how much money they expect to make and will make. They started out on a definite formula, a formula which I have given again and again: a good story well acted and well photographed. "Evangeline" is a mighty good story; it is wonderfully well produced and acted. All that is necessary now is to have it well photographed, well advertised and it will make money.

* * * *

"Evangeline" is not the only high-class production here in New York that has been mercilessly knocked during the last year or two. It is commonly said by theatrical people in my hearing now that "this or that piece would make a fine picture." Most good pieces, most good plays will make good pictures. The great plays of the future will be good pictures. The great writers of the future will be great photoplay writers. The ordinary stage is by no means dead. It will always live as pointed out before. It will produce good actors and actresses, some good plays, but it will interest a minority of the amusement loving public. The predominant partner in the amusement field is the motion picture. For the picture interests the majority, and by the law of representation majorities rule in politics and all the other affairs of life. Man is a majority, i.e., he outnumbers the woman by points. And that's why HE rules. Isn't it so, ladies?

beam of rays which shot along the specially erected optical system on the Power stand like a beam of light from the lighthouse at sea.

One of the greatest treats you can have is to let Mr. Power take you over his factory downtown in New York City. Downtown! That is in the purlieus of Brooklyn Bridge. The home of the cameragraph is a busy hive in this crowded section. It was when I was there. Maybe now they have a big plant out in Jersey. Mr. Power himself took me around and personally explained the use of every part in the cameragraph, every part and its relationship with other parts. He virtually took a cameragraph to pieces and put it together again.

"There it is," he said with a wave of the hand; "nothing new about it, nothing wonderful; it just grew from year to year by experience." You feel when you are in Mr. Power's company that you are in the company of a good man, a good mechanician and a good fellow. Mr. Power is proud of his work and his success and he is devoted to his family. I am going to nail him down to a promise he made two years ago. He was going to take me out and give me a good time. He could not fix a date then. Why? because his time, as he put it in such a noble way, was primarily that of his wife and daughters. Happy man.

I am not a mechanician and I know little about motion picture projectors—as yet. Still I may add to my experiences by becoming an operator. You never can tell. The Power's cameragraph always impressed me as a wonderfully ingenious growth, clever, well made, efficient and good to handle. A machine which deserves its success. It helps to popularize motion pictures. As I wrote once before, the first projector that I handled in 1896 worked like a coffee grinder, but the Power's cameragraph is a thing of "sweetness and light."

Nicholas Power is a prominent person and personality in the picture field and a popular one. One of those men of whom you cannot easily see too much. I am writing this "quite unbeknownst" to Mr. Power. I don't think he will like it and I don't think he will dislike it. There is a proper curiosity in the great motion picture field to know something of the personalities of the pioneers—the real working pioneers. Not the advertised butcher, the baker, the candlestick-maker, but the REAL WORKERS. That is why I am writing this article. Nicholas Power is and has been a good worker and that is why I write about him on the front page of this number of the Motion Picture News. T. B.

while the C. P. Goerz American Optical Company has loaned a fine anastigmat lens.

It may save many applicants trouble if it be explained that the course extends over two years and comprises the necessary art and chemical training required to fit any one to qualify either as an expert with the camera, in the laboratory, or the studio. The demand for skilled workers is greater than the supply and already posts are open to those who graduate, not only in connection with the motion picture, but also in photographic factories. This explanation is necessary, as many seem to think that photography can be learned in two or three months; but it takes longer than this to become an expert motion-picture or studio operator.

The school was only started last January, with Mr. Wall as instructor, but he has now been made professor and the outlook for the future is more than encouraging. Such a school as this, absolutely independent of any manufacturing concern, ought to take its position in the States as the final court of appeal in all photographic matters. It certainly deserves support, not only that of the motion-picture men, but that of photographic manufacturers and the trade generally, since its work will be in the interests of every branch of the photographic art.

"What's the Use?"

THE following article is written, not so much for the benefit of the operators of New York City (and yet in a way it applies to them), as it is for that of the men who hope to become operators and procure license cards.

The point of the article is contained in the following paragraph and the writer wishes there was some more emphatic way of making it plain to you than by just the use of printer's ink.

"It is absolutely impossible and likewise more than foolish for men who are trying to obtain license cards to attempt to bribe the Examining Board, or by the use of influence, political or otherwise, force the issue of a license unless they are competent to pass the examination given to them by the Board."

Before proceeding to show how unwise the bribery method is, let me first state the experience of a few of the deluded ones that have tried it; these are:

"Orlandi Baldi attempted bribery by passing a sum of money to one of the Examining Board, was promptly arrested and at a hearing before Magistrate Breen was held for further action under $1,000 bail. At his next hearing before Magistrate Barlow his bail of $1,000 was continued and he was held to await the action of the Grand Jury. When the case was again called it was found that he had jumped his bail and evidently left the city. A bench warrant has been issued for his arrest.

"Jacob Targoff, attempted bribery by passing a twenty-dollar note to the Examiners at the conclusion of his examination. He was detained until an officer arrived, arrested, and at his hearing, at the Criminal Court Building before Magistrate House, he was held under $1,500 bail for trial May 16th last. At his hearing before Magistrate McAdoo he was held without bail for the action of the Grand Jury.

"Julius Tietze, charged with bribery, sent money and cigars through the mail to the Electrical Engineer, and also wrote promising more money if 'helped across.' At his hearing before Magistrate Campbell he was held for the action of the Grand Jury."

There are numerous other cases of attempts to bribe the Examining Board, and as you can see even the Engineers of the Department have not escaped, and sums ranging from $5 to $100 have been offered, not only money bribes, but presents of every kind from cigars to wax dolls have been offered. They have all met with failure, and most of those who have tried this method are facing serious trouble, and in spite of all rumors to the contrary the Examining Board is as innocent of accepting graft as ever, will undoubtedly remain so.

Not so much blame can be attached to these men for trying to bribe their way through the examination as to those who are directly responsible for their action (and in most cases these parties are operators), who tell these men that they had to pay for their cards and that that method is the only sure way to get by the Board.

The Department of Water Supply, Gas and Electricity is in possession of information which is slowly but surely cornering these parties, and very soon they will find themselves in just as bad a fix as the men they have told to try bribery—the license cards of several of these "agents" have been taken away by the Commissioner.

There are many men holding cards in New York City to-day who obtained their cards by paying money for them, and who actually think that the money they paid found its way to the Examining Board, but such is not the case, and I will prove it to you by introducing to you the slick "Mr. Fix It" and by doing so show you where the money went.

Having been told that paying for a card is the only sure way of obtaining one, the candidate is introduced to this "Mr. Fix It," who, to hear HIM tell it, is a personal friend of not only the members of the Examining Board, but of the whole department from the Commissioner down to the office boy. "Mr. Fix It" takes the candidate down to the department, shows him the place to get his application blank, helps him to prepare it, and likewise file it. He then tells him that it will be necessary to answer a few of the questions before the Board, which questions he attempts to give the answers of. He then takes his money and awaits the day of the examination. Down-town with him he goes, leaves him in the hallway while he goes in to talk with the Commissioner, the Engineer, the Examination Board as the case may be, comes out, tells him that he has fixed it, and he goes ahead and tries his luck. If he is successful by his own efforts "Mr. Fix It" is in just as much money as he has given him; if not, he tells him that something was wrong and either returns his money or keeps it until he tries again. "Mr. Fix It's" talk with the powers that be has not in any way concerned him or his examination, and has only been used for the purpose of deceiving him. Of course if he passes he gives him to understand that the money went to the Examination Board.

It is not hard to see why so many men foolishly try bribery to get cards, when they are repeatedly told by so many of the agents of "Mr. Fix It" how they had to pay anywhere from twenty to a hundred dollars to get through, and these men not being lucky (?) enough to know this slick gentleman try it alone and so get into serious trouble.

As a result this has not only made serious trouble for the candidate, but has placed an ill-deserved stigma upon the Examining Board; so once again I ask, "What's the use?"

UNDER THE BLACK FLAG

101 Bison—Three-Reel Drama

Of all the black-hearted wretches in history, I believe Henry Morgan takes the allegorical cake. For crime and all-around malignancy he makes the notorious Lucrezia Borgia, of poison fame, pale into insignificance. There is also a romance woven in among the strands of villainy. Morgan captures a Spanish ship and puts all to death, except a padre and a child who escape by a miracle and land at the Island of Caracas. Morgan gains the hatred of his mate, through striking him. It is this hatred that later proves his undoing.

Twenty years pass by, and Morgan has gained great power, being known as the Governor of Jamaica. The King, however, having heard of his piratical methods, sends an embassy to arrest him. He escapes and goes to an old ship, known as the Undertow, which is kept by Teach, the mate, whom he had struck, and who recognizes Morgan. Morgan and his men, with the help of Teach, capture the King's ship, where he again sets himself up as a pirate. He determines to take the town of Caracas. In the fight Juan and his sweetheart are captured. Juan bribes Teach to let him go, and after a long ride he brings help from a neighboring garrison. The pirates are captured and put to death, with the exception of Morgan, whom Teach captures and starves to death in a most cruel manner.

It is pictures of this class that a certain large proportion of the theatregoers demand, and when the theme is made historical, as well as bloody, the remainder of the audience are pleased. David M. Hartford plays the pirate.

Every Monday will find a new Edison comedy release, as that company has decided to make a comedy release regularly on that day.

The comedies already listed on this Monday schedule are: "A Short Life and a Merry One," "Bill's Career as Butler," "Hiram Green, Detective," and "The Hornet's Nest."

Two Spies

A Romance of the Balkan War—Gaumont Two-Reel Feature

DESPITE the fact that the recent war in the Balkans held the interest of the entire world, there are comparatively very few dramas produced using this as a basis. Our own Civil war has its hundreds of stories, which are told to admiring millions daily, and the same applies truthfully to the Revolution, Franco-Prussian, and even the old Roman wars.

Therefore this picture of Gaumont is more interesting. The plot cannot be called new, but it is action, from the first sub-title to the "Passed by the National Board of Censorship," and good, hair-raising action, the kind that makes some of the modern Wild West shows look like an Evangelical mass meeting.

As the title would indicate, there are two spies, one a Bulgarian, Boris, and the other a Turk, Nissiml. The story opens with their bidding farewell to their sweethearts and departing for their respective regiments.

The Turk is given orders to locate the Bulgars and ascertain their strength and to make drawings of their fortifications. At the same time Boris, the Bulgarian hero, receives orders to blow up the railroad so as to prevent ammunition reaching the Turks. He is successful, but is discovered by Nissiml. Both are wounded in the ensuing fight and Boris goes to the house of Nissiml's sweetheart. Mistaking her, in his delirium, for his own fiancee, he begs her to kiss him. Nissiml sees this and in despair gives himself up to the Bulgars and is shot as a spy. Boris dies in the girl's arms.

A good release.

ITALA COMPANY MOVES ITS OFFICES

The Candler Building, 220 West Forty-second street, New York, will henceforth be the address of the Itala Flim Company, who moved their offices from the Columbia Theatre Building last week. The Itala Film Company now occupy part of the suite on the tenth floor of the Candler Building formerly used by the Exclusive Supply Corporation. This office is directly opposite the All Star Feature Corporation's offices, an advantage to Harry R. Raver, who as director-general of the Itala and president of the All Star, found it inconvenient to have his interests geographically scattered.

Mr. Phil Gleichman, representing the World Special Films Corporation, has engaged Mr. B. H. Brient, local manager for the Mutual in Indianapolis, to take charge of their new offices.

SCREEN CLUB ELECTS OFFICERS

The Screen Club was organized in September, 1912, when King Baggot was chosen president; John Bunny, vice-president; Gilbert M. Anderson, second vice-president; and Arthur V. Johnson, third vice-president. Nearly all the prominent members of the profession, both in the manufacturing and acting ends, are members, including such well-known names as Siegmund Lubin, Carl Laemmle, Ad Kessel and Adolph Zukor.

King Baggot was re-elected to the presidency by unanimous consent, no one being found who would run against him. Joseph W. Farnham was elected vice-president; Hopp Hadley, secretary; William Haddock, recording secretary, and Jacob Gerhardt, treasurer. Governors elected were: Arthur Leslie, "Bill" Quirk, James Gordon and David D. Wall. The Screen Club has just moved into new quarters.

William F. Haddock, one of the best known directors in America, has been engaged by Augustus Thomas to assist him in the staging of "Soldiers of Fortune" as a "silent" drama for the All Star Feature Corporation. The services of Mr. Haddock were secured for the one production only.

The engagement of Mr. Haddock was rendered necessary because of the fact that Lawrence McGill, who regularly assists Mr. Thomas, will be detained in New York finishing up the work on "Checkers," while Mr. Thomas and Mr. Haddock, with a company headed by Dustin Farnum, will be at work in Cuba on "Soldiers of Fortune."

MASTERPIECE IN MOTION PHOTOGRAPHY

What has heretofore been considered the impossible in the motion picture trade was the release of films of events taken that day and exhibited that night.

The Commercial Motion Pictures Company, Inc., of 102 West 101st street, the owners of the sole and exclusive right to take motion pictures of the World's Series Baseball Games for the year 1913, granted to them by the National Commission, have entered into contracts with various exchanges and exhibitors throughout the United States to print, develop and deliver the films of the games the same night that the game is played.

The games concluded about 5 p. m., and in the City of New York in about twenty-one theatres full and complete reels of the game played that day were thrown upon the screen.

The contract for the exclusive right to exhibit these pictures during the week of the games was awarded by the Commercial Motion Picture Company to the Loew enterprises.

The factory of the Commercial Motion Pictures Company was kept a-going twenty-four hours, and will be kept a-going continuously until two days after completion of the series.

Mr. Roskam, when interviewed, stated that the demand for prints of this series has been unprecedented, evidencing the fact that throughout the entire United States, and in Australia and Cuba, fans are keeping a watchful eye on the games.

The ability to exhibit the film the same night of the game satisfied the long-felt want, and expressions of commendation and approval are being continually heard throughout the trade of the wonderful accomplishments of the Commercial Motion Pictures Company.

The above named company have various contracts with boards of trade and chambers of commerce in the largest cities in the United States, to take motion pictures of the interesting events and features in connection with such cities, evidencing the added field of employment of motion picture photography.

THE GIRL OF THE SUNNY SOUTH

The American Kineto Corporation has purchased the exclusive rights for the whole world for "The Girl of the Sunny South"—a four-reel feature film adapted from the play by Travers Vale and produced by the Pilot Film Corporation.

State right buyers who are interested should communicate with the American Kineto Corporation direct.

The New York State Convention

THE third annual convention of New York State Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of America will be held at the Hotel Rochester, Rochester, N. Y, on October 15th and 16th. Indications point to the biggest effort put forward in this direction so far.

The hotel is a magnificent structure with every modern convenience, and has been placed at the disposal of the visiting exhibitors. The main floor and the corridors will be filled with some of the prominent manufacturers' exhibits pertaining particularly to the interest of motion picture exhibitors. Prominent speakers will be on hand, including the Mayor of Rochester and several senators. Preparations have been completed for auto rides, banquets and a general line of entertainments in the city where the manufacture of photographic material is known the world over. It will be to the interest of every exhibitor, either non or active member, to come to Rochester, see what's doing and join the League.

The Photo Drama Company's Spectacle, Presented in America by George Kleine

BIG things done in a big way by big minds of a creative nature are what comprise history and tradition to-day as handed down to us as masterpieces of construction whether it be art, literature or any of the other forms that assume shape in this particular. So it is with cinematography. It is taking its place in the hall of fame to be recorded there in some of its integrals as a work that shall be considered a creation of the past which is worthy of the respect and admiration of future ages.

Such is "The Last Days of Pompeii," a masterful production built on a large scale that will edify, thrill, entertain and enthrall its viewers. The very essence of a bigness that is indescribable is evident throughout it. It takes hold of a bulky theme and wields it into a form that is graphic in the extreme and illustrious to its last particle. It molds out a story and a picture that leaves nothing undesired, marking an event in photoplaydom that has made its indelible mark for the future to marvel at and be guided by.

"Pompeii" is viewed with the expectation of seeing something fine, something extraordinary, and something that will linger in the memory. It even goes farther than this—it leaves one with an unutterable feeling of admiration that cannot be described. You realize that you have seen something that has surpassed your expectations—something that will linger in your memory as one of the big things that it has been your pleasure in life to behold. Your feelings overcome your power of speech, you wish that it were possible to record them in a similar way the picture is recorded you have viewed, and then cast this picture on the screen and say, "That is how it impressed me."

Like "Quo Vadis," its predecessor, it is an exceptional picture. Like it also it is exceptional because it is different than "Quo Vadis." It is different than any other picture ever cast on the screen because of its broad scope and wide appeal. A photoplay of the magnitude of this production cannot be faulty, as its appeal to the human interest is so powerful that the mind travels with the flashing visions, unconscious of its surroundings, and only attracted by the concentrated appeal of the marvel that it beholds.

It is faultless also because the mind becomes infatuated with the subject and the eye, obeying the command of its master, sees only the virtues, not even making a subconscious note of an irregularity, if there be any. We went to criticise, but our pencil lay idle and forgotten in the wonder of the unwinding scenes before us. It is truly a masterly production, done by a big mind on a massive scale. It is a photoplay marvel we wish the whole world could see.

Each and every scene is thoroughly representative of the period of the action of the picture. An elaborateness and a finish is given them that is an assurance of their authenticity. One gets views of the streets, of the pillared houses, of the baths and most impressive of the vast coliseum, with its thousands upon thousands of people gathered to watch the gladiators and the lions feast upon their human prey. An awe-inspiring spectacle is when the mount of Vesuvius throws out its molten lava and smoke, illuminating the clouded heavens with its scorching flames, casting a light that strikes terror to the very core of the heart. Throwing their incidental shadows over this are the huge boulders, which are cast from the mouth of the volcano, spreading death and distress in their course, creating havoc wherever they fall and withering to ashes the many homes and palaces of the fated city. Then one sees the panic, consternation and pandemonium that reigns. People running hither and yon, crossing and recrossing their paths seeking safety where there is none. Loved ones being separated, children weeping, mothers pining and fathers raving, and all to be consumed by this agent of fate that is stretching out its fiery arms reaping lives by the score. This scene perhaps is the most wonderful of the entire production. But that which impresses one as the most beautiful and artistic is a view of the entire city from the distant shores, as Vesuvius, majestically looming high above the surrounding peaks, belches forth its missiles of death, and a darkness covering the surroundings that is evidence of an awful catastrophe that is sending human souls into the beyond.

SCENE FROM "THE LAST DAYS OF POMPEII"

SCENE FROM "THE LAST DAYS OF POMPEII"

These scenes are not alone in their impressiveness, the picture abounds in them, showing a careful study of the architecture of that period and of the mode of living.

The acting is superb throughout. Capable players interpret these ancient characters in a convincing manner. The character of Glaucus, a wealthy Athenian nobleman, as interpreted by Signor Ubaldo Stefani, portrays a true characterization. Signor Stefani acts his part with an ease and grace that shows a thorough knowledge of his art. Signora Eugenia Tettoni, as Ione, a beautiful Greek maiden, sweetheart to Glaucus, is a lady of personality that shows itself in her acting, which is splendidly done. Arbaces, an Egyptian high priest of the Temple of Isis, is played by Signor Antonio Trisanti. He plays the part of a villain and hypocrite, a role that is very seldom appreciated. But he plays it so well that he is due for considerable praise. Apaecides, brother of Ione, pupil to Arbaces, is played by Signor Cesare Gani Carini. While this role does not call for much acting, the little it does require is done well by Signor Carini. The most difficult role and the one that is bound to bring forth much praise for its fair interpreter is that of Nydia, a blind Thessalian flower-girl, as presented by Signora Fernanda Negri-Pouget. Never for a moment does this young lady forget that she is afflicted with blindness. Her presentation of the role also demonstrates that she must have given the actions and the methods of the blind a thorough study before attempting the part before the camera. One thoroughly realizes the utter darkness that afflicts her as she gropes her way, slowly progressing where others walk with a certainty that only emphasizes the more her affliction. And in the darkness of the terrible day, when havoc and terror reign, she guides those who can see through this hellish disaster to safety.

The costuming is rich, beautiful and elaborate. It is complete to the last detail. Also noteworthy are the titles. They are well worded, nicely selected and properly placed.

This film was made by the Ambrosio Company at Pompeii, Italy, from the novel by Lord Bulwer-Lytton, and the scenes of the drama take place about 79 A. D.

SCENE FROM "THE LAST DAYS OF POMPEII"

Glaucus, a handsome and wealthy Athenian nobleman, living in the city of Pompeii, is the sweetheart of Ione, a Grecian girl of great beauty. Apaecides, Ione's brother, is a young man of religious tendencies and the pupil of Arbaces, a crafty, lewd and unscrupulous Egyptian high priest of the Temple of Isis. An intense but unworthy love for Ione has long been nourished by Arbaces. He despises his handsome rival, Glaucus, and plots his downfall. Cursed with blindness, Nydia, a sweet-minded Thessalian flower-girl, is madly in love with Glaucus, whom she has never seen, but whose kindly voice and ever-ready purse have many times lightened the hand of her cruel mistress, Stratonice, wife of Burbo, an innkeeper.

Accompanied by Sallust, his friend, Glaucus one evening goes to the tavern of Burbo to place bets on the coming gladiatorial contests. After seeing the blind girl frightfully whipped by Stratonice, he purchases her from Burbo and takes her to his home.

Ione is the recipient of a letter from Arbaces, suggesting that she come and visit him, and intimating that his magic can show her the falsity of Glaucus. She accepts the invitation and the Egyptian conjures up a vision in which Ione sees Glaucus making love to other women. Overcome by emotion, Arbaces embraces her. An instant later he is felled by the heavy hand of Apaecides. Ione then flees to the home of Glaucus, where Nydia, her heart torn with jealousy, ministers to the terror-stricken girl. In the meantime, his faith shattered, Apaecides prepares to denounce Arbaces and renounce the creed of Isis.

Nydia the following morning goes to the Temple of Isis to seek solace for her aching heart. There she meets Arbaces and confides her love to him. The crafty Egyptian promises to secure from the witch of Vesuvius a love potion, which, if administered to Glaucus, should make him love Nydia forever. Glaucus and Ione, in the meanwhile, while strolling on the mountainside, are caught by the rain and seek refuge in the witch's cave. The curse of the sorceress is brought down on Glaucus by killing her sacred

By William Lord Wright

To Qualify for Edison

THERE is no use handing posies to the Edison output. There isn't a script writer in the land who doesn't become "chesty" when he receives a check from the Edison concern. The Edison Film Company, in Moving Pictureland, is what Harper's or Scribner's is in Magazineville—the height of ambition to the literary worker. Horace G. Plimpton, manager of negative production, kinetograph department, Edison Film Company, has, in no small measure, contributed to making Edison films what they are. Keen, discriminating and intelligent, he is certainly without a peer in his line of work. Recently we requested Mr. Plimpton to answer a few questions which we deem interesting to script writers. We asked him if there were noticeable improvement in contributions the past year; what form was desired in preparing multiple reel scripts; his opinion on the question as to whether in the near future the writer would not be permitted more latitude in the technical form of script, etc.

Mr. Plimpton is as anxious as we are to aid deserving authors and he readily replied as follows:

"There is a noticeable improvement in the quality of scenarios submitted. Not so much because of the 'free lances,' but because people of more ability are going into the business. There are vast numbers of impossible scenarios still submitted and I presume this condition will always continue, but there is a noticeable increase in the number of plots by people who are qualified to write scenarios and in this way the average quality is improving.

"The Edison studio is open for strong two-reel subjects. I can suggest no difference in preparation of these from single reels. The main thing is the plot. We not only favor crediting authors on screen and poster, but have done so for a long time. This has been an Edison policy for about two years, I think, and I believe we were the first to do it. As scenario writing becomes more of an art, I imagine the authors will go more into detail from an understanding of the screen possibilities.

"It is certainly most essential that the producing man should realize what the scenario writer is driving at. I have known cases where a really good plot was not done justice to because the author had not made his central idea perfectly clear. As to your question of 'directors directing and editors editing,' I take it that you mean to suggest there should be some co-operation between the author and the producer. This would be an ideal condition and is, in fact, sometimes done by the company; that is to say, we have had scenario writers who were near at hand and who wrote extensively for us, who have discussed the plots beforehand with the producing men to the advantage of the picture.

"Of course, this depends a great deal upon the personality of the writer and the producer, and in most cases is not feasible owing to the distance. Naturally, upon buying a plot, we want to make the best we can of it in our own judgment, and we do not hesitate to change it either much or little, as we think best. Were the author at hand it is quite possible that a discussion with him might be of mutual benefit."

It is encouraging that Mr. Plimpton finds a noticeable improvement in quality of scripts submitted the past year, and perhaps this will silence the more pessimistic critics. It is a pity that author and producer cannot more frequently consult, either by mail, or personally. Recently an author's script was turned down after long consideration. The director had misgivings. That author made a trip to the studio, explained his ideas as to the production of the story to the director, who in this case was fortunately open to argument.

The author's detailed ideas as to artistic touches, which could not be embodied in the present form of script with its 300-word synopsis, resulted in the filming of a picture play that promises to make 'em all sit up and take notice.

The Ohio Censors

It may be wise for the photoplaywright to remember that he now must write to please two censorship boards instead of one. M. A. Neff, president of the Exhibitors' League of America, lives in Cincinnati, O. He was instrumental, during the last session of the Ohio Legislature, in having passed a law requiring a state board to censor motion pictures. The board was recently appointed, and consists of Mrs. Maude Murray Miller, a welfare worker and a former member of the Springfield News staff, a newspaper owned by the governor; J. W. Maddox, of Columbus, a Republican and former theatrical man,

"FATHER JOHN, A RAG-PICKER OF PARIS"
World Special Films Corporation.

and H. E. Vestal, of Ada, a Democrat, and an exhibitor of motion pictures. Here are some of the things that will come under the ban of the Ohio Censorship Board, according to recent announcement:

Murder, suicide, harrowing deathbed scenes, violent death in all forms.

Intoxication, use of liquor, gambling.

Use of firearms for other than show purposes unless in battle scenes.

Indecent or suggestive situations or actions, love scenes that tend to disgust and cruelty to animals.

Mrs. Miller is quoted as stating: "A cowboy can carry a revolver at his hip, but we have decided that he must not shoot anyone. In fact, we will bar discharges of firearms except in scenes depicting battles. Even in battle, though, a soldier must be careful how he dies. If he simply topples over, he will be passed. But if he takes up time by struggling and writhing about in his last moments, off the film he must go. We must look at a film with the eyes of a child, and in eliminating scenes we must cut out all that would have other than a good effect on children." The Cleveland Local of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League has passed resolutions calling on film companies to test the constitutionality of the Ohio law. In the meantime, it will be well for photoplaywrights to work with an eye to the requirements of the Ohio law, for the manufacturers, from a business standpoint, will endeavor to try and observe the requirements of this new Board of Censors.

On the Other Foot

In advice to photoplaywrights, Marc E. Jones, in the Photoplay Magazine, writes the following: If you must use a clip, do not use one that permanently clips the sheets together, as most editors read by taking each sheet off as they read and placing it on the bottom, and practically all the professional writers send the scripts out unclipped.

Then along comes to us a plaint from a very successful script writer, Wm. A. Corey: "Will you kindly use whatever influence you have with our masters, the editors, to correct the pernicious habit a few of them have of fastening the leaves of rejected manuscripts with paper clips? Every clip thus used leaves a deep crease, and is a sure earmark of rejection that goes with the script to the end of its travels. One editor recently was so extremely 'careful' of a manuscript of mine that he used two clips, one to fasten the leaves together and another to hold in place the rejection slip. This particular editor needs somebody to put the 'punch' in him. Will you do it? I don't dare, for his company recently bought a play of me." We know this particular studio, and must say "tut tut," three times, to the offending reader in question, for it is a script reader who persists in this work.

This One Pleases Us

Here is a little article written by Karl von Kraft for The Photoplay Author. We think it worthy of reprinting:

"There is a class of photoplaywrights who think that the only strong plays are those which smell to heaven. They believe that the only useful function of a censor is to swing. But you and I, whose photoplays need not be fumigated, naturally take a different attitude toward the censor and his work—we are more interested in meeting our own ideals than in escaping the condemnation of those argus-eyed authorities, the members of the 'boards'; consequently, when we consider their demands we do not 'view them with alarm.' There was an old farmer once who delighted in his ability to evade the board of health—that was the height of his achievement. He is dead now—the germs got him, on a day when the board of health didn't. Really, if a man hasn't sufficient sense of what is wholesome for young people to see, how can a set of rules help him? Of course, all this is not to argue that censorship is needless, for we know better; but it is to urge upon every photoplaywright to ask himself four questions about each script he writes or plans to write: 1. If the play deals with wrongdoing, will the spectators be taught, even indirectly, to admire the wrong act? 2. If mercy toward wrongdoing is shown—as it may well be in many circumstances—does the exhibition of mercy tend to make the spectators think lightly of the effects of crime? 3. Is the intentional wrongdoer made to suffer a just retribution before he is restored to the favor of honest men? 4. Is the final effect of the play uplifting, or does it leave the spectator with a twisted view of right and wrong? The great novels, the great poems, and the great plays of all ages have uniformly been written by men and women whose teachings through their art have been in harmony with the universal conceptions of what is truly good and what is really bad. To produce works of this character, they did not go to official or non-official critics for their standards, but they studied what I may call the public conscience, which in a thousand ways comes sooner or later to the judgment seat and passes upon all questions of right and wrong. Be sure that the tone—the general moral tendency and final effect—of your photoplay is in harmony with this great universal feeling of right, truth, decency and justice, and you will have become your own safe and sane censor."

Kinemacolor Treatment

Writes an Oakland, Cal., author: "Kinemacolor recently made me an offer of $10 for the idea of a picture-play, saying that the idea was all they could use. They sent another one back with the suggestion that it be rewritten and again submitted, which I did, thanking them for the suggestion." Thanks were coming to Kinemacolor and you did the correct thing in expressing appreciation. Ten dollars is fair pay for an idea, also. If this author had developed his idea properly he would have received three times $10.

Schools and Schools

Mr. Arthur Leeds in the August number of The Photoplay Author, published at Springfield, Mass., discourses upon "Teaching Photoplay Writing by Correspondence." He correctly quotes us as being antagonistic to fake correspondence schools for pictureplay writers, but unlike certain others conducting correspondence courses, he concedes that the trade journal editors have had much material on which to base their arguments.

* * *

Mr. Leeds approaches the question in a dignified and able manner, devoid of personality or innuendo. He says regarding the Home Correspondence Course: "I feel that I am working on honor; that I must do my part; and added to this is the knowledge that to do otherwise than give my very best and most careful attention to my pupils, leaving nothing undone which will tend to help them toward success in the work they are taking up, would deservedly bring me the reproaches and criticism of every decent-minded and conscientious editor and writer." Arguing consistently that pictureplay writing can be taught by mail, Mr. Leeds continues: "It is not the object of this course to implant talent, and its teacher positively will not lead any pupil to suppose the presence of talent when it is obviously absent. It does successfully develop, guide and instruct the gifted mind. What can be learned can be taught. The average teacher of pictureplay writing by correspondence is satisfied so long as the pupil enrolls, pays his tuition fee regularly and completes his course. What becomes of him afterward is a matter of no importance to his late guide, counselor and friend. It is my aim and intention to prove to Messrs. McCloskey, Sargent, Wright, Woods and every other honest, fair-minded editor or critic that at least one correspondence school can 'deliver the goods.'"

VILMA WHITMAN

It has not been so much the school idea in itself that we have been fighting as the grafting ignoramuses who, by misleading advertising and carboned lesson sheets of unvarying form, have separated the unfortunate writer from his hard-earned money. We have never yet scored a school until we had an opportunity to look over the "courses of lessons." With the exception of the Home Correspondence School course, we have found little in any of the others worth the money asked. Many of them contain drivel that must be unlearned by painful experience before the "graduate" can hope to market his product. We can honorably recommend the Home Correspondence School course to those who feel they must take this sort of schooling. The advertising campaign of this Home Correspondence School course is conservative and consistent. Professor Esenwein's course of short story writing is standard. In fact, the character of the instructors, the material furnished students, and the general backing and atmosphere in connection with this course appeal to us. We can recommend the instruction and we are saying a great deal when we commend any school.

Director Allen Curtis, of the Universal, is producing a series of "Jake and Mike" pictures, with Max Asher as Jake and Harry McCoy as Mike. They are to be released under the "Joker" brand, and are bound to find favor. They are broadly burlesque and in a class of their own. Jake and Mike are at present acting in "To the Rescue," in which photoplay they set to work to get a girl from a life-saver, and after many adventures are shown up as they deserve to be. The play is by Harry Wulze.

Mystery of the Silver Skull

Vitagraph Two-Reel Feature (Oct. 4)

The plot of this story is new, contrary to the sage advice of philosophers that there is nothing new under the sun. In motion pictures that saying is daily getting more and more believable, and it is therefore a relief to see something that is possessed of one feature that has not already been worked to death. Billy Steele comes to New York to dispose of some of his property in South America. While completing the arrangements with Lawlor, a dyed-in-the-wool crook, he discovers a woman at the latter's safe. She begs for her liberty and he, seeing that there is something more in her than a mere thief, lets her go. As they turn to leave the room he discovers a small silver skull on the floor and takes it home to his yacht. O'Keefe, the mate, is a man of a secret past, whom Billy had never understood.

Billy finds the address of Josephine, the mysterious thief, and calls on her, when he hears that she is to wed Lawlor, the man he caught her trying to rob. She receives him, and at his institution tells a part of her story sufficient for Billy to appreciate that she needs his help. Her father has been unjustly accused of killing a man years before while in a poker game with Lawlor, and in order to keep Lawlor silent he has to give in to his demands. Thus the engagement of Josephine to Lawlor.

In the meantime O'Keefe has turned up at the house at a critical moment, having found the silver skull, and accuses Lawlor of the murder. It then comes out that the skull had played a prominent part in the murder, having been worn by the murderer, and when the mate saw it aboard the yacht, he gives out the truth, after having kept silent for many years, being paid by Lawlor to do so. Josephine and Billy are married and go to South America on their honeymoon.

Suggestions Invited, Questions Cheerfully Answered

Address: Music Department, The Motion Picture News

THE exhibitor is very inconsistent. He wants a daily change of program, with no repeaters; he will even refuse a film already shown in his town, but how about music? Music to him is of no consideration, as long as his musicians can make some noise, and he does not care if the noise is the same each day of the week. The musicians can repeat over and again the same selections played at other theatres. They can play the same selections day after day, week after week, month after month, and even several times during the same show. In other words, they have the same march for all pictures where such music is desired, the same plaintive selection for a death scene, the same hurry-up music, etc.

If the exhibitor is indifferent to this perpetual repetition of the same tunes, the patrons are very much bored, and their only relief is to go to different theatres.

The Herald Square Theatre has the reputation of having a very good orchestra, and the reputation is well earned, as too often the music carries away the audience without the least respect for the picture.

The Herald Square Theatre has a delicious orchestra for an open-air concert or a summer park, where much flaring of brass instruments and bass drums is necessary to overcome the street noise. As to motion picture music, I do not believe that the orchestra of the Herald Square Theatre is just the thing.

On Wednesday, October 1st, during the film of Essanay, "A Ray of God's Sunshine," the orchestra played such a lively overture, in the Wagner style, that the audience, forgetting the poor little girl on her bed of suffering with the mother in agony at the thought of the father spending in a saloon the dollar given him so kindly by the doctor to buy the necessary medicine, applauded the music. It was a real Wagner selection, starting with a terrible crash of the cymbals, of the drums and of all the brass instruments.

Yes, the audience forgot all the decency, and even the sight of the sickbed did not temper the admiration of certain persons for such an orchestra. A proof that such music distracts the attention from the screen.

Certain persons seem to go to a motion picture show not to look at pictures but to listen to music. A mighty poor taste, as generally no new music is heard and too many selections are repeated the same day.

The lovers of Wagner music, after the first part of the film, gradually realized their applause was out of place and general attention was then drifted from the music to the screen. At nearly the end of the film, an enthusiast of noisy music tried to applaud, but when he found no response he did not insist but flushed and seemed ill at ease for having tried to call an encore.

I am not the only one to pass such a remark, as a gentleman called to see me to express his indignation and to ask me if there was not a way to infuse a little common sense in either the manager or the orchestra leader.

It seems to be Wagner week at the Herald Square theatre, as every day the cymbals, drums and brass instruments make enough noise to drive anyone crazy. I cannot blame the manager as he is a very wise and well-intentioned gentleman, and fearing that his audience could be annoyed by either the Salvation Army or the political speakers holding meetings every evening at the corner of Broadway and Thirty-fifth street, he has ordered his orchestra to make an abuse of drums, cymbals and brass instruments, to drown the noise from the street.

At the same theatre and during the same evening, the scientific film of the Pathe Freres, "Oxygen," was shown. It was a most remarkable series of experiments, not only very interesting but educative. A perfect silence on the part of the orchestra would have been more preferable than the noisy music, especially during the experiments with the mouse, to show to the public that we cannot exist without oxygen.

I may not understand the good-hearted dispositions of Mr. Drummer, who when he saw the poor mouse turn over on its back in the jar, for lack of oxygen, brought down his arm with all its might on his cymbals and his foot on the pedal of the bass drum, to wake up the poor mouse and try to bring the little animal back to life. Too bad, but the efforts of the drummer and of his faithful companions, the brass instruments, did not operate the desired miracle and the mouse would have died if the scientist had not been merciful enough to open the jar and introduce some exygen.

The tail of the Pathe production was scenic views of "Along the Padas River," and there was nothing in the film to warrant a noisy music. In fact, a softer music would have been more in harmony with this beautiful scenery.

It is always the same question. The exhibitor allows himself to be guided by a few noisy patrons and ignores the sentiments of the majority.

There is no doubt that the manager of the Herald Square theatre praised himself on having secured such a good Wagner orchestra when he heard one hundred patrons applaud the music during the dramatic film of the Essanay Company, and said to himself: "What the public wants." Now, if the manager had taken the trouble to take a seat in the audience and to listen to some of the comments, or study the faces of the other spectators, he would have found that for one hundred who had applauded at least five hundred patrons were much dissatisfied.

Is a motion picture theatre a concert hall or an exhibition of pictures? It must be one or the other, as both cannot harmonize. It is very annoying when your mind is concentrated on a picture, to have your neighbor, with his eyes riveted on the ceiling as if dreaming, whistling the tune played by the orchestra or beating the time. A motion picture show cannot be a music hall, as, if the picture is played as it should be, it is impossible to execute a complete symphony from beginning to end.

ERNEMANN PROJECTORS ON THIS MARKET

The firm of Heinrich Ernemann, of Dresden, Germany, the largest manufacturers of projection machines and cameras in that country, have opened a branch office for the United States and Canada in New York under the management of Messrs. Hoffman and Bader. The name of the New York branch is the Ernemann Photo Kino Works, of 114 and 116 Fifth avenue. The company will put its new projector, the "Imperator," on this market very shortly. The Ernemann reputation should secure for this projector the attention of all motion picture exhibitors. It is popular, we read, in Europe. Now that the tariff has been reduced, it stands a chance of competing with productions on this side of the Atlantic.

Winifred Kingston, who has been playing the lead in the Cort-Morosco production of "The Elixir of Youth," has been engaged by the All-Star Feature Corporation to play the role of Madame Alvarez in their forthcoming production of "The Soldiers of Fortune."

"Broncho Billy" Gets Square

Essanay

WITH all the multiple reels that have been turned out within the past two years, it seems almost impossible that there is a producer, or even an acting company, that has not taken part in at least a two-reel subject. We find this to be the case, however, in this instance with 'Broncho Billy," whose series of pictures under the Essanay brand have a wide reputation. "Broncho Billy Gets Square" is the very first multiple reel subject turned out by the Western company of the Essanay Film Mfg. Co. It, perhaps, is a great novelty because of this. Like the other Essanay "Broncho Billy" pictures, we find G. M. Anderson playing the good Samaritan to a brother in love. He also gets his revenge and rights a wrong done an Indian maiden who found favor in his eyes in the forgotten past. Appropriate settings, to give the picture a Western atmosphere, and structures correct in architectural design as well as well-chosen outdoor scenery complete the scenic effect of this photoplay.

A price has been put on the heads of both "Broncho Billy" and Dave Kirkland, outlaws, by the State, also freedom to either one of the two who would turn state's evidence. The two have been brothers in crime for a long time, and when the handbill announcing the reward and offer of freedom is read by "Broncho Billy," he dismisses it with a smile.

In one of their rides they come across a pretty Indian maiden carrying water from a stream to her tepee. When Dave offers his assistance she indicates that "Broncho Billy" has found favor in her eye, whom she permits to assist her. Dave, who has always considered himself a ladies' man, becomes somewhat peeved at this incident, and the more he broods over it the more enraged he becomes and determines to have revenge on "Broncho Billy."

The first opportunity that presents itself he advises the sheriff where his pal can be found. The sheriff compels Dave to accompany him and the posse to the cabin occupied by the two outlaws. "Broncho Billy" hears their approach and barricades all the doors and windows, using one from which to direct his defence. He fights vigorously and bravely and is only outwitted when his cabin is set afire and is overcome by smore. When placed in jail he learns of the part Dave played in his capture and determines to be revenged for the cowardly deed, sending Dave a note which read, "Every dog has his day."

"Broncho" has served fifteen years, growing old and gray, losing his individuality behind the grim walls of the prison atoning for his crimes. After leaving the prison walls behind him, he sets out on the mission he swore to fifteen years ago—to get square with Dave Kirkland. After days of travel he reaches the Indian village, where he finds White Feather, the Indian maiden, now a gray-haired, broken-down old woman. She relates to him how Dave came to her with the story of "Broncho Billy's" unfaithfulness, and that he had gone to a far distant part of the country to avoid her, and how Dave became her squaw-man and lately abandoned her, leaving the raising of two children to her care. "Billy" promises to find her husband if she will accompany him in his quest.

Dave in the meantime has become an itinerant gambler. His rovings bring him to the little town of Sennet, where he ensnares the greater portion of the male populace into a game with him with the result that he secures most of their money. An especially heavy loser is Harry Todd, the postmaster and proprietor of the general store in the town, who is compelled to sign a statement deeding over his property to Kirkland if his note is not paid within thirty days from date.

Todd has a lovely young daughter who is engaged to Ned Lyle, a ranch owner. Kirkland, since meeting Grace, has been paying a good deal of attention to her. He proposes marriage to her but is refused. He then approaches her father with the threat of foreclosing on his note if he does not persuade his daughter to become his bride. In order to save her father, Grace consents. A minister is secured to perform the ceremony and is about to pronounce the words of marriage when "Broncho Billy" arrives with White Feather and several Indians from her tribe. White Feather, in the presence of those assembled, produces evidence of her marriage to Dave, who is returned to the village at the points of guns by the Indians. "Broncho Billy" then sends for Ned, who takes advantage of the presence of the minister and is married to Grace.

The Fall of Constantinople

Gaumont

IT is safe to say that the history of the world practically dates from the capture and holding of Constantinople by the infidels and the ousting of the Christians. There are certain divisions of the pages of history and this is one, medieval history dating from this period.

This city, the key to the Bosphorus, was at that time, i. e., 1453, held by Constantine XIII, the last Christian emperor. The Sultan Mohammed II commenced the siege of the city on April 6th of that year, commencing with the usual religious ceremony. The whole picture, with the religious scenes taken out, would hardly have been worth consideration, but with the realistic ceremonies it is a masterpiece. The mob scenes throughout are beautiful, and the colors wonderful. The last night in Byzantium, where the women are praying in the Church of St. Sophia, while the men are on the walls outside, fighting to keep the Moslem out, is especially mentionable. The city is finally captured, and Constantine, as a common soldier, dies fighting. He is afterwards beheaded in a gruesome manner, and his head is paraded in the streets below. The carrying off by the Turkish troops of the women who had been converted into Christians was marvelous, and the writer has never seen such wonderful placing of colors. Throughout the effect is most dramatic, with the exception of a soldier, who is supposedly dead, but who insists on talking and smiling. In this one place the effect is spoiled. The captured ladies are right in modern style as far as nudity of costume is concerned, although it is all tasteful, and there is nothing at all that would offend the sensibilities of the most critical audience.

MUTUAL TO DO GENERAL PUBLICITY ADVERTISING

Since the formation of the Mutual there has been talk of advertising the program controlled by that certain body in a national way; to use the various national mediums and other means employed by the large advertisers of this country to draw the attention of the public to their product.

The Mutual Film Corporation comes forth, not with big talk of a million-dollar campaign, but with an idea that sounds reasonable and well thought out. The ultimate aim of this campaign they are planning will be national; for the time being, however, it will be confined to Chicago, then spread throughout Illinois, and gradually spread all ways from this central point until the whole of the United States is covered. It has not been definitely announced what mediums of publicity will be used in this advertising, but it is intimated that street cars, painted display signboards and the daily papers will come in for their share of this advertising. Mr. Flaherty, former manager of a local Mutual exchange, will conduct this campaign through the Nicholas Finn advertising agency. One method it is thought they will employ is to call attention to the various theatres in a certain locality using the Mutual program by means of signboards.

In making this step, the Mutual Film Corporation is taking the initiative in an advanced movement that has long been expected. They are demonstrating the courage of their convictions and advancing the art and business of motion pictures.

Advertising the Picture

THE TENDENCY FOR LONG FILMS

ARE the long films good for the show business in general, or are they apt to jeopardize the future of the industry.

Such is the question of to-day.

If we have to go by the supposed success of our present four, five and six-reel features, the long films should be money-makers for the manufacturers, renters and exhibitors. For the persons studying carefully the attitude of the public and who do not allow themselves to be influenced by what is, after all, a mere advertising scheme to draw the patronage on the quantity instead of the quality, they can see a great danger looming up in the future. In other words, they fear that the overdoing of the motion picture industry will mean its ultimate ruin.

By his cupidity to show too long programs, the exhibitor does not only jeopardize his own interests, but the interests of all concerned in the manufacture and exhibiting of films. He disgusts and tires the public, he overtaxes the scenario writers and the manufacturers, and is the direct cause of so many poor pictures, produced in a great hurry without the proper care.

There is a limit in everything; we cannot go against nature. The gardener who forces his plants to bloom for the Easter season is sapping the life out of them. The farmer who tries to force his hens to lay more frequently merely forces them to lay in a few weeks the eggs that they should lay in months. While he may gain a quicker supply of fresh eggs, he does not increase the laying capacity of the hen, but he shortens her useful life.

While we are in a great age of progress, it is impossible to find enough scenario writers with enough bright, new and original plots to produce over one hundred films per week, and by trying to force them, we merely compel them to copy each other.

A long film does not please the taste of the public because it makes a too long show, so much that if a feature film was a mere question of so many reels, it would produce weariness and cause a positive decline in the gate receipts. A feature film pleases only when it is of quality and has enough action to sustain the attention of the audience.

Take some of the great features of recent dates, "Les Miserables" and "Quo Vadis," for instance. Do you think that they would have lost any of their value if they had lost a few reels? No. The wonderful dramatic composition of one and the splendid settings of the other would not lose any of their quality if somewhat reduced in length, but, on the contrary, could be improved.

Just at the present time, the public does not seem to object to long films, as it is the general tendency on the part of the patrons to want all they can get for their money.

As we know from long experience that abuse is the road to ruin, there is no doubt that while a few greedy persons are willing to stand a show of three hours, they will gradually get tired and disgusted. We must not cater to the hoggist only, we must take care of the ones who are more moderate and at the same time more regular patrons.

If I was not afraid to take up too much space, I could give a long list of theatres showing extra programs and another long list of patrons who do not remain for the whole show, as they claim that while they enjoy a three-reel show, they lose all interest in the picture when the program goes beyond this limit of three reels.

While we have perfected the projecting machines, the lamp houses, the perforation of the films, it is impossible to have what could be called a constant, steady picture without more or less flickers. No matter how imperceptible can be the flicker, the irregulations in the perforation or the defects in the carbons, this flicker, although reduced to its minimum, is hurting the best eyesight when allowed to go on for hours without any intermission.

Good advice amounts to nothing and cannot stop the petty jealousy of the exhibitors. They are in the game to put their neighbors out of business, and they are going to stop at nothing, unless they are stopped by the authorities—and this will be the outcome, as the Board of Health will get busy, and for the sake of the public eyesight will regulate the length of the shows.

If the exhibitors would show their pictures at a normal speed, the danger would not be so great, but as the show hours are limited, especially in the suburbs and small towns, where they can show from 7.30 to 10 p. m. only, the exhibitors have to speed up the machine if they want to show a feature film of from nine to twelve reels during the two and a half hours of the evening.

It is then advertising the picture wrongly by offering too long programs, and I sincerely believe that if a feature film of three or four reels was advertised with a single poster, without mentioning the number of reels, the results would be more satisfactory.

Last Winter in Montgomery, Ala., a two-reel feature was enough to decrease the receipts, and as soon as a three-reel poster was displayed in front of the theatre, the manager would say: "This will be a bad day," and generally it was so.

The southern objection for long films was that the stories were dragging too much, had not enough action and too many feet of films were wasted to show what is commonly called face expressions.

Another objection, which is well founded, is the extra long sub-titles necessary to explain the rather complex stories of the average feature films.

ECLAIR HOUSE
London branch of Eclair Film Company.

All these objections from our friends of the South are not only justified, but they have not escaped the attention of the North, and, while the feature films are holding the boards, there is nevertheless a powerful under-current. We have some very good feature films deserving of the name of FEATURE, but, on the other hand, we have too many rank imitations, and to-day the manufacturer does not seem to care to produce split or one-reel subjects, but he stretches and pads any kind of scenario into a numberless-reel supposed feature.

For this reason the market is overloaded with very poor feature films, and as the lovers of motion pictures are getting tired of these worthless productions, they even refuse to bite when a real good feature is shown. To tell the truth, the exhibitor does not try to prove in his advertisements that this real feature film is out of the ordinary, but to follow his vulgar ways of advertisements, he uses to advertise the good features large, ugly and sensational posters of the style of the worthless features.

If I was to show the genuine "Quo Vadis" film, I would discard all posters, but, on the other hand, I would decorate my lobby to give it an antique Roman appearance, I would have the doorman or other men in the lobby dressed in old Roman style, with perhaps an old Roman chariot in front of the ticket office. The only advertising would be in the shape of a couple of fine hand-painted card signs, neatly framed. I cannot give a sketch of my idea, as the decoration would have to fit the lobby harmonize with the building and be in keeping with the pocketbook of the manager. Twenty-five or fifty dollars spent in such decorations would bring more business than fifty posters, and would create the impression that the production is of enough importance to warrant such an expense.

The wise exhibitor, the one making real good money, does not fall a prey to the feature agents. He knows that his patrons do not go to a motion picture show to be tired out with a long, overstretched film, but go to have a good time, an hour of rest. They call for much comedies, and, as to dramas, they want something with much action.

In referring to the South, I can state that from July 25 to December 31, 1912, the feature men met a flat Waterloo in Montgomery, Ala., as the three theatres devoted to the white population, the Orpheum, the Plaza and the Empress, did not give up their regular programs to show outside features. They were as much solicited as the theatres of other towns, but they could not see the feature film proposition as a profitable investment.

This question of long programs and of long productions is not only discussed in the United States, but is at the present time the general topic of Europe. The foreign papers are devoting much attention to the question; they are giving a sound warning. In our next issue I will be pleased to give the views of Le Courrier Cinematographique of Paris, in an article entitled "Put on the Brakes, S. V. P." Yes, it is time to put on the brakes, or the industry will slide down the road of ruin at a too great speed.

In the Days of Trajan

American

THE American Film Mfg. Co. will release this two-part picture on October 20th. It is one of the series of costume pictures that this company is putting out. The wardrobe employed is of an obvious richness that does this company credit. Also it has been staged in an elaborate manner that gives us views of splendid settings of the period depicted. The leading roles in this picture are interpreted by George Periolat as Trajanus, Caroline Cooke as Valeria, Vivian Rich as Princess Octavia, J. Warren Kerrigan as Decebalus, Louise Lester as Queen of Dacia; Charlotte Burton as Thais, and Jack Richardson as Junius Publius.

The action of the picture is set for the year 100 A.D., when Trajanus was Emperor of Rome. The picture opens showing Empress Valeria on her litter being carried to the bath attended by the ladies of the court. The Emperor has prepared a "Triumph," as the ceremony was known in those days, and the victims were marched in Rome to the throne. Decebalus, Prince of Dacia, is among them, accompanied by his mother, the Queen of Dacia. The Prince is promised his freedom by the Emperor if he will swear allegiance to Rome. The Queen, however, replies for him saying: "In Dacia we are royal and shall not be vassals of Rome." Angered at this, the Emperor sends them to the dungeons of the Circus Maximus to await their fate in the arena. The Emperor's daughter, Octavia, who is present at the Triumph, shows her admiration for the princely bearing of Decebalus and her sorrow at his sentence.

Everything is prepared in the arena, the Emperor is in the imperial box, and all is ready for the conflict of the gladiators. The prisoners are brought forth to the arena where their shattered and bleeding bodies are thrown upon the ground to die.

Decebalus is compelled to go into the conflict with a brother Dacian, with whom he plots the death of the Emperor. They fight and the Dacian is thrown to the ground in the battle. While the throng is rejoicing in a seeming victory, the two combatants throw off their masks and vault into the imperial box. The hand of Decebalus, however, is stayed by the princess. He recognizes her and is easily made prisoner by the centurions in attendance.

Thais, a Greek, and the wife of Junius Publis, Prefect of Rome, is enamoured of the Prince and goes to the dungeon to see him. Her visit there is made known to Junius and a Roman is sent to bring her before Trajan. Decebalus takes advantage of the guard, who has released Thais, springs on him, and invests himself in the guard's apparel and walks forth, meeting the nobles of Rome, who do not recognize him. He meets the Princess, who again asks him to become a Roman. The Emperor has learned of his escape and has him seized.

A guard announces to the Emperor that the Huns are at the gates of Rome. Decebalus, hearing this, announces that he will fight with the Romans as the Huns are also his enemies. He is placed in command of one of the legions. The encounter is seen, and then the return of the victorious army into Rome. Decebalus' success gives him the right to demand a favor, and his first request is for his mother's freedom.

This is granted and as a further reward Trajan gives him his daughter, Octavia, as his wife, and sends him back to Dacia to reign over his own country in security.

The report in one of the New York daily papers that Miss Lillian Walker had gone to San Francisco, thence to Hawaii, was a startling surprise to the Vitagraph Company. Miss Walker is in her accustomed place in the studio and on the day of the report met her fellow-workers with her usual dimpled smiles.

APPEARANCE AND MANNERS

Suggestions Invited, Questions Cheerfully Answered

Address: Exhibitors' Department, The Motion Picture News

IN the management of a theatre, the exhibitor should know, and he would know if he was looking at the pictures himself, that there is nothing more annoying than to miss a title or a sub-title. To miss the first title is practically to lose the sense of the picture, as this first title is generally a sort of introduction to the story. To miss a sub-title in the middle of the reel often disconnects the whole story.

The great drawback of the motion picture theatre is the constant stream of patrons walking in and out during the performance. If you have to move from your seat to allow some one to pass at the time of a sub-title, you lose the thread of the story. Same when the selfish man in front of you insists on standing up while he removes or puts on his overcoat. If he was a gentleman, if he had any manners, he would wait until he reaches the aisle or lobby to put on his overcoat. Ladies are as selfish—they will raise both arms to either remove or push in their long hatpins, etc

I don't know if the managers have realized this annoyance, but if so they seem to pay a very little attention to it, not to say that they add to it by running the pictures in too quick succession without the least intermission. The new picture jumps so quickly on the curtain that too often the patrons don't know if it is the same picture or a new one.

We all know that at the end of a picture there is always confusion in the auditorium. So many persons walk out, so many other patrons from the rear seats run to get the newly vacated front seats, and add the numerous persons who have been waiting in the lobby for seats.

According to the size of the auditorium, this confusion varies from one to three minutes, and during this confusion the seated patrons cannot enjoy the show.

There should be an intermission between each picture, and if the lights were to be thrown on during said intermission, there would be less confusion as, by being able to see the seats, there would be less time wasted on the part of the patrons.

A short intermission would rest the eye and the mind, and not only facilitate the service, but please the lovers of motion pictures who do not like to miss part of the story.

To-day an intermission is more urgent than at another time, since the fad came to throw on the screen the cast of the play with the names of the actors, and since the patrons are taking such a deep interest in the photoplayers. How can anyone read the cast during the confusion of changing of seats if the new picture is thrown on the screen at the tail of the previous one?

The main trouble is that most of the managers do not mix with the audience. When they look at the pictures, it is generally at the first show, when the audience is very slim, consequently no confusion. They seldom visit other motion picture theatres, and when they do so, they generally take in part of the show, standing in the lobby talking with the owner of the place, paying very little attention to the show proper.

If some of the exhibitors and managers would sit in the audience, watch and listen to the different comments, they would learn many things.

For instance: It is very annoying for an audience to hear the operators talk, laugh and pass comments in the operating booth, or, as it was the case in a New York theatre, to have the usher step in the operating booth and fight the operators—not with his fists, but with his tongue. It was out of place during a love scene depicted on the screen, to hear the operator say: "If you don't shut up I will throw you out—you have no business in this booth." Then the usher to answer: "I have a perfect right to enter this booth," etc.

SCENE FROM "THE MESSAGE OF THE DEAD" Eclectic Film Company

As so much has been said and published against motion picture theatres, calling them fire-traps, etc., it is policy to avoid all undue noise and movements that can scare an audience. On account of all that has been published, the patrons are naturally timid and the least thing can start a panic.

In one of the large motion picture theatres of New York, the patrons of the balcony were thrown into a sort of panic when one of the ushers started to run for the dressing-room, removing his uniform coat on the way. This run and the action of the usher removing his coat, made the patrons very uncomfortable for a few minutes, as they had an idea that something was wrong on the stage—perhaps fire. The truth is that the usher asked to be relieved for the balance of the evening, and when permission was granted, he could not control his pleasure and, without reasoning, he started to run for the dressing-room.

The managers should be on the lookout for all undue noise and movements, and should also see that no one be allowed to light a match to hunt for something on the floor.

The fall season is here—so are the new uniforms.

New uniforms are all right in one sense, but they look pretty bad when the personal appearance of the man does not harmonize and when the uniforms are made too large to fit different sizes.

In a theatre of New York, the doorman looked resplendent in his new uniform. It is true to state that he is an old employee, and as he is faithful to his duties, the uniform looks like if made to order. The ushers are a different proposition. They are not regular, they can be changed any day, consequently the uniforms are large, ready-made sizes, to fit the average man. One of the ushers had a very dirty pair of old shoes, his collar was a dirty, mussed, soft affair, looking more like a rag than anything else around his neck; his hair was unkempt, etc.

I cannot blame the poor fellow much, as at the rate of $5 for seven days of twelve hours of work each (the wages paid by the said theatre) it is impossible to find a man saving enough from his board bill to be able to buy new shoes, new collars, pay for the washing and the shines.

A man can work for $5 ushering in a theatre when it is evening work only, as during the day he can be employed at something else, but $5 per week is entirely too low to secure the services of a clean-cut man to act in a theatre. J. M. B.

reptile. The lovers leave the cave in panic. When Arbaces arrives shortly after he has no trouble inducing the witch to give him a potion that "shall sear and blast the brain, to make him idiot, raving mad, while yet the heart beats on."

Nydia meets Arbaces, secures the "love potion" and gives it to Glaucus. When she realizes the havoc she has wrought from his ravings, Nydia is overcome with remorse and follows the insane man as he rushes through the streets, reeling from side to side. Apaecides in the meantime has had a stormy scene with the Egyptian, and goes forth to cool his fevered brain to the seashore. Arbaces follows and murders him. Glaucus comes staggering into the scene and the wary Egyptian, realizing his condition, takes advantage of it and calls loudly for help, charging Glaucus with the murder. Nydia, who has followed, is seized by the Egyptian and carried away to the dungeons. Glaucus is haled before the Senate and condemned to die by wild beasts in the arena at the coming games.

The day finally arrives and the mighty stands are crowded with thousands of gay Pompeiians, intent upon seeing the rare spectacle of a patrician thrown to the lions. Nydia, in her dungeon, plans escape. By playing upon the superstitions of her negro keeper she succeeds in locking him in her cell. Realizing that it had all been her fault, the blind girl frantically makes her way to the home of Sallust, friend of Glaucus, who has remained home from the great spectacle.

Things were at their height in the Coliseum. The gladiators had paraded, the people had howled themselves hoarse over the valor of the gladiatorial combats, and everything was in readiness for the great feature of the day's sport—the death of Glaucus. The thunderous voices of the thousands of people yell "Glaucus to the lions!" The Athenian was given a short sword and roughly pushed into the arena. The hunger-maddened lions are released from their cages. The wild and disheveled form of Sallust suddenly appeared leaping from the boxes and shouting, "Remove Glaucus, the Athenian! He is innocent! There stands the murderer!" A guttural roar went up from the assembled thousands, in which could be heard excited cries of "Arbaces to the lions! Arbaces to the lions!" At that instant the sky suddenly darkened and from distant Vesuvius there shot into the sky a shaft of hellish fire. Panic seized the multitude and pandemonium reigned. In the confusion Arbaces escaped. The reason of Glaucus was restored by the frightful catastrophe. He felt Nydia's hand in his, leading him through blinding hail of cinders to the home of Ione. They found Ione prepared for death, but the gentle Nydia led them both through the Stygian darkness to the Temple of Isis. Here they met the distracted Arbaces and saw him crushed to death by a falling pillar of his own idolatrous church. In a blackness, where only the blind could see, Nydia guided the two lovers to the seashore. Knowing them safely aboard, Nydia suddenly threw herself into the waters of the bay. Her love task ended, the blind girl at last found the eternal rest she sought. C. I. V.

CONSTRUCTION, APPEARANCE, ADVERTISING—THREE IN ONE

THE object of this department is to help the exhibitor in the construction of his theatre and to keep him posted on anything of real value in construction, decorations, etc.

It would be easy to fill pages, and this without moving from my desk, as day after day I have visitors who have something on which they want a write-up, so as to help them to create a demand. I am not here to help to promote a lot of useless or impractical devices to the detriment of the exhibitor.

While it may sound queer, I must state that the real good and useful devices do not go begging, and, to discover them, one must be all the time on the go.

I was the first man to advocate the cork flooring as the most sanitary, less slippery and noiseless floor for a motion picture theatre. While the manufacturer of this pulverized and pressed cork flooring was signing big contracts with hospitals, banks and other such institutions, he was laughing at the idea of the cheap little motion picture theatres. When I described the floor in my article on construction on April 30, 1910, the manufacturer realized that motion picture theatres offered a new and important field to work.

It was the same with the Von Duprin self-releasing exit doors, and the agents of this good invention would have never addressed the motion picture theatres if I had not called the general attention in another article on December 24, 1910.

While office buildings, banks and other institutions were equipped with the indirect lighting system, the manufacturers had no use for the motion picture theatres until I gave them a notice in my article of January 28, 1911, and placed one of their fixtures in my Chicago office, to serve as a demonstration.

It would be too long to enumerate all the good devices I investigated and described for the benefit of the exhibitor building or remodeling his theatre.

To-day, I lay a new claim. The first man to show how the exhibitor can not only save his plastic ornaments by having them coated with bronze but can greatly improve the appearance of his theatre by making all the ornaments look like solid bronze instead of retaining the dying style of the white gingerbread effects.

Theatres of to-day are no more temporary constructions to last, like the buildings of an exposition or of a fair, a few months. On account of the stability of motion pictures, the theatres of the future must be substantial constructions to last many years.

By talking of a coating of bronze, I do not mean paint, but I wish to refer to a new art, the Katholion bronze.

Katholion bronze is a perfected science of depositing metals on iron, wood, glass or plaster cores. It is a casting in every sense of the word, a tough, dense, imparted, workable metal covering of any thickness desired. Its only competitor is a copper, brass or bronze casting.

This coating is not a mere thin sheet of bronze applied on the plaster, wood, glass or any other desired material, but by an electro-plating process, the coating is made homogeneous with the surface on which it is applied.

Brass railings, brass easels and frames that are so hard to polish and keep polished can be made in wood or iron and coated with bronze.

We know that the poster frames are made of wood and covered with a thin sheet of brass, and we know that the least knock on said frames leaves a bad dent. These dents will not appear on frames coated with bronze, because the coating is heavier and there is no air between the wood and the coating. With Katholion bronze, any designs of mouldings can be used to make the poster frame more artistic and at same time to avoid the long flat brass surfaces so hard to keep well polished.

Katholion bronze offers great possibilities to enhance the beauty and richness of a motion picture theatre. For instance: Instead of having the panels of the doors solid, made of plate glass with a curtain in the back, of stained glass, etc., the panels could be made of Katholion bronze.

A door, imitation mahogany, with the panels made of bronze and a dark red curtain back of it, would produce a great effect. Many other beautiful compositions could be made on the same order: doors, imitation walnut, with the panels of old or green bronze, and dark green curtains, etc.

Katholion bronze is not only much cheaper than bronze casting, but is very much lighter in weight.

Illustration 1 shows an outside lamp of very fine design and practical on account of its cheapness.

While the columns, cornices, dome and grill work of the ticket booth could be made of Katholion bronze, the panels of the base could be bas-reliefs of the same composition. It would be too long to enumerate all the possibilities for Katholion bronze in the construction and decoration of a motion picture theatre.

The accompanying cuts will give an idea of some of the possibilities of Katholion bronze.

Cut No. 2 shows the specimen of a statue to surmount the ticket booth.

Cut No. 3 shows a bronze cove molding for cornice, and also a bronze capital for a column.

Cut No. 4 shows an exterior balcony of bronze.

Cut No. 5 shows a wall bracket.

These illustrations are a few specimens of what can be done with the new art process, known as the Katholion bronze, and if the reader is interested in this new process, he will find that light fixtures, tablets, grille work, statues, hand-rails, friezes, bas-reliefs, fountains, etc., are fully illustrated in the catalog of the company.

The beauty with the Katholion bronze is that you can give it any desired finish—red, black, old green bronze to suit the other decorations of the theatre. For instance, if the locks and handles on the doors of the new theatre on Eighth avenue, New York, called Ye Drury Lane, had been in imitation green bronze, they would harmonize with the other old-time decorations and old lamps.

At the offices of the Katholion Bronze Company I was shown some oak leaves with acorns, lace-work, etc., coated in bronze, without altering the smallest details.

Harry Von Meter, the new character man of the first American company, recently toyed with a real rattlesnake in the production of a picture in Los Angeles. Von Meter showed nerve, as a perfectly good rattler was employed. The snake lay on a table and the picture was cut just as the reptile coiled and struck. Von Meter jumped out of the way in time to escape the fangs.

INTERESTING FILM REVIEWS

Educational—Industrial—Scenic

Birds of the Southern Sea Coast. Edison. (Oct. 6.)—Just why the camera is able to get so near birds and take pictures of them in their native haunts, without their so much as fluttering a wing in protest, the writer cannot understand fully. Many times he has tried as a kid to get near them, only to fail. The Edison Company in the picture above quoted catches the birds in all positions. The "street scavengers," alias buzzards, alias vultures, were the most interesting, and their fights right in the streets of a city were grotesque.

Along the Padas River. Pathe.—The Padas River is in the home of the celebrated headhunters, i. e., Borneo. The natives are shown at their principal labor of gathering the expensive woods which grow there. The scenery is of the tropical variety and is delightful.

Ethel Barrymore's Home. Kinemacolor.—Miss Barrymore's wonderful home in Mamaroneck, N. Y., is the mecca for all natural and artificial beauty lovers. It is one of the most delightful spots imaginable, and the visitors that daily crowd to the beautiful fountains and trees are never tired of talking of them. The Kinemacolor Company does full justice to the scenery, and the colors are exquisite. Her two youngsters are pictured, together with a number of other boy scouts, in various poses and at different labors. This is one of the series of Famous Footlight Favorites Off the Stage. Others in the set include Bessie McCoy, Anna Held, Lillian Russell, Blanche Ring, and Raymond Hitchcock.

Panorama of the Cities of Algiers and Tunis. Powers.—These cities always hold a fascination for the European, whether in fiction or in life. No white man has ever learned the intricacies of life there, and it is doubtful that anyone ever will. The only fault to be found with the Powers picture is its brevity. Not enough of the life was shown. The view of Algiers, in particular, looking from the breakwater, is wonderful, but this the camera missed. Internally, the city is awful, but its external view might be rated as the eighth beauty of the world.

Riding the Flume. Pathe.—The State of Washington, among its other acquirements, has a reputation for the number of power-houses run by water. This water is often fetched from the tops of the highest mountains in covered wooden and cement channels, called flumes. The Pathe Company has taken some splendid pictures of the Spokane Falls and the power-house run by the water in the city of Electron. The scenic effects, as seen from the railway which traverses the entire course of the flume, are excellent. The film, however, is too short for so good a subject.

A Journey Through Crimea. Pathe. (Oct. 7.)—Crimea, the cause of one of the greatest conflicts in the history of the world, has been taken by the Pathe Company as the scene for some very interesting pictures. The natural beauty of this country makes it especially interesting, but the picture lacks finish. There are mountain scenes, mosque scenes, street scenes, etc., but there are no group scenes. In the study of a foreign country, especially one so very remote as Crimea, the natives hold as much interest, or more interest, than the actual scenery. Their mode of living, their costumes and habits, their work and methods with which it is done, are what we want to see, too. The picture makes a good filler, and the photography has the usual Pathe quality.

Oxygen. Pathe.—The science of chemistry, a deep and interesting study, is little understood by the average person, who little realizes its great influence on our daily existence. That air contains 21 per cent of oxygen few know. Hence this film is an important one, and the Pathe Company has brought it out in great detail. The experiments which are shown on the screen are very realistic, the photoplay being excellent.

Plants that Eat. Pathe. (Oct. 7.) All plants "eat," viz., vegetable life absorbs the rain and richness of the earth, in order to live. But how many people know that there are plants that not only eat animal life, but digest it. The Pathe Company shows a number of these plants in Canada in the act of eating bugs, etc. The pictures are well taken.

How Mountains Grow. Pathe. (Oct. 7.)—By the use of plaster models, the audience is able to follow the growth of these mountains. That they do grow has for years been an accepted fact, but to be able to sit and watch them slowly enlarge is wonderful. Deposits from the bottom of the sea contract and force their way to some small mound, where they stick, more forming on top of them and so on ad infinitum. The great dangers to navigation resulting from the growth of these hills cannot be estimated. The Pacific is the worst field for these and coral reefs, which are similar in that they "grow."

Regular Releases

In the Clutch of the Paris Apaches. Gaumont. (Oct. 18.)—A typical French melodrama, vibrating with action and bloodshed, but possessing some new features which tend to make it most interesting. It is in four parts with good acting and splendid photography, particularly the interior scenes. Jane Mary Laurent plays the lead with her usual care for the smaller things that are so much in the make-up of the general film.

Little Marie, whose father has disappeared and whose mother has died, runs away from school and falls into the hands of the Paris Apaches, where she becomes a drudge of all work, together with a hunchback whose name is Bosco. The father returns after his long absence and receives a letter from the Apaches demanding ransom. Hs goes to their haunt, and is overpowered after he has paid the demand. The police, however, rescue him. The leader, Talmin, escapes with Marie and flees to Nice, followed by Bosco. Here, after a series of adventures, Marie is rescued and returned to her father, who adopts Bosco for his bravery. The Villa Carmen, shown in this picture, is beautiful. Apache work must pay well in Paris when they can live in such a castle as this.

Hansel and Gretel. Venus.—How many times as a kid have you read this wonderful story of Grimm's? And were you ever tired of it, or of hearing your mother read it to you in the evening when you were to be put to bed? And then in the night, didn't you dream of fairies and goblins? Well, I am sure that I can remember that time, and it wasn't long ago, either. Don't you remember the witches, and the gingerbread house? That part should never be forgotten. The story, as played by the above company, is thoroughly comprehensive, though perhaps a little "spooky" for the "wee sma' bairns." But it is thoroughly good and clean, and will be enjoyed by thousands of tots before long, I hope.

Back to Life. Rex.—A two-reel Western drama, introducing J. Warren Kerrigan and others, formerly with the American Company. The part played by him, however, did not seem suitable. Kerrigan makes a wonderful hero, if he has the part exactly fitted for him. He is best as a matinee idol, and where he performs wonders in bravery and skill. In this picture he has to become a man hated and despised by all for his alleged cowardice, until one day he kills a man in self-defense and is forced to run away. He is wounded and is doctored by the wife of a gambler whom she had left because she believed she was no longer wanted.

They fall in love with one another but the marriage vows keep them apart, until the gambler is killed. When the cowboys arrived and saw him dead they hastened away. Someone in the audience remarked that it was the first time "the boys had not lifted their hats and stood reverently near the body." But that is true. There is too much of that sentimentalism introduced and the Rex Company are doing good work in setting a precedent. The photography was very poor in places, being apparently underdeveloped.

The Rivals. Kinemacolor.—The Kinemacolor Company cannot receive too much credit for their work in placing before the public in such a form this wonderful creation of the brain of Richard Brinsley Sheridan. Although the play has been active for the last half century, it is surprising how many people there are, who, although they have read the play, have never been able to see it because of the almost prohibitive box office rates. Now there is no excuse, and the writer, who has seen both the legitimate and the production by the Kinemacolor Company, personally prefers the latter as it covers the field, he thinks, in a more complete manner than the legitimate was capable of doing. Of course the great acting of Joseph Jefferson as Bob Acres is missed. William Winter Jefferson, his son, however, carries the part through very well. The story is so well known to all that it would be but waste space to detail it. The costuming and the scenery throughout was perfect, and the acting certainly left nothing to be desired.

Cast of characters: Bob Acres, one of the rivals, William Winter Jefferson; Captain Absolute, another rival, Gaston Bell; Sir Lucius O'Trigger, another rival, Gilbert Coleman; Sir Anthony Absolute, the captain's father, George Staley; David, Bob Acres' servant, Samuel Hines; Fag, the captain's man, Dallas Anderson; Faulkland, Milton Boyle; Doctor, David Young; Mrs. Malaprop, Florence Stanley; Lydia Languish, Lorraine Frost; Lucy, the maid, Rae Ford.

Father John; A Ragpicker of Paris. World Special.—Typically a French picture, with the French love of the risque, and with a sufficient touch of spice to make it interesting and not objectionable. The character of Father John is one which enlists the sympathy and love of the audience, despite the fact that he is a hard drinker. The story opens with the adoption of Marie, who is the daughter of a bank messenger. The latter was killed by the villain, Garouse, and his money stolen.

With this money the man is able to obtain the title of Baron Hoffman and is comfortably wed. Marie has become a dressmaker, in the meantime, and is enamored of Henry de Berville, a wealthy young man, to whom the Baron wishes to marry his daughter, Claire.

In order to do this he hires a midwife to get rid of the illegitimate child of his daughter. Mme. Patard does this, but places the baby in the care of Marie, afterwards stealing it again. The police are informed, and throw Marie in prison because they think that she has killed the child. Through some clever detective work John secures a confession from the Baron and the midwife of their complicity in the affair, and Marie is freed to wed Henry. A clever picture, which will not offend the most æsthetic taste.

Cast: Father John, Mr. Duquesne; Garousse-Hoffman, Mr. Paglieri; Henry de Berville, Mr. Maupre; Marie, Mlle. Renee Sylvaire.

A Romance of Erin. Domino. (Oct. 16.)—A two-reel feature of the Mutual program, which, although possessing but a cut and dried plot, pleases everyone by the number of beautiful scenes and the clever acting. The class of audience to which sensational and melodramatic endings appeal will like this picture, which is on the lines of the old-fashioned "blood and thunder" and "penny dreadful," possessing, however, the redeeming features of real Irish wit and strategy. The story originated in the mind of William H. Clifford.

THE MESSAGE FROM THE DEAD

Eclectic, Three Reels, October 16

A corking good story, with splendid acting and fine settings. As a general thing the French are not noted for their developing, but in this case there is not a flaw. A picture that will make a name for itself.

A youth is adopted by an eccentric old man. The following night the old man is killed by his nephew with an ax, the blame, however, falling on a nearby woodcutter who was in the house that day and had left his ax there. He is convicted on the circumstantial evidence and sent to prison, while his daughter is left to look out for herself. Gaston, the nephew, in the meantime has gone away but later he returned to his old home and lives there. He meets Jean, the daughter of the woodcutter, and attempts to make violent love to her.

The boy, Philip, who witnessed the murder of his guardian, and who has the evidence to convict Gaston, has lost his mind through the shock. The woodcutter, having been freed from jail, returns to his daughter in time to prevent her being insulted by Gaston, who excites the neighborhood against the woodcutter, and as they are about to hurt him, he raises an ax in his own defence. This, together with the burning of his house later, brings back the vanished mind of the boy and he turns over to the police the proof of Gaston's guilt and the latter is arrested.

There are many strong points in the narrative which are well carried out in the drama.

A HUSBAND'S STRATEGY

Great Northern

This is a dramatic story dealing with the quarrel, separation and final reunion of a young married couple. According to the plot, the Countess Holten invites Aileen, the wife of a rich banker, James Perrin, to help at a charity bazaar. We are next given a glimpse of this function and Aileen appears to have attracted the favor of young Count Holten, an army officer. Mrs. Perrin is a stall-holder and the count proves to be one of her best customers and pays her attention. During an intermission, the count is discovered kissing the hand of Mrs. Perrin, and later meetings disturb the peace of mind of the banker. He tries to put a stop to the flirtation, but does not succeed, and in the course of time he is served with divorce papers.

Aileen makes her home with her aunt and accepts a position as companion to Miss Clara Evans, a wealthy spinster. Mr. Perrin pays the latter a visit at a seaside resort and pretends to show her marked attention. Every moment of Aileen's waking moments is tortured by the thought of what might have been. Soon a party is organized to visit a ruin in the locality, and Perrin bribes the old caretaker to lock himself and his wife in the ruins after the others have departed. They wander through the deserted chambers, which are said to be visited by ghosts, and finally visit the battlements.

After awaiting the dawn, a reconciliation is effected, and when the old caretaker returns to his duties, husband and wife are reunited.

NOTES OF THE TRADE

Two comedies from the pen of Junie McCree will be released by Reliance on October 20th, as a split reel offering. "Oh, What a Night" is the title of the first comedy, while the second, which is a vehicle for the Hippodrome mule, Pete, will be the first of a series of "mule" stories, entitled "Two Men and a Mule."

The Cleveland-Fidelity Booking Offices report great activity in that establishment last week entertaining out-of-town guests. No less than fifty managers of theatres that book attractions through those offices found it necessary to come to New York on business at this time. Of course, they all state it is only a coincidence that so many of them should have pressing engagements here during World Series week, but, nevertheless, none of them failed to attend one or more of the big games. Some of them found it also necessary to go to Philadelphia for a day or so to get their business affairs properly adjusted.

Mr. Arthur Ashley was a professional stock actor in several stock companies throughout the country before joining the Vitagraph Company, namely, Poli's Stock Company, in the East, et al. Mr. Ashley has been with the Vitagraph about six months and together with Miss Florence Dyer, who was formerly on the stage and is now with us, take parts in "The Aristocratic Penitents," which is to be released with "Wild Beasts at Large" as a special exclusive general film release.

The Lubin Film Company has sent two more troupes south for the winter. Director Wilbert Melville will locate in Los Angeles, Cal. He takes a company selected from the best Lubin players and two carloads of equipment.

F. J. Grandon and his company go to Birmingham, Ala., where arrangements for a new studio have been perfected, including quarters for the players, rough riders and horses which always figure in Mr. Grandon's pictures. This arrangement will leave five companies still at the Philadelphia plant and four in the South and Southwest.

Miss Ida Lewis and Joseph P. Swickard have been engaged to play characters in the "Ricketts" American Company. Both have had extensive experience on the legitimate stage and in pictures and their work on the screen is highly commendable.

DO YOU WANT MORE BUSINESS?

NOTES OF THE TRADE

Director A. E. Christie, of the Universal, is putting on a series of Westerns, as his comedies are away ahead on releases. The main office have called for more of his Westerns. He has just finished "The Golden Princess Mine," with Eddie Lyons and Ramona Langley in the leads, and with Lee Moran as the heavy. There is a tense situation when Lee is imprisoned in the mine by an Indian whom he has tried to double-cross, and who starts a rock slide which fills the face of the cave.

For the benefit of a charitable institution, the Lubin cowboys of Betzwood gave an exhibition of Western riding at the Jefferson Riding Park on Saturday, October 4th. The riders were Harry K. Loomes and George Steele, of Montana, Joe Riley, Harry Webb and Jack Wright, of Wyoming, "Kid" Bill Arthur of Texas, Miss Elsie Woodward of Dakota, and others.

The exhibition consisted of racing, lasso throwing, trick riding, breaking of bronchos, Indian and cowboy fights and stage-coach hold-ups, catching steers, sports and pastimes of fancy riding. The show was given under the direction of Harry K. Loomes and lustily cheered by over 5,500 people.

Stephen S. Norton, Harry C. Matthews' camera man, is having a good time in the East during his holiday, according to his letters to old chums here. He has not yet decided just when he will return.

Written by the author of a Broadway success and played by two stars with Broadway reputations, the Reliance regular release of October 15th is of considerable interest. Will Hough, of "A Stubborn Cinderella," writes the scenario, while Charles Dickson, who starred in "Incog," and Anna Laughlin, of "The Wizard of Oz," "The Top of the World" and other well-known productions, played the two leading roles.

V. R. Day, general manager of the Essanay Film Mfg. Co., is in the West, personally directing the activities of the taking of the "Buffalo Bill" pictures by this company. Mr. Day expects to return in about a month.

George Magie, of the Universal Film Mfg. Co., is in Chicago and will remain for some time, looking after the Universal interests here, and also to act as arbitrator in matters involving customers of the Universal exchanges of this city.

FEATURE FILM NOTES

The Gene Gauntier Feature Players are back from Ireland with some feature productions which they made in and around the Lakes of Killarney. Miss Gauntier, while abroad, was presented with a blue-blooded Irish terrier, who, it is said, will take a leading part in a forthcoming picture.

Admirers of Shakespeare will appreciate "The Taming of the Shrew," which will be released soon as a three-part feature on the regular program.

"The Lady of the Lake" is another classic in three reels scheduled for early release.

A. Warner, vice-president Warner's Features, Inc., has contracted with the new Plaza Theatre in New Orleans, and the Crystal Theatre, Houston, Tex., for the complete program of Warner's Features. The new "Plaza" is owned by Herman Fitchenberg.

Mr. Rogers, of the Union Film Company, of Chicago, states that his company is purchasing most of the releases put out by the Exclusive Supply corporation. While this company is young, it claims a splendid business.

Mr. Spencer, of the General Special Feature Film Company, expects to take a trip to New York City very soon for the purpose of augmenting his already large program by a personal selection of some of the big pictures which are being offered in the East.

P. B. Elliott, manager of the Union Film Company, of Indianapolis, one of the foremost feature exchanges of that city, spent last Thursday in Chicago, acquainting himself with the various angles of the feature game as it is handled in Chicago.

The Ammex Company, for a long time inactive, have come back into the field as manufacturers of feature films. Their first release will be "The Barrier of Blood," the second "The Reckoning," both in two reels.

J. C. Graham, general manager of the Universal Film Mfg. Co., arrived in Chicago last week on business for the Universal and expects to return to New York City on Tuesday. His main mission was the deal which is pending between the Universal and the Standard Film Exchange. The papers in this deal are said to be prepared, but as yet no signatures have been attached. The minor differences which now exist, it is expected, will be settled within the week. This will mean that the Standard Film Exchange of Chicago and Louisville, and the Milwaukee Film Exchange will be the property of the Universal Film Mfg. Co.

The Exclusive Supply Corporation, outgrowing its suite of offices on the tenth floor of the Candler Building, 220 West Forty-second street, New York City, last week moved across the corridor to occupy Suite 1006, the offices recently vacated by the Independent Film Company and Warner's Features.

William Fox, the vaudeville magnate, has arranged with the Theatre Film Company, owners of the New York State rights to "Arizona," to show this six-part photo-drama in all of his principal houses. The production will be shown for the first time in public in New York City at the Crotona Theatre, 177th street and Park avenue, on Monday, October 6th.

BIG ACTS ON "POPULAR PRICE" CIRCUIT

The progressive spirit of the managers of theatres playing motion pictures and vaudeville is evidenced this season more than ever before by the number of big feature vaudeville acts that are being presented by them in preference to "singles" and "doubles," which have been the rule in former years.

W. S. Cleveland, manager of the Cleveland-Fidelity Booking Service, the largest agency catering exclusively to popular-price theatres, gives the following list of big acts appearing this week in houses represented by the Cleveland-Fidelity:

Bristol's Equine Wonders, Academy of Music, Hagerstown, Md.; the Four Lukens and Martyn's Jungleland, Collingwood Opera House, Poughkeepsie, N. Y.; Leo the Great & Co. and Davenport, Reynard & Co., Baker Theatre, Dover, N. J.; Rialto Comedy Four and the Three Paragons, Palace Theatre, Morristown, N. J.; Russ Forth Musical Comedy Co., Grand Theatre, Malone, N. Y.; Enigma, the Original Mechanical Doll, Maple Leaf Theatre, Montreal, Canada; the Dozen Dancing Dollies, Colonial Theatre, Amsterdam, N. Y.; Mlle. Dolores & Co., spectacular scenic production, New Theatre, Hoosick Falls, N. Y.; Belmonte Troupe of Society Dancers and LaMont's Musical Comedy Co., Academy of Music, Newburgh, N. Y.; Young America Quintette and Ora Cecil's Troupe of Trained Leopards, Colombia Theatre, Far Rockaway, L. I.; the Orla Troupe of Russian Dancers, American Theatre, Phoebus, Va.

Mr. Cleveland states it is his opinion that it is only a question of a short time when all the "small-time" managers will realize that a great deal larger profits can be made by playing high-grade attractions.

NOTES

The Edison Company is now issuing music cues for all Edison films. They are being prepared by a well-known orchestra leader, who has had years of experience in vaudeville and motion picture houses, and are being printed in the Kinetogram, the Edison house publication.

The Nostrand Theatre, 625 Nostrand avenue, Brooklyn, N. Y., is the first motion picture theatre built under the new New York State laws. Mr. Machant is the president of the company. The theatre seats five hundred and fifty people in plain chairs and fifty box chairs. This theatre will be equipped with a ladies' retiring room and gentlemen's smoking room. His old theatre was the leading one in this neighborhood, and was such a success that he has spent over $9,000 in alterations. The American Seating Company is putting in the seats and the Typhone Fan Company the ventilation. The house carries a widely diversified program. The opening attraction will be the four-reel feature, "The Resurrection," featuring Blanche Walsh, owned by the Unique Company, 145 West 45th street. At the opening Mr. Machant will welcome anyone interested in looking over his new house.

Willie Miller, of Edinburg, Ind., wrote to the Kleine Optical Company, stating that he was interested in theatre equipment, and to kindly forward a projection machine, drawing on the Union Trust Company, Edinburg, Ind., for the necessary funds. The machine went in due course, and in due course, also, went a sight draft on the Union Trust Company. A week elapsed, and then Manager Frank Hough was stunned by the receipt of the draft returned by the bank, with a note attached saying: "William Miller unable to make payment. Stated intention was to pay on the instalment plan. Party about twelve years old."

Carlyle Blackwell, of the Kalem Company, will be installed at the old Essanay studios between Hollywood and town next week. "Colonel" C. Rhys Pryce goes with him. He will have his own company, which will include Louise Glaum. Mr. Blackwell will produce social dramas and light comedies. Director J. P. McGown will also have a company at the same studios. He will take Bert Hadley, Chance Ward, Helen Holmes, William Brunton, G. A. Williams, Leo Maloney and others with him. By the way, this is Carlyle Blackwell's fourth year with the Kalem Company; he is a big favorite.

BRISTOL'S EQUINE WONDERS

The Biggest and Best Horse, Pony and Mule Exhibition in the World

15 — BEAUTIFUL COLLEGE EDUCATED ANIMALS — 15

Elegant Stage Equipment and Paraphernalia. Special Car Required. Five People Travel With the Organization.

TWELVE MILITARY PONIES, groomed and caparisoned to the highest degree of perfection, performing a series of evolutions and maneuvers that are a revelation in animal training. The most beautiful exhibition of the kind ever presented. An equine phalanx par excellence.

"RUBY," Funniest of All Trick Mules. Not the ordinary, vicious, "unridable" type, but a real comedienne. Her funny antics bring roars of laughter from young and old. She dearly loves a romp with the children at the daily receptions after matinees. Her rocking chair reposes are unique.

"DIAMOND," the trotting-bred contortion horse, whose demonstration of animal intelligence and feats of agility surpass the imagination. For over 20 years WILLIAM BRISTOL has been acknowledged the "Superman" of the horse training craft. He has had many an imitator, but never an equal. Bristol's Record Breaking Equine Paradox is a SURE-FIRE HIT. If you want to increase your business, address the only authorized manager,

FEATURES IDEALS are bringing over a four-reel subject from the Parisian studio in which Mlle. Polaire is the leading character. They have featured her particularly in this production and it is another world-beater.

Mlle. Polaire is delighted to be called the ugliest in the world. She wears a pearl ring in her nose. She says, "It is a fad I started two months ago in Paris, and when the American women try it, they, too, will wear them.

The French actress has arrived here from Europe within the past two weeks, and when the steamer reached the pier she was weeping, being troubled about the loss of her pet pig. One day, while she was holding the pig on deck, it jumped out of her arms into the sea. Around its neck was a collar studded with diamonds and rubies, but Mlle. Polaire would not say whether she was crying for the pig or her jewels.

An incomplete report published in a few trade journals tending to imply that the temporary injunction obtained by the Liebler Company against the film production of "In the Bishop's Carriage" applies to every print of this film, produced by the Famous Players Film Company, violates the spirit of the writ as in text and effect the injunction was only designed to prohibit the Famous Players Film Company from manufacturing, producing, exhibiting, or causing to be manufactured, produced or exhibited any films based on the subject during the pendency of the action, but is not intended to govern, and does in no manner restrict, the exhibition of the prints released before the issuance of the injunction.

Thomas W. Ross, who has starred in the original production of "Checkers" and who made the line "Gee, ain't it hell to be poor" a little more generally known than the national anthem, has been engaged by the All Star Feature Corporation to play the role he originally created for the photoplay production of "Checkers" soon to be made. This production will, of course, be made under the stage direction of Augustus Thomas, who acts as general director of productions for all the silent plays which are to be made by the All Star Feature Corporation.

Other engagements made for the All Star production of "Checkers" are Katharine La Salle and William A. Williams. Miss La Salle last season played opposite to Edmund Breese in "The Master Mind." Previously she was leading woman for Thomas W. Ross in "The Only Son," and was seen as The Governess in "Shorty McCabe." Miss La Salle plays Pert Barlow, opposite to Mr. Ross, in "Checkers."

For leading juvenile William A. Williams has been engaged. Mr. Williams was starred in "Quincy Adams Sawyer" for three years and starred himself in "The Lottery Man" for one year.

FEATURE FILM NEWS

TERRITORIAL rights to Indiana and Illinois for the All Star Feature Corporation's production of "Arizona" have been acquired by the Famous Players Film Service, of Pittsburgh. This purchase is in addition to the rights of Western Pennsylvania, West Virginia, Ohio and Kentucky, already purchased by the same service.

The Gaumont Company, which recently purchased the right to present this great six-reel production of the famous Augustus Thomas play in the British Islands, have increased their territory to cover all the other British possessions, with the exception of Canada, which has already been sold to the Feature Film Company of Canada.

That a great success was scored when Augustus Thomas put on his own play for the All Star Feature Corporation is well proved by the buyers of territorial rights increasing their territories; more especially when the purchasers are such people as the Gaumont Company and the Famous Players Film Service.

Mr. C. B. Case, of Syracuse, will look after the business of the World Special Films Corporation in that city.

The original headquarters of the World Special Films Corporation have been found too small for the needs of the company. They have taken the offices in the rear of their present quarters, which gives them one-half of the ninth floor of the World's Tower Building. A projecting room is being fitted up.

News comes from Rome that the Cines Company has completed arrangements to reproduce the drama "Madame Tallien," written by V. Sardou. For this purpose, Director Guazzoni, the producer who made "Quo Vadis," has employed the operatic troupe of Gandusio Borelli-Hiperno, well known throughout continental Europe for its rendition of Sardou's masterpiece. It is not known at this time how many reels will be required to tell the story.

Numerous demands for bookings, orders and state right privileges have gone into the mails of the Commercial Motion Pictures Company, Inc., the past week. Every state, city and hamlet will be booked before the World's Baseball series are over. The Marcus Loew's Circuit has purchased the sole and exclusive right to show the pictures the same night of the New York games, and the next day of the Philadelphia games, in Greater New York, and a great many of their out-of-town theatres.

One day after the series are over, complete prints, measuring approximately two thousand feet, showing every game, event and important play, will be sold to exchanges, theatres and feature film men who desire to book the completed pictures of the entire series through the vaudeville and motion picture theatres of the country.

With "At the White Horse Tavern," "The Senator" and "The Vanderbilt Cup" as well as recent successes, Sidney Rosenfeld has completed a picture drama entitled "The Heart of a Rose," which will be released by the Reliance on October 22d as a single reel subject.

FEATURE FILM NEWS

MR. E. MANDELBAUM, president of the World Special Films Corporation, has acquired the exhibition rights to "The Last Days of Pompeii," made by Pasquali in Turin, Italy. Mr. Mandelbaum is one of the pioneers in the film industry and a man well and favorably known among exhibitors. He organized the Lake Shore Film & Supply Company of Cleveland, and the National Film Exchange of Detroit several years ago, and subsequently sold out his interest in these concerns and became a large stockholder in the "Mutual." Recognizing the increasing demand for "feature" films, he recently organized with Mr. Phil Gleichman, of Detroit, the World Special Films Corporation with headquarters in New York, to handle nothing but this class of films.

Mr. E. A. Fenton, formerly of the Kinetograph Company, has been engaged by the World Special Films Corporation as manager of the Canadian offices, with branches in Montreal, Toronto and Winnipeg. These offices will be open within the next ten days or two weeks.

The Industrial Moving Picture Company is making the official motion pictures of the trip from Chicago to Minneapolis and St. Paul, Minn., of the National Paint, Oil & Varnish Association. They have just finished a series of pictures for Mayor Knotts, who will use the films in his campaign for re-election as Mayor of Gary, Ind.

Their operator left Chicago with the members of the National Paint, Oil & Varnish Association, and will film all of the interesting events incidental to this outing. These films will be kept as a matter of record and will also be used at entertainments given under the auspices of the various Paint, Oil & Varnish clubs of the United States. The pictures taken for Mayor Knotts show Gary's Mayor in various characteristic speaking attitudes, including scenes pertinent to his political platform. This film will be used by Mayor Knotts in his impending campaign.

The Photo Drama Company's six-part production, "The Last Days of Pompeii," presented in America by George Kleine, opens at the American Theatre, Spokane, Wash., Tuesday, October 14th, for an indefinite run. This will mark the first performance of the picture in this country.

The record price of $42,500 was paid in London last week at auction for three-year rights in a film of "Antony and Cleopatra" for the British Isles. The first bid was $20,000.

The purchase price is considered a great bargain, as "Quo Vadis" has already made $15,000.

The Theatre Film Supply Company, who are handling the New York State rights to "Arizona" with other feature films, have moved their offices from 12 Union Square to 71 West Twenty-third street, New York City.

Mr. Felix F. Feist, manager of the Chicago office of Kinemacolor Company of America, was in New York this week for a couple of days and made a trip amongst his friends in the trade. One object of his visit to New York was to secure another large shipment of machines to take care of contracts he has placed in his territory.

FEATURE FILM NEWS

THE General Film Producing Co., makers of the "HERALD FILMS," received a telegram from their photographer, who is now in Nome, Alaska, stating that he has secured some good pictures of Nome before and after the disaster that almost wiped that city away. The pictures taken before the disaster arrived in New York to-day and show the whole city, besides incidents and places surrounding Nome. They are very clear and very interesting. These pictures were made with the assistance of Governor Stone, of Alaska, and the U. S. revenue cutter "Bear," which went to the assistance of the stricken city.

Augustus Thomas, director-general of productions for the All Star Feature Corporation, has secured the assistance of Henry M. Blossom, author of "Checkers," in the staging of Mr. Blossom's novel and play as a "silent drama." Mr. Blossom dramatized his own novel in the play which made Thomas W. Ross famous as "Checkers." From this dramatization and from the novel itself a scenario has been prepared by Eustace Hale Ball and Lawrence McGill, and upon the basis of this scenario the play will be staged under the supervision of Mr. Thomas, with assistance from Mr. Blossom.

Arthur D. Gans, representing the Interstate Feature Film Company, of Baltimore, while on a buying expedition to New York last week purchased the rights on the Itala-Danmark subject, "The War Correspondents," for Delaware, Maryland, District of Columbia and Virginia. Mr. Gans has succeeded Warren A. Kline as manager of the Interstate, Mr. Kline having decided to give his full attention to his theatre interests. The Electric Theatre Supply Company, of Philadelphia, will have the exclusive rights on forthcoming Itala subjects in the territory mentioned, in addition to Eastern Pennsylvania and Southern New Jersey.

The executive and business offices of the Eclair Company in England are located at 12 Moor street, Cambridge Circus, London, W., England.

ANNOUNCEMENT

We are now printing the word "Eastman" on the margin of all our Cine film. We want the exhibitor to know when he is and when he is not getting Eastman film. It will be to his advantage—and ours.

Of course it will take time for such identifiable films to reach the consumer—so don't expect results at once—but it's a step in the right direction—for your interests and ours.

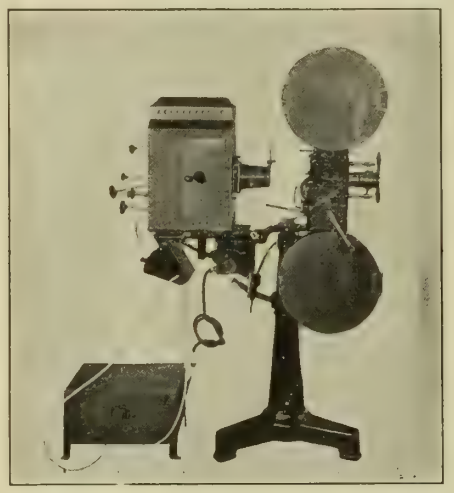
Simplex PROJECTORS

A GENERAL test gave MUTUAL satisfaction and UNIVERSAL popularity.



Over 4,000,000 ft. of film per week is projected by Simplex machines at the main offices and studios of the General, Mutual and Universal film companies.

Think of it, 4 million ft. or 757½ miles.

There are 16 pictures to every foot of film, therefore in 4,000,000 ft., the intermittent movement must operate 64,000,000 times. One-fourth of a revolution of the intermittent sprocket moves the film the length of one picture; therefore one complete revolution would draw down four pictures and to move the above amount of film would require 16,000,000 complete revolutions.

A sprocket 1.35" in diameter, traveling at the same rate of speed on a surface, would cover in one week's time 1070.7 miles or equal to a distance as great as from New York to Chicago.

This should convince the most skeptical that Simplex machines are built for hard service. They are capable of a quality of projection heretofore unknown to the moving picture world and have successfully competed with over forty types of different projectors at home and abroad.

Last Days of Pompeii

In Six Parts, arranged in three acts of two parts each
THE PHOTO DRAMA COMPANY'S PHOTO-PLAY MARVEL
As Presented in Amreica By

GEORGE KLEINE

Has Been Hailed By Critics As A Master Effort Greater Even Than The Wondrous "Quo Vadis."

Through the Beautiful, Idle, Slumbrous City of Pompeii. Following closely the thread of a Love Tale Idyllic, Lord Bulwer's mighty story sweeps on to scenes of almost preternatural power!

The destruction of Pompeii—the mad scurryings of the demented thousands amid a hail of smoking cinders and blasts of flame—the falling of great pillars—the collapse of temples—make one feel that his ears ring with the shrieks of the terror-maddened multitudes of the stricken city.

These scenes of Pompeii's last day with their mighty dramatic effect run for fifteen minutes—almost a thousand feet of awe-inspiring thrills.

"THE LAST DAYS OF POMPEII" was made by the famous Ambrosio Company at Turin and Pompeii, Italy. Nearly 5000 people were employed in the making—a tremendous throng of daintily garbed, picturesque Italians.

AUGUSTUS THOMAS

An Appreciation of "Arizona's" Author

"WOULD you rather make motion pictures or be an ambassador?" I asked Mr. Thomas, as we sat talking pictures after the usual introduction. My victim started. He was obviously unprepared for such a question, and, of course, I meant him to be. He knew practically nothing of me, but I had a clear outline of his career for the last twenty years in my mind when I put this question. Yet without hesitation, and with a slight smile, he replied: "I would rather make motion pictures." There were many paragraphs in the newspapers not long ago stating that President Wilson had offered Mr. Thomas an embassy in Europe. Paris and Brussels were mentioned as likely places.

AUGUSTUS THOMAS

The personality of Mr. Thomas is extremely agreeable. He does not convey to you the idea of having anything to do with stage matters. He is a type of the well-bred man of affairs, affable, cultured, easy in manner, and, above all things, sure of himself.

He has evidently caught the virus picturitis. He talked to me with real enthusiasm of the details of the making of "Arizona." He is a practical man. He discovered that in picture-making the chiefest asset is time, and that time is wasted more lavishly than money. So he invented a simple detached leaf system of charting the movements of all the characters in his films, indicating how long they were on in a scene, what they wore, and so forth. He is a veritable Bertillon of the film. "If every little movement has a meaning all its own," it also, in Mr. Thomas' philosophy, has a financial value. It should not be wasted, it should be made in the proper place; recorded, kept tab of. In the making of a motion picture, every movement must count. For the first time in my experience, I had encountered a personality of a mathematical nature in the making of motion pictures.

Mr. Thomas has large plans for the future. He is carrying them out, I perceive, mathematically. He is a good business man, and has good business associates. On the evening when I met Mr. Thomas he had an appointment. I hinted to him that it would be a delight to me to sit with him and look at his picture "Arizona." He incon-

AN ACKNOWLEDGMENT

THE logical growth of The Motion Picture News into its present form has brought us numerous words of congratulation and encouragement. These have been freely expressed by word of mouth to all members of the staff, and they have also taken form in many letters addressed to the individuals whose names are printed on the top of this page. We take this opportunity of gratefully acknowledging these appreciative words. They are an encouragement to us to adhere as closely as possible to the policy that we outlined in May last, namely, to stand for the best interests of the motion picture art and industry.

Will all those, therefore, who have written us on this subject or have spoken to us, accept the thanks of the staff of The Motion Picture News for their compliments and encouragements?

The highest aspiration of The Motion Picture News is to represent the art and industry of the motion picture in a dignified, honorable and progressive spirit. The editorial policy of the paper is animated solely by principles of justice allied with a determination to promote the interests represented in these pages to their best possible advantage. As proximate time progresses, it will be seen that these pages will manifest a literary value, artistic finish and consistency of policy not excelled by any other publication of the kind in the world.

IS THE SHORT LENGTH FILM DOOMED?

WEEK by week, as we study the motion picture press of the world, we find that this theme is constantly to the fore. At the moment of writing we have French and English publications in which the subject is discussed. It is a serious matter for the manufacturers to consider. A great deal of nonsense is said and written about feature films. Feature films, as we pointed out in these pages many weeks ago, only respond to a desire on the part of the public for longer and better pictures. For that matter, every film is a feature film if it is good enough and long enough.

Mr. Paul Kimberley, representing J. F. Brockliss, of London, was in New York last week. He is a shrewd, intelligent young man. He gave us a concise survey of the conditions of the London market—that market which is the principal centre of the art and industry in the world. On that market at the present time, short length films, that is, half-reels and one-reels, as made in this country, are becoming useless. They are not wanted and they don't sell. They must be superlatively good if they do. Mr. Kimberley named many alleged American brands of films which won't sell. In mercy to these manufacturers we suppress their names.

All the evidence tends to show that the answer to our question is in the affirmative. Better and longer pictures, not too long, are needed. Careful study of the situation persuades that the unit of the future is likely to be the five-reel picture. The two-hour-and-a half-entertainment — the two-hour-and-a-half net — is the one that practice has proven out to be the need of the public. The motion picture public is rapidly manifesting its needs, in the way that the theatre-goer manifested its needs. Those needs as they are making themselves apparent seem to supply other and additional affirmative replies to the question heading this article.

The picture is at its transition stage in every possible one of its many aspects and features. Prominent state right men and others tell us that these small-length pictures, half-reel and one-reel, are doomed. These state right men should know. They are probably correct.

A MOTION PICTURE COLLEGE OR INSTITUTE

IN another part of this week's paper, an enthusiastic young correspondent whom we personally know to be interested in the scientific progress of the motion picture, makes a suggestion to which we extend our cordial endorsement. It is this: that there should be founded a society for the study of the BENJAMIN ALTMAN, who died the other day, was a man after my own heart. He had the loftiest possible ideals. His beautiful store on Fifth avenue, the splendor of its administration, the loving care extended to his horses, excited my keen admiration when I first made the acquaintance of these marks of high-mindedness. I reasoned it out that the man at the head of these enterprises must be a virtuoso—a sincere lover of the best things in life. So it proved to be. Mr. Benjamin Altman has shown himself great in his death. He died bequeathing to this city one of the finest art collections ever gathered together by one man. In respect of being a collector he transcended the late J. Pierpont Morgan, who as a collector was too acquisitive, too eclectic, not sufficiently discriminative. Discrimination was the forte of Mr. Altman.

* * * *

MR. ALTMAN'S munificence is bound to have a great effect (strange though this may read) on the future of the motion picture. For the more you study good "still" paintings or pictures of any kind, the more you are likely to be able to understand and appreciate good motion pictures. The motion picture, as we in this paper are constantly insisting, is an artistic product. Mr. Altman got together some of the greatest artistic representations in the world. These pictures are of an educational nature. As Thomas Constable is alleged to have said, "A good picture is seen at a glance." Now if you look at good still pictures, whether they are photographs, paintings, etchings, or what not, they will lead you to appreciate cognate or allied qualities which you see in pictures which have motion.

* * * *

WOULD you be surprised to learn that, in my humble opinion, Mr. Andrew Carnegie is taking a course which, although he probably has not so calculated, will operate by helping the great cause of the motion picture? This is the endowment of the Palace of Peace in Europe and the support of the peace propaganda. I can imagine the reader screwing up his face and saying something like this: "What on earth has this to do with the motion picture?" It has a great deal to do with it, friend reader, as you will concede by the time you get to the end of these paragraphs.

* * * *

TALKING about pictures with a friend from a distant part of the world a few days ago, he interjected thusly: "For goodness sake, don't send us any more military pictures. We are sick and tired of the blues and grays—the Civil War subjects. The people that go to theatres don't want them. Tell the film makers not to make any more." I pass on the advice, dear brethren. Take it. It's good; it's sound sense. The public is sick of war subjects on the screen, just as the public is sick of war between nations.

* * * *

THE bravest soldiers hate war. General Sherman is alleged to have called it "hell." Kitchener and Roberts, the British generals who have years of conquest in all parts of the world to their credit, who have been miscalled butchers, are two of the kindest-hearted men I have met and they hate war. But war is their trade, and they ply their trade as I am plying the pen that writes this paragraph because it is my trade. The difference between Roberts and Kitchener and me is that I like my trade, though it does not make me a General or get me medals or glory.

* * * *

MR. CARNEGIE is a shrewd man. He has been shrewd in business, and although he is laughed at for many of his theories, he can foresee the time when universal peace will prevail on the earth. It must prevail. War will become so costly that no nation or two nations will be able to afford the money to play the game. So he has backed up the peace propaganda and built this Peace House for the purpose of teaching the lesson that war is waste of money. We of the general public have not yet got to Andrew Carnegie's advanced stage of thought. I am writing generally. But it is a distinct sign of progress when you have evidence forced upon you that the millions and millions of people who go to motion picture theatres are sick of wars on the screen. They are sick of the Spanish-American War, they are sick of the Civil War, they are sick of the Boer venienced himself to the extent of some hours in order to give me the double delight of looking at a picture of which the author and maker sat by me. This is the kind of enthusiasm that I like.

Mr. Thomas saw the whole of his play, as his mind conceived it, in film form. For the first time he and his friends heard and saw some of the effects referred to the play, but which were neither shown nor illustrated in it.

A man of Augustus Thomas' type is a strong addition to the all too-short list of motion picture makers. Besides being a scholar, a man of refinement, ideas and ideals, he studied graphic art in his earlier years. He knows how to compose a picture. Were he a photographer, he could take a well-composed group. If he took a single photograph, he would see that the figure would be correctly posed. If he painted, drew or sketched, he would do so in compliance with the canons of composition. He knows the value of light and shade.

Then, above all this, he has the innate aptitude for the work. Not all the scientific knowledge in the world can explain the reason for the indefinite, indefinable, "something" in the individual which makes for artistry. Poeta nascitur non fit—the poet is born, not made—so is the painter, or the sculptor, or what not. So, it appears, is the motion picture maker. Mr. Thomas has a natural aptitude for making pictures, whether they be stage pictures, motion pictures, colored pictures. He is what we conventionally call an artist. He has temperament and style. I am told that his rehearsing methods are simple. He gets his effects, he gets his actors and actresses to do things, by simple, persuasive directional powers. Some directors shout, others scream, others go black in the face. I have seen them do all this. Mr. Thomas knows what he wants, when he wants it, why, where and how he wants it. And knowing all this, he gets what he wants by mental rather than by physical means. He directs by the powers of his mind rather than by the power of his lungs and arms. He does not get mad.

Directors vary very much in their methods. Nothing to me is so fascinating as to watch a director making a picture, especially if I am familiar with the story or have acquainted myself with the recognized requirements of the story in action. One of these days I would like to see Mr. Thomas direct his pictures.

In the All-Star list of coming subjects you will find the names of many popular stage successes which are to be turned into pictures. These will succeed in virtue of their reputation with the public. Take, for example, the story by Richard Harding Davis which is being made this very moment in Cuba. This will probably be a good picture, and it will succeed largely because the book and the author are known.

But what I want to see, what many of us want to see, are motion pictures made by men of the caliber of Augustus Thomas on original stories. The process of exhaustion is going on rapidly. Old themes, old stories are being adapted for the stage, and the wonder is frequently expressed, "Where will you get your stories from in the future?" In fact, this question has been addressed to me personally many times within the last three weeks by students of the photoplay. My reply is "From brains." If men of the type of Augustus Thomas will sit down and write original stories for the motion picture, then an advance will have been made.

Meanwhile, the Director-General of the All-Star Company is to be congratulated on his rapid success. His methods deserve commendation and they deserve study. If you want to see a well-acted American film, study the acting of the story of "Arizona" in that film —study the groupings, settings, light effects. Study the scenario as it is presented in the film. "Better men and methods." This has been the cry of those of us for years who realize the possibilities of the picture. Augustus Thomas is one of the men and his methods are some of the methods that we have aspired after. He and they are here, he and they should be studied. For while there is only one Augustus Thomas, there is room in this business for very many of his type.

I hope as I think that this little appreciation, for such it is, fits the picture of the man which is here shown. Mr. Thomas is a fluent and convincing speaker. He is agreeable to listen to. I hope some day he will talk in public on the making of motion pictures. I hope to have the pleasure of hearing him, and that many others will join me in the pleasure. The Lambs Club should bear this hint in mind.

A MOTION PICTURE COLLEGE OR INSTITUTE

science and art of motion pictures. We say there is need for such a body, there is room for it, and we propose to take steps to hasten its formation.

The motion picture has its associations of manufacturers; here in this country it has its Screen Club. It recently held an exposition. In Europe there are congresses and manufacturers' associations devoted to the motion picture, but there isn't any one society anywhere devoted to the study of the picture, as an artistic, scientific, industrial product. Take any other art, science and industry, and you will find they have many societies which are in existence for these purposes. Let us select photography, upon which the motion picture is based. Here in the United States there are over 100 societies, conventions and the like meeting throughout the year, devoted to the advancement and study of still photography.

Of course, the motion picture has its exhibitors' leagues, but so far these bodies have done absolutely nothing to advance the art and science of the motion picture. They have not added to our knowledge.

What is needed here in New York is a society where those interested in the motion picture can meet and discuss the optics, chemistry, physics, art and manipulation of the motion picture; how it is made from beginning to end; how the picture is exposed, printed, developed; how it is toned, fixed, and the like.

Only this week, with the appearance of this publication in its final and permanent form as The Motion Picture News, we have been personally asked by many enthusiastic young motion picture men when we shall be able to find space for scientific articles dealing with the actual making of the picture. These will come soon.

Meanwhile we give the idea of this proposed society for the study of motion pictures our hearty support. At an early date we will see that a meeting is called so that the initiatory steps can be taken. We think that such a man as Professor E. J. Wall, who is professor of photography and motography at Syracuse University, might fittingly be the first president. Mr. Wall is experienced in society work, and his name at the head of the proposed society would be a good one, and one carrying considerable weight in the world of art and science.

War, all wars, in fact, excepting now and then a Waterloo or Gettysburg battle.

* * * *

"PEACE hath her victories no less renowned than war." The motion picture theatre is still in its infancy. Now, fellows, don't throw things at me. Read more carefully. I say the motion picture theatre is still in its infancy. Other people, you know, don't include the word "theatre." They stop at "picture." The motion picture theatre can more or less directly be made the focal point of all the best teaching and human knowledge that can be obtained — progressive teaching, uplifting teaching, teaching which influences the human mind for the better and the best. However, these military pictures, if they have disgusted people, have proved of negative advantage here and there.

* * * *

I AM not arguing against military pictures, but let's have fewer of them. Let us have pictures of military life by all means, but not war or carnage. Military training is good for the manhood of the country, and therefore good for the country as a whole. The Boy Scout movement, which is spreading around the world, is military in its theory. It will make good men of the boys, strong men, physically and mentally. We all ought to be able to bear arms and build ourselves well in body as well as in mind. Self-preservation is the first law of nature. War will probably not be abolished in the life-time of anybody on this globe; but if in addition to a realization of the costliness and the horrors of war, we also get by physical training and development to appreciate the fact that war is a useless waste of valuable human lives, then there will be another argument in favor of Mr. Carnegie's foresight. Prosit, Andrew!

* * * *

AGAIN I come around to my old theme; it is the women and children who hate war. They suffer the most. The men don't suffer; they fight and die. It is the widows and orphans made by war who suffer. Men don't suffer by fighting; it is just brutal sport to them. According to the evidence there is very little real bravery in war, very little. Mark what I write—bravery. There is plenty of savagery, which is a different thing to bravery—savagery actuated by brutal passions (and sometimes Scotch whiskey).

* * * *

THE bravest man I ever knew, however, was a soldier. He narrated the instance of his bravery to me with the modesty of a true hero. He was in a review of troops when Mr. Roosevelt was President. My friend had to stand in line with his hands by his side on a blazing hot day in July. The temperature was 116° in the sun. The rays beat down upon the head of my military friend as a big fly settled on his nose, sat there, stuck there, and stung him, as the President passed and repassed. And yet my friend dare not lift a hand to remove the torturing insect! Well, if that is not bravery, it is something better. It is endurance. And it takes a brave man to endure torture—especially torture at 116 degrees in the sun.

IMPORTANT NOTICES

In future, and commencing with this issue, The Motion Picture News will be dated one week ahead, e. g., this number bears date October 25th.

Owing to extreme and sudden pressure on our space, several articles are held over till next week, including "Construction Department," and other interesting communications.

"FEATURE FILMS": WHO FIRST USED THIS PHRASE?

At a moment when so many are writing and talking of feature films as new, it is interesting to note that the Columbia Film Company advertised "Feature Films" in the News of December 25, 1909. Can anybody antedate this?

Challenge to a Noted Judge Inspired the Latest Big Feature Picture

"A Boy and the Law" the Result of an Editor's Dare

BY WILLIAM W. YOUNG Manager, The Youth Photoplay Co.

THERE is an unusual photoplay story back of the new five-reel feature, "A Boy and the Law," that it strikes me is worth telling. That film is the result of a challenge—a challenge to a noted judge.

Last spring, as editor of The Publishers' Guide, I asked Judge Willis Brown to contribute an article on "Soul vs. Sensationalism in Newspapers," and the burden of his article was a plea for a squarer deal for the boys and girls of the country in the daily press. He pointed out that the only times our young people get into the papers are when they commit crimes or get into serious trouble of some kind. In the article he said that in his personal experience as judge he had almost daily come across child stories of an uplift character that would make excellent newspaper copy, and that no moving picture scenario writer ever could imagine stories half so good, so thrilling, so heart-appealing as some he mentioned.

That led me to invite Judge Brown to write another article, on the subject of motion pictures. It was headed "True Sensationalism in Motion Pictures," and rang so true, was so convincing, that I was pleased to see it reprinted in The Exhibitors' Times, with favorable comment by the editor.

In that article Judge Brown urged the supplanting of vicious productions with a better, more wholesome kind that would please the larger portion of motion picture patrons, tend to gain new patrons, and thereby increase the profits of the exhibitors. He pointed out that schools, settlement houses and churches are putting in motion pictures and demanding a higher type of subjects which, while entertaining, will educate, and better human conduct, and he declared that to him it seemed utter silliness on the part of motion picture producers and exhibitors not to awaken to the apparent demand of the very people to whom they must owe their future business. Among other things he said:

"As a former youth, and in behalf of the growing citizenship, I plead for common sense to enter the business of motion pictures and that at least a portion of the vast business be given to the proper exploitation of youth, and that some recognition be given the children, who, in their impressionable age, take and hold what the eye witnesses and what the story tells far more than the fixed adult.

"To dignify youth and youth achievement, to make work and goodness of heart attractive, to instill patriotism in the boy of this day, mean but to delight both youth and manhood and to grow prosperity. The money-maker in the motion picture business will be the man who plays his business to ALL, not a half or a still smaller percentage, of the people.

"If I ran a motion picture house I would consider that my greatest profit would come by inducing those who do not now visit motion picture houses to come to mine. I would get after the stay-at-homes. In pleasing them I would still hold the present patrons. I would make patrons desire to have their children see the good, pleasing and helpful things rather than have numerous parents keeping their children away from the show."

That is where the challenge of which I spoke came in. After reading the manuscript, and before publishing it in the August Publishers' Guide, I went to Judge Brown and challenged him to produce a scenario for a motion picture production that would meet the requirements stated in his article and yet would be of sufficient popular interest to appeal to the present-day motion picture theatre manager.

He accepted the dare and soon brought to me the scenario of "A Boy and the Law." It is the real life-story of Willie Eckstein, one of the many wayward boys whom Judge Brown encountered in his court and in whom he has maintained a parental interest.

So human, so thrilling in parts, so instructive and so comprehensive was this story that I immediately saw in it all of the elements of a wholesome popular photoplay, with the result that a company was organized for its production and exploitation, and for the production and exploitation of other photoplays with youth and youth achievement as the basic ideas.

I did not rely solely on my own judgment, either, but took this scenario to several noted educators, ministers, social workers, and, what is more to the point, several experienced motion picture producers and theatre owners, and all agreed that Judge Brown had in this story met all the requirements stated in his article and had outlined a photoplay that would go in any theatre on its merits and entertain as well as instruct and uplift.

I have known Judge Brown for several years and have watched his wonderful work with misunderstood boys, and I felt quite confident of the outcome of my challenge. No man has had a better opportunity to study child life than he. He is the originator of the Parental Court idea; he wrote the Juvenile (Parental) Court laws of Utah, Indiana, and other states, and is the author of the Federal "Parental and Educational Courts Bill" recently introduced into Congress by Representative Richmond P. Hobson. He was the first judge of the Juvenile Court in Salt Lake City, and later of the Parental Court of Gary, Indiana, and he organized the first Boys' City, the famous Boys' Farm near Gary, and the more famous Boys' City in Michigan. Also, he is chairman of the National Youth Achievement Committee.

Besides, he is not unfamiliar with photoplay requirements, for I have it on good authority that one of the most successful—financially and otherwise—special features that Selig ever put out was "A City of Boys," which was nothing more than a series of scenes depicting the life of the hundreds of boys in Judge Brown's Boys' City. That was merely scenes, mind you, with no plot, while in "A Boy and the Law" the activities of the boy municipality are shown as incidental to a remarkably interesting story.

This real life-story of Willie Eckstein is acted throughout by the young man himself, and Judge Brown personally appears in all of the scenes of which he was a part in real life.

The story begins ten years ago in a town in southern Russia, the early scenes showing vividly the persecution of the Jews in that country. Willie's father is prosperous, providing well for his family, consisting of a wife, little daughter and two boys, of whom Willie is the elder.

While Willie is away in school an edict is issued by the governor of the state in which his parents live to the effect that all Jews who came to the state subsequent to 1886 must leave before a certain date. Failure to do so means that all property of those remaining will be confiscated. Willie's father is among those who must leave. Willie receives a letter from his mother describing the occurrences and telling him of their new humble home in a distant state. A number of other boys also receive word of the persecution of their people by the Russians.

Willie is persuaded to join the Eneckva, a secret society, meeting in the basement of an old church in the outskirts of the town. He makes an impassioned address and immediately is recognized as a leader in the society.

In the meantime his parents are experiencing still worse persecutions in the village to which they go, and finally his father is killed by Cossacks. The grief-stricken mother writes the sad news to Willie. On receipt of the letter he is greatly excited, and at a secret meeting of the Eneckva he stirs the boys to great enthusiasm, urging them to do something against the officials who persecute, plunder and kill their parents.

Officers ransack Willie's room and find law-defying literature. Willie and two other boys are arrested and taken to jail, from which they escape in a thrilling manner down a high, rocky cliff. Willie, eluding searchers, makes his way to the home of his mother, and tells her he must flee from the country. His mother hides his student uniform and gives him a peasant's suit, and he starts for America, where he arrives after many days of anxiety for fear he might be apprehended by the police. After days of fear of deportation, Willie finally is permitted to land in free America and make his way to Salt Lake City, where his uncle is in business.

His conception of law and authority, formed in a land of persecution, making him look upon all legal restraint as oppressive, soon leads him to protest against school rules, the authority of the teacher, the dictation of his uncle and aunt, to say nothing about defying community-made laws. He finally leaves home and becomes a newsboy, a street wanderer, a frequenter of poolrooms, and a member of a rough gang of boys.

The principal of the school writes to Judge Willis Brown, of the Juvenile (Parental) Court in Salt Lake City, telling him that Willie is beyond her control and must hereafter come under the jurisdiction of his court.

The first meeting of Judge Brown and Willie occurs on a street corner. Willie is smoking a cigarette in defiance of the state law. The young gangster is surprised that the Judge does not exercise the authority he possesses, but instead talks to him in a friendly manner. He has continually refused to accompany his aunt to see the Judge, and this striking illustration of the Judge's methods greatly puzzles the boy. Finally Willie, with a crowd of boys is found in a poolroom, and all of the boys, together with the proprietor, are taken to Judge Brown's office. The scene of the Judge punishing the poolroom proprietor for debauching boys and encouraging them to disobey law; the surrender by the boys of all their tobacco, and their frank confessions to this Judge, of whom they were not afraid and to whom they would not lie, is a matter of great interest and surprise to Willie.

Judge Brown interests progressive women of Salt Lake City in the need of moral education for boys rather than punishment in a reform school. The women respond liberally and present to him an 800-acre farm to be used as a place where boys might have an opportunity to grow right—one of the most practical reform institutions ever founded in the United States.

The Judge gathers up eighteen of these misunderstood boys, Willie among them, and drives with them to the farm where they will build the City of Boys. And now comes the building up of this boy-run municipality in the Western canyon; the making of a real Boy City, and the running of a boy farm. Willie Eckstein is elected Mayor—the first Mayor of the first Boy City.

What happens to the boy that will not work, the real conduct of the farm, the payment for labor and for board in real money actually earned, the business of the bank, the amusements, the unusual real life which actually happens in this first Boy City, adds greatly and instructively to this true story.

Willie's development, his changed attitude toward law when he is put in the actual game of living, is so marked that Judge Brown sends him to an Eastern college. Later, in the State University of Missouri, Willie takes up the agricultural course. One day he receives a letter from the Judge informing him that he has purchased a farm and that as soon as the University term ends he may have the position of manager. Willingly he accepts. Then comes naturalization. Willie becomes a full-fledged American citizen and voter.

During the period of Willie's development into American citizenship his mother is struggling along in distant Russia. The boy assists her as much as he can from his scanty funds, after he has learned the wisdom of leading the better, law-abiding life. One evening, alone in his room in the country residence of Judge Brown, Willie writes to his mother, encloses the fortnightly money-order, and with it is sending his photograph. With satisfaction he rests in his easy chair and beholds a vision of the mother in the little home in far-off Russia, with the children about her, anxiously waiting for the letter from the absent boy across the sea. He imagines he sees the postman come, bringing the letter with the loving message, the money-order and the picture of the young American citizen—her boy.

The door opens and Judge Brown enters. Unheard by the dreaming young man, the Judge quietly approaches and places his hand on Willie's head. The Judge presses the boy's hands and tells him that trust and love and a square game will always win, and that his mission should be not only to live squarely because of those depending on him, but as an example for other boys; yes, and even for men and women who have not "found themselves."

That is the big point in all of Judge Brown's wonderful work with boys. That is the big point in this true life-story, with all of its excitement, its drama, its comedy, a really uplifting and thrilling true motion picture. It teaches people, boys and girls especially, how to find themselves, and that playing square and living fair is the only true road to happiness.

Above all, it is a story of youth achievement, and youth is the one thing of universal appeal in art, in literature, in drama, and most of all in moving pictures.

For the Love of a Toreador

Kleine-Cines

THIS two-reel Cines production is scheduled for release on November 4th. It is an especially delightful picture, because it deals with a fiery-blooded race in two of their native games, love-making and bull-fighting. The Cines Company some time ago invaded Seville, Spain, for the making of this picture. Spanish actors are employed and Spanish scenery is evident throughout it. The scenes, situations and effects are all worked out differently than we have been used to witnessing them, undoubtedly according to the Spanish principle. They have all the fire and atmosphere of this Southern country in them, and assist to tell a convincing story. The dancers and toreadors are of the type that are thoroughly convincing. A very splendid view of the arena in which the bull-fight is held is given, showing its thousands of people, also the streets peculiar to Spain and also the houses of this country, with their barred windows, along which white roses twine their course. The picture is well acted and tells an interesting story.

Pablo, the famous toreador, meets Lola, a Spanish dancer, at the dance-hall, and immediately he captivates Lola by his manliness and wit. Micaele, a Spanish belle, who is at the dance, extends an invitation to Pablo to call. Paquello, another toreador, very much in love with Lola, is jealous of Pablo. A quarrel is the result of this jealousy, and the two part bitter enemies.

A short time before the great bull-fight, so widely advertised throughout Seville, Spain, Pablo calls on the pretty dancer, Lola, and she, seeing a rose pulled carelessly through his sash, accuses him of his love for Micaele, pulling the rose from his sash in her jealousy and stamping on it.

Pablo visits Micaele, whose father is keeper of the bulls. He is so pleased with the six fine animals selected especially for him that he promises Micaele to sacrifice a bull in her honor in the ring. Paquello, hearing of this, calls upon Lola and arouses her jealousy.

The day of the great fight arrives, and the two toreadors saunter into the ring under the admiring eyes of the thousands. The fight follows, and Pablo succeeds in killing a huge bull, which, amid the plaudits of the multitude, he gallantly offers to Micaele. Suddenly the shouts of the crowd are arrested by the appearance of Lola, who, knife in hand, seeks to stab the smiling Micaele. Leaping forward, Pablo receives the blow intended for her. In the excitement Lola escapes.

The conscience-stricken girl, several days later, her anger cooled, goes to the home of Micaele, where Pablo lies injured, to ask his forgiveness. The hot-tempered Spainard refuses to overlook her action and tries to drive her from the house. Pleadingly, her hands upraised, Lola falls before a burning holy candle and an instant later the house is aflame. Lola is then arrested and taken away to a merited punishment.

A Family Mix-Up

Great Northern

THE trials of Mr. Newlywed and his wife form the plot of this Great Northern comedy. Newlywed asks his wife to stop at the jewelers to get his watch which he had left for repairs. On her way she pays a visit to a young girl friend who is soon to be married, and before leaving she borrows a magazine which she has picked from the library table. In this is a note from her friend's fiancee making an appointment for the same evening.

Newlywed finds the magazine, and likewise the note, and follows her out when she visits the house of her girl friend. Here Mrs. Newlywed borrows a raincoat and is not recognized by her husband. But when her girl friend emerges, hubby mistakes her for his wife, and sees her meet her admirer. In reality Jack is taking Doris to the home of his parents to introduce her as his future wife. In the midst of the rejoicing hubby rushes in and declares that "your son's sweetheart is my wife." Matters are rather complicated until Mrs.

A FAMILY MIX-UP

Newlywed enters and explanations follow. All is well that ends well, and the assembled company toast the future bride and groom.

Tiny Tim Kidnaps a Baby

Gaumont, October 30

One cannot divest himself of the idea that Tiny Tim is at times a naughty little boy. His latest escapade, though ending happily, for a while troubled two happy parents and subjected a baby to rough handling. Madame Lillie is the proud mother of a dear little girl of six months. Neither the mother nor the father can do too much to brighten its life, and the nurse is as anxious as they are to deck its path with roses. While in this mood they hear "Tiny Tim" singing in the street. The wandering minstrel, standing beneath the window, sings:

"I give thee all—I can no more,
Though poor the offering be,
My heart and lute are all the store
That I can bring to thee."

So plaintively does he warble that he touches the hearers' hearts, and is invited into the house to sing to the baby. Smitten by her charms, he tries his very best, and leaves loaded with acceptable presents. Such an impression has been made upon his susceptible heart that he returns the following day to see the baby. Julie, the nurse, does not view his visit with favor, and hustles him out. With a wry face he goes. Suddenly a daring idea seizes him; he determines to carry off the baby.

Stealthily he walks through the rooms until he reaches the nursery. He pops the baby in a sack and makes off at full speed. Nor does he stop until he feels he is safe from pursuit, and, with the child still in the sack, lies down and goes to sleep.

Julie, meanwhile, has been assisting in the packing of the luggage, as the family are off on a holiday. Then she goes for the baby, making the astonishing discovery that she has disappeared. Events now move with lightning rapidity. The distracted parents send for the police, and Inspector Richardson arrives with his trained dog, Nick, of Barrow-on-the-Hill. The sagacious animal is given a garment to get the scent, and realizes at once what is required of him. Even before the parents have finished their explanation, Nick is out of the house and pelting away in the track of "Tiny Tim."

He finds the missing pair, and, concluding that the baby is in the sack, seizes it in his mouth and rushes back. Within a few minutes of his departure the dog places the sack at the feet of the Inspector. The baby is found to be none the worse for its strange and unexpected outing. The dog, however, concludes that his task is not finished, and, returning to the spot where "Tiny Tim" is asleep, unceremoniously drags the culprit to the house.

Nick has proved his ability, and, incidentally, the value of the police dogs bred at Barrow-on-the-Hill. But "Tiny Tim" is forgiven. All concerned realize that it was love for the child that led him to cause so much anxiety, and in the last scene we see the baby, Nick, and "Tiny Tim" a happy and contented family.

Prisoner in the Harem

Blache Four-Reel Special

(Featuring the Countess de Marstini)

A picture that undoubtedly has a very favorable future. It is a "corker," that not being the best Websterian English, but it is expressive, and in this case suits the subject. It is not often that we have a real, live Countess to pose for a picture. We have them on the legitimate stage, and we have a dancer in vaudeville who is the daughter of an Earl, but there are few who act in the motion picture dramas. This is also one of the very best animal pictures ever shown, there being lions supernumerary and a tiger, who seems to know more than the plain rudiments of "acting."

Toru, a miser's daughter, is sold to the Rajah (the story being laid in India) for a bag of gold. This is much against her will, and Akbar, her lover, decides that he will help her all he can. While he is prospecting his chances, he comes across a tiger, who has the proverbial thorn in his foot, and this he removes and thus makes a friend. Together they proceed to the palace, where the tiger so scares the eunuchs that Akbar is able to get inside the palace and rescue the girl. The settings inside the palace are wonderful, and the Blache Company must have spent a great deal of money and time in fitting out the reception room.

They are caught again, and the lover is brought to the palace, where the Rajah orders him to be thrown into a cage with his tiger to be eaten alive. This not working, the lions are also let in, but the tiger protects his friend. The lions are excellent. Their actions are most realistic. When this scheme fails, the Rajah decides to kill Akbar himself. He is, however, killed by the tiger. Toru is to be sacrificed as the Rajah's widow, but at the moment that the flames are about to reach her, the English soldiers, headed by Akbar, arrive and rescue her. There is a battle and the Indians are defeated.

Countess de Marstini is undoubtedly a most beautiful woman, but she does not possess great skill as an actress, the action, however, covering her weakness. Why does not the director of the Blache films allow someone to be killed in their war scenes? In this picture it is some time before any of the shots tell, although there are three cannon in use. A. M.

The Barbary Coast

A "Progressive" Feature

THE "Barbary Coast," the famous "tenderloin" in San Francisco, where originated the turkey-trot, grizzly bear, Texas Tommy, bunny bug, and other "modern" dances which have revolutionized dancing and relegated the old-fashioned two-step and waltz to the obsolete class, is closed. But before its day ended, caused by the revoking by the San Francisco Board of Supervisors under pressure of public opinion, a motion picture archive of it was taken which, as a film showing the underworld, is probably unexcelled.

This film, made by the Progressive Film Producing Company, at the head of which is Sol Lesser, active principal in the Golden Gate Film Exchange and the newly formed Northwestern Film Exchange, was taken on the last days and nights of the old régime on the "Barbary Coast." Taken with the aid and assistance of the Chief of Police of San Francisco and under the protection of his men, it records accurately a merry, sinister life.

Fifty thousand slummers, it is estimated roughly, crowded four blocks of sidewalks during the last hours of wide-open license when Carnival was indeed King. Of poignant interest are these camera views of the crowd which, knowing that their tenderloin was to be no more, were determined to make the most of it while it lasted.

The night views are photographic masterpieces, taken as they were under the strongest of innumerable arc lights.

The Midway cafe, its name derived from the Cairo thoroughfare, where 500 dancing girls were employed, is one of the places taken both exteriorly and interiorly. There are also intimate film glimpses of the interesting "characters" which swarmed in the notorious district, including tatooers, street fakers, slummers of all social degrees, dancers of varied respectability, etc.

The film will be sold as a feature Its length very nearly approximates 1,400 feet.

STANLEY TWIST

From Dopester to Picture Maker?

Mr. Stanley Twist, who was for a considerable period identified with the Selig Polyscope Co., of Chicago, Ill., is no longer connected with that organization, and proposes at an early date initiating, so far as we can learn, a film proposition of his own. Mr. Twist is a young man of great acquirements both of education and temperament. He belongs to that young school of motion picture men which perceives the artistic possibilities of the picture and is animated by good ideas in respect, not merely of the making of the picture, but also as to its publicity end. He can make good artistic ads. As a scholar he is full of progressive ideas. We shall watch Mr. Twist's career with interest. It is constantly said that new and better men are still entering this primeval business. Mr. Twist is one of our rising hopes.

A PERILOUS RIDE

Taking a recent photoplay entitled "A Perilous Ride," Wilbert Melville, director of the Lubin studio at Los Angeles, required a small isolated-looking railroad station close to the track, with an old-fashioned chimney built against the outside. Miles and miles of adjacent country were searched but no such structure could be found. Realism not only in acting but in atmosphere is Melville's hobby. He would have the real thing and no makeshifts. A piece of the Salt Lake railroad track was rented and the Lubin director built himself a complete depot of the primitive persuasion, inside and out, signal tower, platform, telegraph connections and every detail necessary. Rude as the structure was, it cost over $1,000, all just to take one scene in the picture which the director insisted must be right or nothing.

Motion Picture Exhibitors' Association of Greater New York

THE largest attendance of New York exhibitors took place at a meeting of the Motion Picture Exhibitors Association of Greater New York, held in their rooms, No. 136 Third avenue, on Thursday, October 9th, Samuel H. Trigger presiding.

When the meeting was duly opened and the secretary's report had been read and adopted, Mr. Grant W. Anson, treasurer of the above organization, stated that the profits accruing from the exposition amounted to $8,295, out of which $2,750 had been sent to the National League to pay the railroad fare of the national vice-presidents who attended the New York convention, at the rate of five cents a mile one way.

Two hundred and sixty dollars ($260) in cash and checks had been paid to Mr. Clem Kerr and Mr. Lou R. Thomas, and one hundred and fifty dollars ($150) counsel fees, the balance of $5,135, was paid to the New York Local, out of which a check for $2,567.50 had been paid to Mr. Davis, state treasurer of the New York State Exhibitors Association, and another check of $600, being the per capita taxes due to the State Association by the New York City Local. Here Mr. Anson stated that the New York Exhibitors during the year that we had been associated with the National League, had paid to that body over four thousand dollars ($4,000), and asked what we had received in return? This question, however, was dropped as we are not desirous of having any controversy with that body.

After the treasurer's report had been accepted as read, the following resolutions were unanimously carried:

Whereas, our business necessitates our utmost assistance in electing a Mayor who is not, and never has been, opposed to the working class, but has dealt fairly towards all, and whose character has always been above reproach—a man with liberal ideas who can give us a liberal administration, therefore, be it

Resolved, that a letter be sent to each exhibitor throughout Greater New York asking for their co-operation and assistance to elect the Honorable Edward E. McCall for Mayor at the forthcoming election.

The following resolution was also adopted:

That a campaign committee composed of one hundred and fifty exhibitors representing every assembly district in Greater New York with Harold W. Rosenthal as chairman, be appointed for the purpose of visiting every picture theatre and having the slides of Mr. McCall displayed upon the screen at every performance and also procure speakers for those theatres to give a three-to-five-minute lecture daily.

That whereas the fire risks in a picture theatre has become practically nil and the insurance rates retained for same are a higher percentage than those of any other business, be it

Resolved, that a committee wait on the Board of Fire Underwriters and endeavor to adjust matters so that we may have an equitable and just rate as compared to other lines of business. Committee appointed: Mr. Hollander, Mr. Landau, Edward Valensi, Frank Tichenor, J. A. Koerpel, Mr. Tisch.

That whereas the old block system of procuring a program whereby the exhibitors had a full knowledge of what reels they were to receive a week or ten days in advance, and whereas the said block system has not been in use by a number of exchanges, and there are quite some petty annoyances in a number of the exchanges owing to the exhibitors being unable to secure their programs in time to open their theatres, be it

Resolved, that a committee wait on the managers of all exchanges and endeavor to have a system inaugurated whereby all reels can be collected at night and they can then be ready for delivery early the following morning, and also to ask said managers whether or not the old block system would meet with their approval as we consider it very essential to our business and mutually beneficial to both manufacturers, exchanges and exhibitors. Committee appointed: Mr. Lee A. Ochs, Mr. C. R. Martineau, Mr. Bauerenfreund and Mr. S. H. Trigger.

Following the passage of the above resolutions, the chairman of the Ball Committee, Mr. A. Coleman, stated that he had sold over one thousand tickets and several boxes for the ball to be held December 15th at Terrace Garden.

Mr. William Brandt, chairman of the Program Committee, reported progress to the extent that over one thousand dollars worth of ads had been received to date, and that estimates for our souvenir programs would be in by next meeting, at which time a vote would be taken as to which printer should receive the contract.

The meeting was then adjourned.

East New York Branch Meeting

A meeting of the East New York branch of the Motion Picture Exhibitors Association of Greater New York was held at the Empire Theatre, No. 11A Sumpter street, Brooklyn, on Monday night, October 13th; Mr. William H. Hollander in the chair.

There were forty-five local members present and the following speakers were given the courtesy of the floor and spoke on the forthcoming municipal campaign and the effects it will have on business in general and the motion picture industry in particular. Mr. Frank Mann, candidate for Assembly, Sixty-fifth Aldermanic District; Mr. Thomas L. Ingraham, candidate for Assembly, Twenty-third Assembly District, and Mr. Joseph Monahan, Democratic candidate for Alderman of the Sixty-third Aldermanic district.

Mr. Philip Kaplan, of the Theatre and Motion Picture Review, spoke on the educational advantages of the motion picture.

A committee appointed at the last meeting to report on all East New York theatres in reference to number of reels run and the admission fee, stated that all exhibitors in that section were running four reels of pictures for five cents, and on Saturdays and Sundays were running five reels for ten cents, and that the whole of the Eastern New York organization were working in harmony and unison.

"Checkers" to Be Produced by All-Star Feature Corporation

"CHECKERS," with Thomas W. Ross in the title rôle, is definitely announced as the next release of the All-Star Feature Corporation, whose first release, "Arizona," was put on the market about three weeks ago.

As a novel by Henry M. Blossom, Jr., "Checkers" first came into popularity some ten years ago. Its story had to do with racing, and the novel had also a strong love interest. Stirred by the great popular success of his novel, Mr. Blossom dramatized it, and it was produced in 1903 with Thomas W. Ross, who will appear in the photoplay version, as the star. The play met with immediate and immense success, and certain of its speeches have passed into slang which is still preserved in the speech of the street. There are few theatregoers who have not a keen recollection of the scene in the Arkansas grocery store where Mr. Ross as "Checkers" says: "Gee, ain't it hell to be poor." And there are few who have forgotten the great betting ring scene with its exciting "Come on, Remorse." The play was used as a starring vehicle by Mr. Ross for two whole years, when it was done on the popular price circuits for two more years, after that passing into stock, where it has been a great favorite ever since.

From the play a scenario has been prepared by Lawrence McGill and Eustace Hale Ball, and working from this scenario the new production for the camera has been staged under the personal supervision of Augustus Thomas, director-general of productions for the All Star Feature Corporation. The photoplay will be in six parts and will contain more than two hundred scenes. The race track scenes were staged at Havre-de-Grace and at Laurel, Md., during the race meetings there, and in the great betting ring scene there were employed hundreds of actors. The cast of principals was selected personally by Mr. Thomas and contains many well-known Broadway names. Playing "Pert Barlow," opposite to Mr. Ross is Katherine La Salle; and William A. Williams will be seen as "Push Miller," the race horse tout.

The staging of "Checkers" was completed by Mr. Thomas just in time for him to catch the steamer for Santiago, Cuba, where he is now putting on "Soldiers of Fortune" for the All Star Feature Corporation; this play being the third release scheduled by the All Star and reported as due about December 1st.

A SOCIETY WANTED

New York, Oct. 13, 1913.

To the Editor:

Sir:

The rate of growth of the motion picture industry is so great that it seems to me that if a society could be organized for the purpose of advancing the science of motion pictures it would be a great benefit to the inventors as well as the manufacturers.

This society should be organized at an early date and, having monthly lectures on the various motion picture apparatuses by the different authorities, the advantages derived by becoming a member of such an organization are manifold.

You are assured of my co-operation with you in the forming of this organization. Wishing you every success, believe me to be,

Respectfully yours,

SAMUEL WEIN,
51 East 98th Street,
New York City.

Miss Clara Kimball Young appears in the two-reel feature, "The Test," with Harry Northrup, which will be released in October. It is considered one of the Vitagraph's best dramas.

Standard Exchange Sold

THE selling of the Standard Film Exchange, of Chicago, owned by Joseph Hopp, to the Universal Film Mfg. Co., which has been pending for the past month or more, was consummated on Saturday, October 11th. While the papers were signed on this date, the actual date of the Universal ownership was October 6th. By this deal the Universal has added another exchange to their large list, and gives them absolute control of Chicago from the standpoint of the booking of their program. Although the Laemmle Film offices are still under individual ownership, a harmonious working agreement is in effect between the three offices that is equivalent to Universal control. In view of the fact that Carl Laemmle is president of the Universal, and one of its biggest stockholders, the Laemmle offices will remain as they are until other exchanges buying the Universal program are purchased, as it is the aim of the Universal Film Ffg. Co. to either own or control the exchanges.

The purchase of the Standard Film Exchange, of Chicago, included the branch office at Louisville and also the Milwaukee Film Exchange, of Milwaukee, Wis.

Mr. George Magie, who has been in Chicago for some time, looking after the interests of the Universal Film Mfg. Co. in the purchase of the Anti-Trust Film Service Co., will make Chicago his headquarters, with offices in the Standard Film Exchange. Mr. Magie will act as a district manager, controlling and overseeing the business of the Universal throughout the Middle West. There will be no changes made in the working force of the Standard. Mr. Will Hopp will continue as manager and Mr. Harthill as assistant manager. Mr. Joseph Hopp will stay with the exchange for several weeks in an advisory capacity.

Mr. Joseph Hopp has an interest in the Union Film Co., of Chicago, Cleveland, Des Moines and Detroit. He states, however, that he will not take an active interest in this company, but will leave the direction to other hands. He states that he has no definite plans for the future, as four good offers in a manufacturing and importing way have been presented him. He has not decided his course for the future, but states that he is going to remain in the motion picture business in one of its branches.

Mr. Hopp is listed among the best known exchange men in the business, and is known by practically everyone connected with the industry. He has had a very successful career in the film business, starting some seven years ago with very small office room in the Unity Building. Of course, like everyone else who has made a success, it was predicted that he could not put it over. He certainly put it over, and put it over big.

SCENE FROM "THE LURE OF NEW YORK"
(Four-reel Feature Film New York Film Company)

FOR THOSE WHO WORRY O'ER PLOTS AND PLAYS

By William Lord Wright

Good Things Coming

WE have arranged for a series of chats with the editors of Universal, Eclair, Kinemacolor, etc. These communications are not glittering generalities but contain some "hot stuff" calculated to help the script writer in his work. The two-reel script, author's credit, technical form, etc., will be touched upon by these ladies and gentlemen. Don't miss any of these goldmines of practical information.

Persona Non Grata

Fake correspondence schools and writers known as "school graduates" are persona non grata in these editorial offices. Kindly take notice:

Universal Film Manufacturing Company.

Selig Polyscope Company.

Eclair Film Company.

Lubin Manufacturing Company.

The Selig Policy

The Selig Polyscope Company, of Chicago, through Editor J. F. Pribyl sends the department the following interesting and meaty statement: "Will say that we do not encourage the so-called correspondence schools for scenario writers, and rarely purchase manuscripts sent out by photoplay brokers. We aim to do business direct with authors and read all manuscripts submitted to us by free lance writers. Occasionally we make a 'find,' and encourage such writer in every way possible. We favor crediting authors of meritorious scripts on both screen and poster, and are now following this rule. We like all our scenarios written fully, with a comprehensive synopsis. Usually scripts are edited before submitting to producers, and we endeavor to have our producers follow the scripts as closely as possible. Wish you every success." That the Selig editorial department likes all scripts written fully will be interesting news to many writers. This means that Selig editors are willing to give the author reasonable latitude in developing his ideas and will appreciate all suggestions, references, etc., embodied in the script that will tend to make clear the original idea. Synopsis need not necessarily be confined to 300 words, but we are of the opinion that a story can be readily described in that number. We believe the time is coming when editors and producers will look kindly on the more fully written script; we think the technical form of plot presentment is slowly being altered. More of the successful authors are shifting from the bare outline of action to the more complete detail which is necessary sooner or later, if the real idea and the atmosphere meant by the author is to be completely retained by the director. Miss Justice, who has written some very acceptable stories for Selig, writes out her plots fully and freely, and is not chary of writing in suggestions and hints which she believes will be useful to the producer. Bannister Merwin and some others write scripts full of minute detail, and we are always guilty of the trick unless completely frowned upon by editor and producer. We repeat, that with multiple reel stories in demand, the more detailed story will become essential. This does not mean a verbose script teeming with petty dialogue and useless words. It does mean a script the action and story so fully written out by the author that there will be no opportunity to escape his honest inspiration.

As to Story Rights

A New Orleans photoplaywright wishes a list of the concerns which permit authors the fiction rights on stories sold. There is no such list. It is possible that the editor buying the picture-play plot may consent to surrender the fiction rights, but this question should be taken up with the purchaser when the author's release form is received. The correct method to obtain a copyright on a novel or short story is to comply with the provisions of the Copyright Act of March 2, 1913. The full name, address, street and number of the copyright claimant should be furnished in the case of each application sent to the copyright office for registration of a claim to copyright. Address your application to Thorvald Solberg, Register of Copyrights, Library of Congress, Washington, D. C. Your postmaster will frank this application if you so request. In return you will receive complete application cards and other instructions.

The Work of a "Graduate"

The following is a verbatim copy of a scenario received at the editorial office of the Universal Film Manufacturing Company, the author mentioning in his letter that he is a graduate of the National Authors Institute:

THE HALL OF FAME

Roy McCardle, the humorist, wrote the first moving picture plot about fourteen years ago.

Editor C. B. Hoadley, Universal staff, is now collaborating with Captain Peacock on some fine stories, after enjoying a well-earned vacation in Connecticut.

George Hall, well-known author, has gone over to England to write stories for Director Herbert Brenon.

Horace Vinton, well-known script editor and author, is in Texas this winter as director for a prominent feature film company.

Harvey Gates, late of the Dramatic Mirror, and a versatile chap, has become an associate editor of the Universal Weekly.

Harold Hoadley, youngest son of "Pop" Hoadley, and a chip off the old block, is making good as a script writer. He comes by the writing germ honestly and just cannot help it.

Jack Byrne, as clever a writer as he is a director, has joined Warner's Features and will go south to write and direct his own pictures.

Walter MacNamara, one of the standbys in the Imp studio, is the latest entrant among photoplaywrights to turn out librettos. He is also going to take the stump for Mitchel, New York candidate for mayor. Truly, we are becoming a versatile bunch!

The thousands of admirers of Giles R. Warren, author and director, will be interested to know that he is turning out some exceptionally good "Juno" features for the Whitman-Warren Film Co. The first release will be awaited with interest.

George Tucker is just another case of a script man making good as a director. He is being assisted by Walter MacNamara. George L. is visualizing some wonderful pictures at present and his many friends are glad.

A Word to Miss Jessie Kinerock

Miss Jessie Kinerock—never mind her address—asks if it is strictly essential to one ambitious to become a motion picture actress to "graduate from a course." She believes that if "graduation" is not essential for success that she will journey to New York City and engage in the "lucrative profession." Jessie says she understands that the work is "easy and attractive."

Jessie, remain with your mother. The great big city of New York is no place for a friendless girl. In your town you probably have a sweetheart, and we will bet something that he doesn't wish you to become an actress. The advertisements you read in some publications, Jessie, about "colleges for motion picture actresses" are fraudulent. First, the art cannot be successfully taught by the correspondence route, and secondly, the supply of motion picture actresses and actors far exceeds the demand. There are many capable actors and actresses, having years of dearly bought experience, now on the waiting lists of the various motion picture studios. Do you think there is an opportunity there for an inexperienced girl? When you read those misleading advertisements, do not be deceived. Take our word for it, Jessie, there is nothing they can teach you,—we know. Continue to enjoy the work of your favorite motion picture actors in the "Idle Hour" at home. You would probably break your mother's heart were you to steal away to New York as your letter intimates you might do. And, Jessie—your own heart would, maybe, be broken before you returned home.

From "Pop" Hoadley

"Pop" Hoadley, friend to the script writer, stops work on a two-reel Christmas feature he is rounding into shape long enough to say something of interest to you: "The crying need just now with Universal is for animal stuff in which an elephant, tigers, lions, camels, snakes, a chimpanzee, and other varmints can be featured. The lions and tigers are comparatively wild, but the elephant and the 'monk' are well trained. The company is going to film a series of pirates and sea stories. Scripts dealing with political intrigue will be considered—big, gripping themes with plenty of action-melodramas preferred—that are up-to-date with a metropolitan atmosphere. We are in the market for stories of the Jews and Russians, but the stories must ring true and the writer must thoroughly understand his subject. The two-reel story to be considered by us must have several 'wallops,' not a single-reel plot padded. I would advise the novice to stick to the short story that can be told in 1,000 feet. The most of the extra reel scenarios are written by men on the staff. King Baggott, home from England, will surely work in two and three-reel pictures. George Tucker may direct, and stories for a strong male lead will be in demand. Stories for Florence Lawrence will be considered. They must be written for a woman lead, of course. She will appear in only multiple reel pictures, and the stories must be strong ones. Harry Solter, who is directing her productions, likes society dramas with a strong and unique plot with the bulk of the work cut out for his star. He is a fine judge of a story and difficult to please. Stories must be exceptionally good for him." Remember that in submitting plots for Universal stars that exceptionally good work is essential, just as it is for any of the other first-class concerns. Universal is paying satisfactory prices for acceptable scripts, and we can assure writers that they will receive courteous and prompt treatment.

Trouble for Eugene B.

Eugene Berry Watt, operating "The National Authors' Institute," in a small office in the Gaiety Theatre Building, this city, is the first of his kind to be reached by the postoffice authorities. This is a good work merely begun. The postal secret service men say that Watt and his associates have obtained about twenty thousand dollars in a couple of years through their system of treating would-be playwrights. The "Institute" has advertised extensively in magazines and newspapers (not the Motion Picture News) soliciting the submission of manuscripts and promising immediate fame and fortune to all "clients." Fees, ranging from $2 to $20, have been required from the ambitious and inexperienced writers who have "fallen" for the game. The complainant in the specific case in which Watt has been arrested is a cook in Paterson, N. J. She has been paying a large part of her small savings to have the "Institute" place her "dramas." Watt was arrested and convicted in 1908 on a charge of using the mails for fraudulent purposes. On account of his youth he was paroled from the Federal prison at Atlanta. One week after his release he is said to have opened the "National Authors' Institute." Here is Watt's ad:

Music and the Picture

Suggestions Invited, Questions Cheerfully Answered

Address: Music Department, The Motion Picture News

WHY is it that an orchestra can cue a vaudeville act, no matter how silly it might be?

Why is it that the very same orchestra cannot cue a good motion picture?

To solve this sort of problem I visited a number of vaudeville theatres of late. The Lincoln Square Theatre, Sixty-fifth street and Broadway, New York, offered a program which gave me a good chance to make a fair comparison.

When I reached the theatre an amusing Essanay film was on the screen; I did not see the title but it was depicting some fun at a summer beach. The orchestra went along without any attention to what was taking place on the curtain.

The Essanay film was followed by the Macks in a dancing and song act.

The orchestra started its work. When the Macks would sing, the musicians would play the music of the song; no matter how many songs the Macks had, the orchestra was there on time with the goods. It was the same for the different dances; the orchestra followed them as correctly as did the songs.

Why, then, was the orchestra able to follow the antics of the Macks in their vaudeville act, and could not play the picture of Essanay?

The worst had to come. The act called "The Princess Minnecome," a sort of Indian affair, appeared on the stage and the orchestra did some very clever work. This Indian act is excellent and is worth the whole admission on account of the good singing, and the old Indian chief shows himself a great master of the guitar. His playing called for several encores. I can truly state that never before have I heard such wonderful guitar playing.

The orchestra did not go on a wild rampage while the Indian was playing his guitar, but the musicians had the common sense to stop entirely, to listen and enjoy this great guitar playing.

During the act "Princess Minnecome" the orchestra followed correctly both the songs and the dances. It was clever work on the part of the musicians, and this excellent music, with the beautiful settings and light effects, enhanced the beauty of the act.

On top of the "Princess Minnecome" came a Western picture of Pathe Freres, "The Secret Treasure."

The orchestra, most likely tired of having paid such constant attention to the vaudeville act, neglected themselves. The musicians started on a selection, and without the least respect to the picture on the screen they kept to the same tune.

When the miner, wounded in a fight with the Mexicans, is brought to his cabin and dies in the arms of his daughter. When the faithful Indian servant is captured and tortured by the Mexicans. When the Indian saves the gold of the dead miner and refuses a reward from the daughter, etc., the same music was played all the time. No slow movements, no hurry-up music, no plaintive tones according to the scenes, but the same thing as if the music had been furnished by an automatic musical instrument. No sound effects, no firing of guns, trot of horses, crackling of flames when the cabin is destroyed by the flames started during the attempt of one of the Mexicans to assault the girl.

This Pathe production was butchered by the orchestra, while it could have been made a hit like the vaudeville act, "Princess Minnecome," if the musicians had been willing to pay as much attention to the picture as they did to the act.

The reason is very simple. If the orchestra had butchered the vaudeville act like they did the picture, the actors taking part in the act would have raised much fuss; as this act, "Princess Minnecome," is their bread and butter and is booked in other theatres, it could not stand for a fiasco at the Lincoln Square Theatre.

On the other hand, both the Pathes and the Essanays are very indifferent as to the music given with their productions. As they never make a complaint the orchestra does not care, and as long as there is no one to knock, why should the musicians tire themselves to try to enhance the beauty of a picture by giving it the proper music?

Someone will answer me: "Vaudeville acts are changed twice per week, while the pictures are changed daily, consequently, when the orchestra has to play the same vaudeville act from three to four days in succession, the musicians can give it more care than when they have to cue new pictures daily." While this answer would not be out of place in certain theatres, as I fully realize that it is hard work on the part of the leader to cue new pictures, it is not the case with the Lincoln Square Theatre, where the pictures, like the acts, are changed twice per week.

Theatrical booking agents have no standing orders with the vaudeville artists as our film exchanges have with the manufacturers. A booking agent will find engagements for good artists, but he does not sign contracts with poor artists to palm them off on the vaudeville managers, while the film exchanges, with their standing orders, have to force bad and good films on the exhibitors.

A bad film, like a good one, must make its round, must yield so much money in three months to pay the expenses and profits of the film renter. Consequently, no matter if a good production is enhanced by some appropriate music, the said film follows its regular route just the same and does not earn more money to the exchange; same as a bad film, butchered with some noisy music, follows its route just the same without decreasing the profits of the renter.

The exhibitors and musicians say to themselves: "If good music does not prolong the life of a picture and if noisy music does not shorten the rental power, why waste time, money and energy to try to play the picture?"

Vaudeville is different. The same act can fall down in a couple of weeks on account of bad music, while it can be made the success of years if properly accompanied.

If the vaudeville artist is going to see that the orchestra is going to do the right thing, to keep the reputation of the act, the film manufacturer is quite indifferent, as the quality of the music does not change his standing orders with the film exchanges, nor does it change the number of his releases.

I am pleased with my visit to the Lincoln Square Theatre, as I had a chance to see two Western plays in succession, one in a vaudeville act, the other in motion pictures, enabling me to make a just and impartial comparison.

When in 1910 I reviewed the "Penitent of Florence" at Mr. Geo. Kleine's offices, Chicago, I asked Mr. Sam Levin, manager, and Mr. W. E. King, leader, of the Orpheum Theatre, to see the film and to prepare some special music. These gentlemen took my advice and prepared the most elaborate and appropriate musical program, including organ, mandolin solos, choir voices behind the curtain, etc. The film and show were much advertised. It was an immense but ephemeral success. Mr. G. Kleine did not sell more prints, the exchange did not yield more, because on account of the daily change the "Penitent of Florence" had, like all other films, to follow its scheduled route.

Next week I will be pleased to state how the Bijou Dream, of Boston, and the Colonial, of Norwich, are making a success with their music.

THE SCARLET LETTER
Kinemacolor (Three Reels)

In dealing with such a subject as the "Scarlet Letter" it is very necessary that gloves should be used, so that the prudish feelings of a number of people may not be injured. The "unwritten law" has ever been a ticklish subject, both in literature and in drama, and especially in motion pictures, where there is not the chance to twist words and phrases.

Hawthorne, in writing this masterpiece, was able to twist his phrases so that the effect, though not diminished, was not as bald as it must necessarily appear in pictures. But the strength of the piece lies in the fact that although we know that the Minister and Hester are thoroughly wrong, that they are not deserving of our sympathy, if all the ethical rules are right, we nevertheless feel for them at the end with furtive eye-wipings. They are indeed strange objects for love.

How the Minister, knowing the terrible punishment in the eyes of the world that awaits him, will not confess his complicity in the affair, letting the girl take all the public blame. How he brands himself, and how the husband, returning, knows him to be the man, and how finally before the whole world he takes the blame, is clearly and wonderfully told. The story is in every way a truthful production of the original; the costuming and settings are truly wonderful. The photography is of the usual good quality. The beautiful moonlight water scene which acted as a finale was superb in its splendor. A truly notable release. The Rev. Arthur Dimmesdale was played by Charles Perley, and Miss Linda Griffith played the girl. The "Scarlet Letter" as a theme is perennially popular with film makers, and the latest effort does entire justice to the subject.

A Message from Mars

(United Kingdom Film)

THIS is the first production of this company in the United States, and one cannot but predict a prosperous future when such good taste is shown in their primary choice. "A Message from Mars" has been played in the legitimate form in this country by nearly every stock company, but I cannot remember to ever have seen it in the "cinematograph version," as our over-seas cousins call it. Charles Hawtrey is playing the leading part in this latest production, the same as he played in the original. The story seems to be too well known to need any retelling; suffice it to say that in this version many parts have been added, though none of the original lines have been greatly altered. There are a number of new scenes, but there is the same old story told in four parts. The first part introduces the messenger (C. Holman Clark) leaving Mars, having been banished until he shall reform some mundane person. He is met again in Horace Parker's house, where he starts his cure of the latter's selfishness. The next part follows his cure, and shows how it is working, and in the last he is seen to leave Horace and reenter Mars in peace with all. The settings are especially remarkable for their fitness, and the photography is good. As to the cast, the simple fact that Mr. Hawtrey has the lead is sufficient recommendation. The scenario adaption is by J. Walter Waller from the original text by Richard Ganthony. The whole production abounds with trick work and "fade-outs," with a few double exposures for good measure. Mr. McEnnery is the local representative; his address is the second floor of the Heidelberg Building.

PILLORY SCENE FROM "THE SCARLET LETTER"

On the Road

SPRINGFIELD, MASS. In a previous issue I made the remark that few theatres had appropriate names. I have found a new example in Springfield, Mass. There is a theatre called the "Globe," but its proper name should be "Alhambra," on account of its front being very much on the Moorish order. It is a very fine front, and I would have been pleased to secure a photograph of it for the benefit of the readers of this paper if too numerous posters had not been in the way of the camera.

The "Lion," also displaying too many posters, has nothing ferocious about it to warrant such a name. It is a plain square store arch, practically minus ornaments. The only lion in the place may be the manager, who tries to capture all the business of the main street by offering, as he calls them, "Bargain Days—Ten (10) Reels for 5 Cents." Two reels for one cent is certainly enough of an alluring proposition to enter the cave of the lion.

The "Bijou." No better and no more appropriate name could have been found for such a beautiful and refined theatre. The name Bijou is not new, on the contrary it is rather common, as it has been used without discernment. Bijou is a French name, the translation of which is "Jewel," and the Bijou Theatre, of Springfield, is a real jewel in the crown of cinematography.

For more particulars of this cozy theatre I refer the reader to the Construction, Advertising and Appearance departments of our next issue.

The "Princess" is an old small house on the main street, but entirely remodeled, redecorated and under a new management. The Princess is doing a good business and there is a reason, as the picture is well projected on a new Mirroroide screen. While the exterior of the Princess Theatre is rather pretentious, it is a good design, and the lobby is not disgraced by an abuse of posters.

While the New Broadway Theatre is not a motion picture house, it is a fine specimen of theatrical architecture. It is imposing, yet simple and of good taste. At night it is a beautiful sight, with the numerous lights in the cornices.

The "Edisonia" is a new house, with about six hundred seats. Everything is new and fresh and looks very attractive. The Edisonia is owned and managed by Mr. R. F. Smith, who also owns the "Mirror." The name Mirror was given to the theatre because Mr. Smith is a great believer in the merits of the Mirror screen, and while he is waiting for a new Mirror screen from Shelbyville, Ind., for his new Edisonia, he is using the one he had in his old house, the Princess.

The "Plaza" is a pretty good-sized theatre, about 800 seats. The exterior is of good design, with a fine electric sign. The Plaza is combination vaudeville and pictures, under the management of Mr. John M. Carney, and owned by the Goldstein Bros. It would be well for the doorman of the Plaza to go to a military school or be a member of the local militia, to find out that cuffs are not allowed on trousers, especially when they are so high as to show the ankle, and that military discipline wants the uniform coat buttoned.

The Reel, Pictorial Subway, Lyric and Gaiety complete the list of theatres of the main business section of Springfield.

The "Nelson" (Fox's house), Court Square, Gilmore and Poli's are, like the Broadway, regular play-houses, not much interested in motion pictures, except to show a few reels once in a while.

Worcester, Mass.

Worcester had the reputation of being a very slow and conservative town, worse than old Philadelphia.

I have not been able to ascertain if the above opinion is still in force in general business lines, but as to motion pictures I can state that Worcester is far ahead of other cities, both in beautiful theatres and in deceptive schemes.

The "Pleasant" Theatre is unique, and if I use this word it is because the Pleasant has features of its own, unknown in other places.

While it is the simplest theatre, it is in its great simplicity a most beautiful and refined motion picture house.

The admission is 10 cents and 15 cents, and I will surprise the reader in repeating the statement made by Mr. E. W. Lynch that his business has greatly increased under the advanced rates. In other words, an advance in the price of admission has decided many members of the better class to patronize motion pictures, who in former days would not visit the small and cheap dumps.

Mr. Lynch fully admits that he had to offer something extra to warrant the advance, but he did not follow the foolish notion of the foolish exhibitors of adding to the programme. The extra inducement offered by Mr. Lynch is in the shape of the most refined theatre and of the most courteous service.

For the details of this beautiful theatre, I refer the reader to the Construction and Appearance departments of this issue.

The other side—the deceiving game—is very discouraging, as it seems that while the Pleasant Theatre is doing its best to uplift motion pictures and place them on a higher plane, the Family Theatre is doing its utmost to pull down the industry with a programme of eleven (11) reels for 5 cents. Such an announcement works well. There is a rush for the ticket office, where you are told that it is 5 cents general admission and 5 cents extra for the seat. A neat little game, but as you do not wish to look cheap, you pay the extra nickel.

What is the result? You pay 10 cents to see eleven reels run at such a speed as to hurt the eyesight, while for 5 cents you could have enjoyed a shorter programme, it is true, but of a better selection of pictures, better projected and with more comfort at the Majestic.

The law of Massachusetts, requiring an intermission between each reel, is a good thing for Worcester, as no human being could stand the bad flickerings of the eleven reels at the Family without an intermission of at least a couple of minutes between each reel. Same with the ventilation. No one could remain in such a poorly ventilated theatre for a show of eleven reels if the ushers were not to throw open the exit doors during the intermissions.

After two reels at the Family Theatre I had to walk out, as my eyes could not stand for much more flickers, and with a rather mucky day on the outside, the interior atmosphere was too overcharged for me to enjoy the show.

Worcester is not rich in motion picture theatres. A few doors below the Family Theatre is the Majestic, a smaller but very neat, clean, well-managed house. The projection is very good, practically free of flicker; the attendants are very courteous, and the ventilation excellent. On account of its small seating capacity, 325 chairs, the Majestic cannot follow the foolish policy of long programmes, and suffers much from the unscrupulous competition of the Family

The New Park and the small Bijou are the other houses devoted to motion pictures. The Poli, the Plaza, the Franklin, are regular vaudeville and road houses. The Worcester, the opera house of the place, is showing Geo. Kleine's "Quo Vadis."

Boston, Mass.

I was not much impressed with the motion picture show business of Boston.

While some theatres of Boston have taken up the fad of posters, most of them are moderate in their advertising, one of them, the Bijou Dream, using no posters.

The theatres in general did not appeal to me; they are not inviting, they look a good deal like the narrow, crooked streets of good Boston. Most of the theatres show vaudeville, or have many poor singers, and this is done to satisfy the law, which requires an intermission between each reel. As the cultured class does not care for cheap vaudeville acts, this may explain the reason why Boston, with streets overcrowded with shoppers, has not a larger number of good houses for the real lovers of motion pictures. The theatres of Boston seem to be patronized by the common people and not by the residents of the celebrated Back Bay. It is true to add that the good folks of Boston, who are so strict on the observance of the Sabbath, are not so particular as to the work done during week days. For instance, too many theatres follow the fad of the Family, of Worcester; they announce a big show at 5 cents, and you have to pay extra for a seat. The would-be honest managers have signs in front of the ticket offices reading: "All Seats Free."

When I saw a sign in front of the Washington Theatre reading, "The Finest and Best-Equipped Theatre in the United States," I thought that the sign was worth the admission. I am sorry to state that it was a deception.

A good architect could have used the too much width of the auditorium to provide small stores on busy Washington Street, and could have added to the length of the place by taking several feet from a too large foyer.

If the reader will turn to the Construction department he will find that the arrangement of the curtain of the Washington Theatre does not deserve the name of being the finest and best-equipped theatre in the country.

The projection is good, as they have a direct throw by having the operating booth located at the end of the main floor.

At the Beacon Theatre the ushers seem to know their duties. They are alert to show seats, to memorize the vacant places, to ask the patrons to rise so as to allow other persons to pass, etc. It was a pleasure to see them work. On the other hand, the ushers do not seem to be posted on the military style, as they keep their uniform coat opened at the neck, because they want to wear turn-down collars.

The Beacon Theatre has, like the Pleasant, of Worcester, the screen on the back of the stage, with the sides or wings of the stage forming a shadow box. This shadow box has too much bright gold and light colors, and as the heavy frame of the screen is already of a too bright gold, the picture is not shown to the best advantage. The screen proper is too large for the size of the auditorium.

In the Construction department I give a diagram of the sidelights of the Beacon Theatre. They are regular clusters of five bulbs each, throwing too much light on the side seats and shining in the eyes of the spectators.

The Olympia is the big theatre, giving an extra long programme (vaudeville and pictures).

The owners of the Olympia are erecting a new theatre to be called Olympia also. This new house will seat 3,200 persons, according to an immense billboard covering the whole front of the new place. The billboard states also that the theatre will be provided with escalators, or moving stairs, fountains of sparkling ice-water, big shows, small prices, a full orchestra with a $150,000 pipe-organ, etc. As many persons may doubt the cost of such a pipe-organ, I repeat the figures ($150,000) to show that it is not a typographical error.

Like many other men I have been opposed to giving the vote to women. To-day I am compelled to change my views, because from my own experience in the motion picture game I can safely say that if women would put as much common sense in the management of state or municipal affairs as they do in the motion picture show business we would have cleaner politics and less taxes to pay. In the motion picture field women seem to have more brains than men, and less of this terrible petty jealousy which is creating such great havoc in many centers. Women are more charitable than men, more patient, more conciliating and less spiteful.

Out West I had the pleasure of being acquainted with a number of ladies who were very successful in the management of theatres. In the East I am getting acquainted with such ladies. One of the most pleasant chats I ever had on motion pictures was with Miss L. Montgomery, of the Hippodrome Theatre, of Passaic, N. J., when she gave me her views on the pictures in general, and as I then stated at the time, her argument was the best and most concise that I ever heard.

Mrs. J. Clement, of the Bijou Dream, of Boston, has been another revelation to me.

Suppose that I should advertise as follows:

THEATRE FOR SALE—Frontage on street about 10 feet; no plastic ornaments; theatre is located on second floor; no posters are used; no full orchestra; no pipe-organ, but a single piano; managed by a woman.

No one would pay any attention to such an advertisement, but consider it a losing proposition. The idea of a theatre on a second floor, without a lobby, without space to display posters, without the present fad of a full orchestra or pipe-organ, etc.!

APPEARANCE AND MANNERS

Suggestions Invited, Questions Cheerfully Answered

Address: Exhibitors' Department, The Motion Picture News

IN the Advertising department of this issue I say that the Bijou Theatre, of Springfield, Mass., draws the best attendance because the manager does not deface the front of the theatre with a lot of sensational posters. While it is my strong belief that sensational posters keep away the cultured class, I must state that other features in the management of a theatre must be taken into consideration. For instance, a clean and inviting lobby will not draw if the attendants are dirty and uncourteous.

The success of the Bijou Theatre is then due to the able management of Mr. E. L. Knight, who is particular on all the details and wants everything to work in perfect harmony.

Mr. Knight believes in little things that often work better results than the big displays. The cut flowers at the Bijou Theatre do not only please the eye, but give an appearance of refinement to the place and at the same time are an attention greatly appreciated by the ladies.

Because flowers are cheerful, they are found a little everywhere, in the reception rooms, on the dining tables and even in the automobiles.

Mr. Knight has not only potted plants on and near the stage of his Bijou Theatre, but he has each day fresh-cut flowers placed in glass holders around the lobby. These cut flowers, with courteous ushers in attendance to take up the tickets and show seats, create such a favorable impression on the patrons as to predispose them in favor of the show.

Everything is in perfect harmony at the Bijou Theatre, from the sidewalk to the back of the stage. No sensational posters to mar the good appearance of the theatre, no tough, unkempt and uncourteous attendants to offset the effects of the cut flowers. The same atmosphere of refinement reigns all over the place, even in the private office.

The attendants at the Bijou Theatre, of Springfield, Mass., are uniformed, but instead of wearing the military style, they are dressed in black trousers and tuxedo coat, spotless white stiff-bosom shirt, clean collar, black necktie, well-polished shoes, etc. They are clean-cut fellows of natural good appearance and manners, and very courteous.

It is this great attention to all the small details that makes of the Bijou the most refined and most successful motion picture theatre of Springfield.

We know that cheap vaudeville has a tendency to cheapen motion pictures, and for the sake of the industry I have fought the cheap vaudeville until few theatres use it. I am, then, pleased to repeat the words of Mr. Knight: "Discontinued vaudeville and singers over a year ago and business increased at once."

Good manners are not taught; they are a gift; they are born with the man. You can educate a man to be polite and courteous, as we can silver a brass spoon, but as the brass will show as soon as the spoon is rubbed, so will the bad manners, ugly temper, vulgar talk of the man who is called down or when he gets excited.

A man can keep clean even working in a factory, while another man cannot keep clean in the best equipped office. A man can wear old clothes and look still a gentleman, while another man can wear the finest clothes and remain a bum.

Mr. Knight is a born gentleman of manners, and everything around him inspires confidence.

Mr. E. W. Lynch, of the Pleasant Theatre, of Worcester, Mass., is a gentleman of the same type.

The attendants of the Pleasant Theatre are neatly uniformed, are very attentive to the work and courteous —a great item in the success of the place.

Mr. Lynch, like Mr. Knight, believes in plants and flowers, he has a number of potted small trees around the ticket office and at the foot of the elegant marble staircase.

The uniform is getting popular. The managers seem to believe that the uniform is as important as the picture or the posters, in other words, that they cannot open a theatre without having uniforms for the attend-

SCENE FROM "THE LOVE LUTE OF ROMANY"
(Essanay 2-reel Dramatic Subject)

ants. While I do not wish to discourage this belief, I am sorry to see that in too many places they do not know how to wear the uniform in the proper military style. The managers allow their employees to turn up the trousers to show some fancy hosiery, or allow them to keep the coat unbuttoned to show a flashy necktie. The trouble is that managers do not furnish the military standing collar with the uniform and allow the attendant to wear any style of turn-down or soft collar.

This has been my general remark during my trip through some of the New England States. To the exceptions mentioned in these pages, I have to add the Bates Theatre, of Attleboro, Mass., where Mr. John F. Patten is particular on general appearance. His men present a neat appearance and wear the uniform correctly.

ESSANAY TIME-TABLE

Don Meaney, advertising manager, has put over another one. This time his originality takes the form of a time-table scheduling all the releases of the Essanay Film Manufacturing Company for a month in advance. The front and back cover of this folder, which conveniently fits the pocket, is artistically designed with a blue background and white and red decorations. The October issue of this folder has the pictures of Broncho Billy and Ruth Stonehouse on its covers.

Mr. Meaney designates the road over which these pictures travel as the Fast Service Route, leaving General Film Stations. He employs railroad terms in the descriptions of the releases. The Western releases he terms Niles Special and the California Sunset. He uses the word dispatched instead of released, and in many other ways has made this folder interesting and attractive.

We have handled this time-table with feelings akin to that of the individual contemplating a pleasure trip to distant and picturesque parts.

POWER'S CAMERAGRAPH AT CARNEGIE LYCEUM

Hugh O'Donnell, the well-known lecturer, delivered a lecture on the Panama Cannal at Carnegie Lyceum on Sunday, October 12th.

A large audience enjoyed the wonderfully clear pictures which were projected by a Power's Cameragraph and dissolver.

Edison Players Publicly Welcomed

THE recent departure of the Edison players from Searsport, Me., was the occasion of a remarkable demonstration. They have been in Searsport all summer, and during that time have made personal friends with many people in town.

Photographer Kugler has been a regular member of the church choir, and others had identified themselves with the life of the town to such an extent that the people had come to consider them more than mere visitors. This was apparent when, on the Sunday before their departure, the minister made them the object of his remarks, emphasizing the fact that their stay in Searsport had done much to dispel the ill-founded prejudice against theatrical folks, and have shown them to be serious people with an honest purpose. On the day of their departure the entire population turned out, the school children all carrying flags bearing the legend "Goodbye, Mary," while over the main street stretched a huge banner reading "Goodbye, Mary Fuller."

When a line of automobiles had drawn up before the hotel, Judge J. B. Black as spokesman made a complimentary farewell speech, in which he expressed the pleasure of the people of Searsport at having the Edison people in their midst, and sincerely hoped that the next summer would find them back in town again. Judge Black closed his remarks by presenting to Mary Fuller a bound copy of the history of the Twenty-sixth Maine Regiment, of which he was a member.

Walter Edwin, director of the company, made a short reply, in which he expressed the appreciation of the players at the courtesy which had been shown them during their stay in town. Then, while the Searsport band played "Auld Lang Syne," and the crowd cheered, the autos started for Belfast with the players and their baggage.

Included in the company, besides those already mentioned, were Bliss Milford, Elsie MacLeod, Augustus Phillips, Frank McGlynn, Richard Neill, John Sturgeon and Harry Beaumont.

The people of Searsport did not confine their enthusiasm to speech-making and brass bands, but when "Joyce of the North Woods," the Edison two-reel film made at Searsport, was released, those who were fortunate enough to own automobiles motored sixty miles to see it run.

How Marshall Field & Co. Use the Motion Picture

The well-known house of Marshall Field & Co., Chicago, issue the following circular to their customers:

MARSHALL FIELD & CO.

A Special Feature for "Made-in-Chicago Week."

OUR EDUCATIONAL MOTION PICTURE EXHIBIT

Every Morning from 10:30 to 12 and Afternoons from 2:30 to 4.

HANDEL HALL

27 East Randolph Street, Marshall Field & Company Block.

THE PUBLIC IS INVITED

These pictures—taken in our own mills—are wonderfully instructive. They mark the most comprehensive effort ever made in showing all the processes of Cotton Textile Manufacture. The pictures are marvelously clear—each step in the manufacture of every product may be as easily followed as if those seeing them were standing before the great mills. Children especially should see these films.

The complete series will be exhibited each day. The morning exhibits will show the preparation of cotton yarns and the making of Valmore and Utopia Ginghams and Lakeside wool-finished Cotton Blankets. In the afternoon exhibits will be seen the manufacture of Zion Laces and Lace Curtains, Burlington Hosiery and Athena Underwear.

We have five sets of films as follows:

Making yarn from raw cotton, time required 18 min. This film precedes each of the following exhibits:
Making Zion Laces 12 min. Lace Curtains 17 min.
Making Lakeside Wool-finished Cotton Blankets 21 min.
Making Valmore and Utopia Ginghams 18 min.
Making Burlington Hosiery 12 min. Knit Underwear 15 min.; also the above four in one straight exhibit.
Total time required 2 hours.

The Sievers Amusement Co., of Peoria, Ill., has under construction three new houses. The Hippodrome (1,400 seats) will open October 20th with pictures and vaudeville. The Duchess (600 seats) is expected to open December 15th, and the Crescent (over 1,000 seats) early in 1914. The latter two will run straight pictures. Mr. D. Robinson, local manager of the Sievers Amusement Co., will then have almost a corner on the market in the down-town motion picture business of Peoria, for he already operates two houses, the Empress and Princess.

Advertising the Picture

I HAVE fought the posters. I am still fighting them, and for this reason I am getting the ill-will of many persons, including the poster printers.

I am not advocating complete abolition of the posters, but I am against the ugly, sensational posters and the abuse of posters.

Artistic posters would improve the business of both the exhibitor and of the poster printer. It is true that there would be less posters used, but then the theatres would improve in appearance, and the printer, able to charge more for high-class posters, would make up in quality what he would lose in quantity.

While single hand-painted card signs cost money, theatres ordering from three to four card signs daily can obtain them at about 50 cents per sign.

A sign painter of Montgomery, Ala., was very clever. In making his scrolls he would invariably reserve a space in which he could paste the portrait of the leading actor or the trade-mark of the manufacturer.

I do not see why the designers of posters do not use their imagination to uplift the industry by composing artistic advertising sheets, instead of wasting their time and energy trying to make the film more sensational and more repulsive to the public.

If the artist would draw the title of the film, the name of the manufacturer, copy the trade-mark, reserve a space in the center for a photograph of an actual scene, or a couple of spaces, and, as the painter of Alabama, reserve a small space in the scroll-work for the portrait of a leading actor, he would produce a very artistic poster that would sell at a higher price, a poster that would uplift the show business, give a better appearance to the theatre and be less objectionable to the neighboring stores.

All managers must do some advertising. Those who refuse to display the sensational posters and go to the expense of having show cards painted would gladly appreciate real artistic posters and save themselves the trouble of having to paint their own advertising sheets. The managers who conduct first-class theatres know by experience that while the patrons like to see the titles of the pictures to be shown, the names of the manufacturers and of the leading actors, they object to the ugly sensational posters. Patrons do not care to see an exaggerated illustration of the film, but as they all have a fancy for certain trade-marks and certain actors, all that they ask to see in front of a theatre is the title of the picture and the trade-mark of the manufacturer. Some lovers of motion pictures want Biographs, Vitagraphs, others want Kay Bees, Keystones, still others want Bisons, Nestors. Some of them will not miss a show where Maurice Costello, King Baggott, G. Anderson, Florence Lawrence, etc., appear. The names and trade-marks of the best manufacturers and of the leading actors are better drawing cards than posters.

Springfield, Mass., is not yet addicted to the fad of an abuse of posters. While a few theatres, like the Lion and the Globe, have a rather too large display of posters, the other theatres of the main street are more moderate, and the Bijou has none.

When I called on Mr. E. L. Knight, the business manager of the Bijou Theatre, I had to congratulate him on the absence of posters and on the excellent appearance of his lobby. Congratulations were reciprocal, as Mr. Knight was pleased to find a paper with broad-minded views advocating the suppression of the highly sensational posters, which in his mind cheapen the appearance of any theatre displaying them. Mr. Knight agrees that an abuse of posters not only defaces a lobby, but is a disgrace to the community, and is strongly objectionable to the various stores having the misfortune to have a motion picture show as a next door neighbor. Mr. Knight claims also, and in this case follows my views, that a large display of ugly and sensational posters keeps away more patrons than it brings trade. Evidently Mr. Knight has some very strong ideas on general appearance, and he believes that the money spent in posters can be spent more judiciously in making the place more attractive and more refined.

The only advertising in front of the

SCENE FROM "ZUMA THE GYPSY"

Bijou is neatly painted card signs, giving the names of the pictures and of the manufacturers, and occasionally a few photographs from actual scenes.

The experience of the Bijou is worth noting, as, although the seating capacity is one thousand chairs, at 8.15 p. m. standing room was at a premium, while the other theatres of the main street, with less seats, were not overcrowded.

Mrs. J. Clement, of the Bijou Dream, of Boston, Mass., has the same views. The advertising at the Bijou Dream is made through neatly framed card signs and a few occasional photographs.

Mrs. Clement claims that an abuse of sensational posters acts a good deal like the supposed feature films and extraordinary inducements. These posters can, and generally do, bring a crowd, a crowd that cannot be accommodated and that overtaxes the employees of the theatre and makes everything unpleasant for everyone, even the patrons. Then the next day, unless you can advertise a couple more of sensational features or offer more inducements, your business falls flat, and the manager has to work high and low to find more sensational posters and more inducements to try to keep up his business.

Mrs. Clement is not after the rush of one day; she wants a steady and regular patronage, and, while the lady cannot brag of days with crowds blocking the sidewalk, she has the satisfaction of knowing that day after day, week after week, she has good-sized houses of regular, satisfied patrons, who know where to go to see carefully selected pictures, projected correctly and accompanied with the proper music.

When I called at the Bijou Dream Theatre at 11 a. m. I noticed a minister coming down Washington street, and without looking at the advertisements he took his place behind me at the ticket office and followed me to the auditorium, via the escalator. No minister of the gospel would like to be seen entering a theatre hidden behind a lot of sensational posters, while a minister is not ashamed to visit Mrs. Clement's place. It is the same story with the better class, and this is why Mrs. Clement is so successful.

Providence, R. I., is not yet following the fad of too many sensational posters, but then there is practically no competition, as seven places showing motion pictures (three of them big vaudeville houses) is not much for a town of over 200,000 inhabitants.

As an advertising scheme the "Nickel" Theatre has a number of extra large portraits of the leading men and women of the best manufacturers. These portraits, about 18x22, are neatly framed and arranged on the walls of the lobby.

THE EXCLUSIVE PROGRAM

BY INGVALD C. OES

(Abstracted)

AS a pioneer Independent in the film business, I can say safely that the Exclusive Supply Corporation has been more successful, has made greater strides toward progress than any other organization during recent years, considering the short space of time that it has been in operation. The reason for this success beyond question of doubt must be attributed to merit. The manufacturers connected with the Exclusive are among the best firms, and are, perhaps, in better position, due to their exceptional facilities, to produce the highest class of product with which to maintain the lead of quality in the realm of features. These companies have long maintained supremacy in the feature field, and are continually striving to improve upon previous efforts. Hence Exclusive features are more in demand and more profitable to the exhibitors than are any other features.

The motion picture business has been one of steady advance from the beginning, and, to my mind, the introduction of the feature has contributed largely to the thriving condition of the industry. When one stops to consider that it is little more than two years ago that the Great Northern Film Company placed upon the market the first feature film, the strides that have been made since then are little short of marvelous. The company which I represent was the first to realize the possibilities of multiple reel subjects and the industry was not slow to look into the future through the same telescope.

The most recent achievement of the Great Northern Company is a nine-reel production of Gerhart Hauptmann's stirring novel "Atlantis." It required considerable persuasion and a substantial money offer to gain the consent of the distinguished German author, winner of the $10,000 Nobel literary prize. It was only with the distinct understanding that the subject must be given with the magnitude that the story requires that Hauptmann consented.

I am going into these details briefly in order to show the spirit and enterprise of a firm that undertakes to make a nine-reel feature. The first move of the company was to charter one of the Scandinavian-American steamships of 12,000 tons, and with her officers and crew she steamed into the North Sea to give realism to the story. Another steamship to be sunk was bought outright, as was the ill-fated Roland in the Hauptmann novel.

Camera men were sent to the four points of the compass to carry out the author's wishes. It is estimated that the production will represent an outlay of $60,000 when ready for presentation. The sinking of the Roland and the rescue of only fifteen of the passengers and crew is a real feature endeavor, proving the strides made in this industry.

Madame Orloff will be seen in the principal female leading role. She is an actress of renown in the European capitals; and Unthan, who was Hauptmann's inspiration for the part of Arthur Stoss, the "Armless Wonder," will be seen in his original part.

Another of our multiple reel series in the near future will be "During the Plague," in which Rita Sachette, the famous dancer and actress, plays the principal female role. Betty Nansen, acclaimed as the "Bernhard of the North," is another who has been engaged to appear in a feature series which already has been begun.

It is enterprise such as this that is calculated to lend strength to the feathe program and impress the trade with the importance of selecting the best.

KLEINE ENLARGES OFFICES

In addition to occupying practically the entire third floor at 166 North State street, Chicago, and a large suite of offices in the Long Acre Building, New York City, General Manager McCarahan has been compelled to rent a number of other suites on the fourth floor, despite the fact that almost all the available space on that floor is already occupied by the various departments of the big Kleine organizations. An entire six-story building at 20 East Illinois street is given over exclusively to the photographic department and the storerooms of the Kleine Optical Company.

THE EXCLUSIVE SERVICE OF THE GENERAL FILM CO.

The announcement made last week by the General Film Company that Exclusive Service would become a fact on October 13th was received with enthusiasm.

Over three hundred letters of request for rates and information were received at the offices of the Exclusive Department at 71 West Twenty-third street the sixth day following the publication of the Exclusive Service advertisement in the trade papers.

The idea seems to be popular with the big and little exhibitor, the former seeing in it a means of enlarging and holding his patronage, and the latter rejoicing over the prospect of having the "regular" program all to himself.

The Exclusive program will be made possible by the manufacturers turning out additional new material.

An interesting development of the General Film's new scheme, as evidenced by the character of the letters received to date, is the interest which it has aroused in the ranks of the so-called "legitimate" theatres.

Managers of every variety of theatre—from opera house to vaudeville—have responded to the call. It is said that one of the most prominent booking managers in New York has asked for prices on a circuit of 250 theatres which he is prepared to swing over to pictures if he can be assured of absolute protection against competition.

This seemingly sudden determination on the part of the "regular" managers to go over to pictures may probably be attributed to the falling off in business in the majority of "circuit" houses last season, to a woeful lack of even passable road attractions with which to fill up booking for the current season; to the fact that, for the first time in the history of the game, it will be possible to secure a regular service of high-class picture programs that can only be seen in one house in each district for a period of ninety days.

Under the new plan of the General Film Company a manager will be able to advertise his picture program as extensively as he pleases and to put over the same amount of publicity as he did for his "dramatic" attraction, with the positive assurance that the business thus created will not be divided with any other house which may be showing pictures.

Junie McCree, who has made everybody in the world laugh at least once, is writing some new comedies that should receive a royal welcome. More about Junie's visit to the Reliance later.

Rodman Law has had another lucky escape. But the pitcher that goes frequently to the well takes a chance once too often.

Trade Notes

IN "Back to Life," J. Warren Kerrigan has a part after his own heart, a romantic Western rôle. He impersonates a man who is dogged by misfortune, and who finds comfort in a sick woman whom he is able to help. The woman in the hands of Pauline Bush was a beautiful creation. The story is by De La Parelle and Allen Dwan and the producer James Neill.

"Being a heroine in a motion picture drama is no sinecure," says Miss Marion Tanner, "especially when the part calls for a twenty-foot dive into chilly water and a struggle with two perfectly horrid men."

Miss Tanner was engaged by the Mittenthal Film Company to play the heroine's part in a drama entitled "The Auto Bandits of New York." In one scene she is chased to the edge of a pier on the Hudson River and dives off, followed by two bandits who struggle with her in the water. The men were instructed to put realism into their work—and they did—but with disastrous results to Miss Tanner, who swallowed water enough to render her unconscious for fifteen minutes.

"The Auto Bandits of New York" in three parts, is the first of a series of melodramas which will be released by Warner's Features, Inc., to the theatres using their feature service. It will be followed shortly by "Sir Highwayman of Death Valley," a dramatic story well known to the older generation of playgoers.

Charles Clary, formerly leading man at the Selig Company, Chicago, who made his first appearances under the auspices of the Selig Company in photoplays in Chicago, in association with Miss Kathlyn Williams, in a vivid transcript of African life in "Back to the Primitive," "Captain Kate" and "Lost in the Jungle," has, after several years, gone back to this association in a medium that promises superior results. Mr. Clary was transferred to the Edendale Studio in Los Angeles, and has since been advanced to the leads in the big new studio in the Selig Zoo at Eastlake, and will appear in the the series of daring, diverting and spectacular plays from the romances of Harold MacGrath.

A pipe organ costing $40,000 is one of the features of the new theatre to be erected at 227-229 West Forty-first street by George Kleine, Sol Bloom and others, for the purpose of showing only spectacular Kleine photoplays. An unusual contract let in the construction of this mammoth picture theatre was that covering the making of scenery. Appropriate scenery will be made for each photo drama.

Will Hough, author of "A Stubborn Cinderella," has written a clever photoplay entitled "The Flirt," which will appear as a Reliance offering about the middle of October.

TRADE NOTES

The principal objection to Kinemacolor has always been the extra expense of installing two machines to project black-and-white and the natural-color motion pictures, which require special projection apparatus. Formerly the Kinemacolor machines were all imported from England, but now the Simplex people are turning out a special machine which will project both monochrome and colored pictures. Accordingly, the Kinemacolor Company has mapped out a very unique plan and scale of prices, so that exhibitors in small towns will be able to use the natural-color pictures as an added feature to their regular programs. This class of service is a genuine novelty to exhibitors, and the prices will range as low as $20 per week, the idea being to show Kinemacolor in places where it has never been seen.

Another radical departure for the Kinemacolor Company is the selling of machines, which could formerly be obtained only under a leasing contract. By a novel but simple mechanical contrivance, the Kinemacolor machine can be transformed into a black-and-white machine, and perfect projection guaranteed for both natural-color and monochrome pictures. The price of this machine has been set at a comparatively low figure, so that exhibitors who have room for only one machine may secure this combination projector.

The principal reason for the sale of Kinemacolor machines is that the company may be able to meet the demand for booking of the special features that will be released from time to time, such as Weber and Fields' plays, Maeterlinck's "Blue Bird" and the Panama Canal pictures, for which latter there is a renewed demand. Under the former system it was necessary to transport the projecting outfit from town to town, like a theatrical road show; but with general installation of machines capable of projecting Kinemacolor pictures, the problem is reduced simply to shipping the reels, while the expense and time of setting up the machines will also be eliminated.

Robert Leonard is producing "The Primeval Test," a novelty. In this play a young husband gets advice from an eccentric old doctor regarding his wife's affections, and resorts to the ways of primeval days. Bob Leonard takes the part of the husband and Margarita Fischer is the wife, and both have wonderful acting parts. Reese Gardner, a new-comer, is the man who interrupts the serenity of married life, and John Burton takes the part of the eccentric doctor.

Many handsome new moving picture theatres that have been built under the 600 seating capacity ordinance are installing Kinemacolor as a special feature worthy of their standing in the amusement field. Among these the Empress Theatre, at 181st street and St. Nicholas avenue, New York, and the Arena and Marathon theatres in Brooklyn, begin service next Monday.

The new Duffield Street Theatre, in Brooklyn, which, it is claimed by its builders will equal if not excel the beautiful Regent Theatre in New York, has contracted for Kinemacolor as one of the features of its opening season. The Bedford, another Brooklyn picture theatre which ranks as one of the finest of its class in the East, has also contracted for Kinemacolor service.

Yet with all the above mentioned drawbacks, the Bijou Dream is the refined motion picture theatre of Boston, with a constant regular patronage.

The success of the Bijou Dream is due to the able management and good common sense of its manager, Mrs. J. Clement.

Mrs. Clement has the courage of her opinions. She does not believe in posters, as with her good taste she claims that posters cheapen the appearance of a theatre, so she has banished posters from her theatre. The programme is advertised by means of neat card signs and a few photographs occasionally.

While Mrs. Clement is a good musician herself, she claims that a pipe-organ or a full orchestra cannot follow the picture in all the quick and constant jumps, and to her the only appropriate music is a single pianist who can play the picture. To this effect, Mrs. Clement pays a high salary to a very competent pianist; she changes her piano twice a year and has same tuned every week. The results are that Mrs. Clement has the reputation of having the picture played correctly, and even the great lovers of music of Boston prefer the single piano of the Bijou Dream to a full orchestra or pipe-organ to accompany the pictures.

Mrs. Clement is very particular on the selection of the pictures, and because she always offers a well-balanced programme she has made the reputation of the Bijou Dream, and made of this theatre the refined motion picture show of Boston. J. M. B.

Last Monday the Indianapolis News held a free exhibition of "Quo Vadis" for the students and inmates of the various state schools and benevolent institutions of Indianapolis. Among the hundreds of interested visitors were three hundred children of the State School for the Deaf. A curious phase of the affair was the presence of one hundred blind children, who listened interestedly to the incidental music and the description of the picture by their teachers.

Miss Helen Gardner and her company of feature players will hereafter release their three-part productions through the program of Warner's Features, Inc.

Miss Billie West, formerly with the American Film Co., has joined the Majestic Co. to play leads under the direction of Mr. Albert W. Hale, and she is doing some excellent work in a coming Majestic release called "The Wedding Write-Up."

A Statement from Cleveland Exhibitors' Press Committee

WE regret the necessity of this statement, which we submit to our fellow exhibitors in explanation of our action since the New York convention, and up to present date of writing.

As the strongest local in Ohio we have supported Mr. Neff to a man in all things, at all times, except on the censorship question. Upon that question we have differed with him at all times as a matter of principle only. It is conceded by Mr. Neff's best friends that the loyalty of Cleveland delegates saved him from defeat for re-election for president at the last National Convention, for with a divided state delegation he would have had no chance.

Since then the Ohio State Censor law has gone into effect and as a result our loyal members, while submitting to the law's decree, have been desirous of making a friendly test of the constitutionality of said law. Upon this we are a unit, the result of two special meetings recently held. We were in hopes that whatever the outcome we should naturally be a harmonious unit after the courts' final decree, but we regret to report that our fellow members on the State Board of Censors have shown no desire to act impartially, but on the contrary have stirred up a newspaper controversy which has been unpleasant for local exhibitors.

The climax came when Mr. Neff caused to be published an article in which he condemned and ridiculed our entire local membership.

Our most conservative members consider this extremely humiliating and uncalled for, and they resented this action on the part of Mr. Neff by voting at our meeting on October 1st to return our charter and withdraw from the M. P. E. L. of America. The matter was again brought up for final action at a special meeting to-day which resulted in our withdrawal as a League local.

The best of feeling prevailed at the meeting and after dissolving as a League local all present unanimously voted to reorganize temporarily as the Cleveland Exhibitors' Association.

We are perfecting plans for a solid local organization wherein every motion picture theatre will be represented upon our roster, and as Cleveland has been the central battleground of attack from "cranks" of all kinds, we shall be well prepared to meet all comers this winter as usual.

Fraternally yours,

A. MAHVER, SAM BULLOCK,
W. J. GLIMMS.

The Eclectic Film Co. and "Les Miserables"

THE Eclectic Film Company has disposed of the state rights for "Les Miserables" for the territory comprising the entire State of New York to the Gordon Olympia Company, 658 Washington street, Boston, Mass. The Gordon Olympia Company is the biggest exhibitor operating in New England and upper New York. When seen recently, Mr. N. H. Gordon stated that the company had purchased a ten-thousand-dollar organ which is to be used in connection with the presentation of "Les Miserables." This adjunct, for which a suitable musical program has been compiled, should prove a salient feature. The resources of the purchasing company guarantee that the proper exploitation of this film will be given in the territory just acquired.

The state rights for "Les Miserables" for Western Missouri, Kansas and Oklahoma have been purchased by Mr. William Sievers, of the New Grand Central Theatre, St. Louis, Mo., who already controls the rights for this production in Illinois and East Missouri. At the presentation of "Les Miserables" at Mr. Sievers' theatre in St. Louis, the film created such a sensation that people were turned away by the score. At Orchestra Hall, in Chicago, Ill., where "Les Miserables" had been showing for some time past, it met with the same reception.

The entire country has now been sold out for "Les Miserables," with the exception of Western Canada, west of Port Arthur and Fort Williams, and three territories in the States, namely, Nebraska and Iowa, Texas, Minnesota, and North and South Dakota. The Eclectic Film Company has decided not to sell the state rights for "Les Miserables" or any other of their features in the territory consisting of Arkansas, Louisiana, Mississippi, Tennessee, Alabama, Florida, Georgia, North and South Carolina.

PATHE ANIMAL PICTURES

Mr. J. A. Berst, general manager of Pathé Frères, has just closed contracts which assure to that company a new and interesting field for the staging of Pathé plays.

One contract was for a large number of wild animals which will be shipped by rail, Saturday, October 11, to St. Augustine, Fla., there being seven carloads in all. Among the animals are 2 elephants, 2 camels, 2 ostriches, 10 lions, 2 tigers, 6 leopards, 6 bears and 2 kangaroos, in addition to monkeys, birds, snakes (one of them a python 18 feet long), pumas, hyenas, zebras and various kinds of deer.

A large farm has been rented near St. Augustine, and an open-air studio will be erected at once. Big features only will be produced at this studio, three and four reels.

A company of experienced players will leave for St. Augustine about the 20th of the month, there being over twenty people in the company. Among them will be Miss Lillian Wiggins. The company will be under the direction of Mr. Fred Wright.

Three 60-foot baggage cars are being sent express, and a special Pullman car will take the players. The transportation bill alone will amount to $5,000.

There was some difficulty experienced in the matter of shipment of the animals, as the steamship lines refused to take them.

GUNBY BROS. MOVE UP-TOWN

The well-known firm of Gunby Bros., Inc., have removed their offices from 199 Third Avenue, where they have been located for a number of years, to larger offices in the Exchange Building, 145 West 45th Street. Mr. Gunby, Jr., is in charge, and is turning out work on film titles, developing and printing at short notice, as has been their policy heretofore.

Francis Ford has just finished a virile drama entitled "Diamond Cut Diamond," by Grace Cunard. In this Francis Ford and Grace Cunard match their wits as wrong-doers, who eventually regret the wrong and right it. The story is a capital one, and is forcefully acted by Mr. Ford and Grace Cunard, with Harry Schumm, E. M. Kellar and Tony Jeanette in support.

FEATURE FILM NEWS

WHEN Philip Klein, treasurer of the All-Star Feature Corporation, sails for Europe on the Mauretania next Wednesday (October 22nd) he will go prepared to spend some busy weeks in England and on the Continent.

Primarily, Mr. Klein's trip is undertaken to secure some of the works of noted foreign authors for film production by the All-Star Feature Corporation. He will also treat with some of the distinguished dramatic stars of England and the Continent regarding their appearance in feature films to be made by the All-Star. With both authors and stars negotiations have already been opened. Of peculiar assistance to Mr. Klein in this part of the diplomatic mission is the fact that his father, Charles Klein, now makes his home in London.

While in England Mr. Klein will assist the officials of the Gaumont Company in exploiting to the British public "Arizona" and the forthcoming productions of the All-Star Feature Corporation, to which productions the Gaumont Company has purchased the rights for England, Ireland, Scotland and Wales.

The Exclusive Features, Inc., of which Harry Samwick is secretary and treasurer, have contracted for the entire Itala feature output for Greater New York and Northern New Jersey, beginning with "The Gypsy's Kiss." The Exclusive Features now also have standing orders on all Eclectic, Lewis Pennant and Eclair features for the same territory, giving the Exclusive Features two new subjects weekly.

Among the sales of Itala features during the week have been that of "Unmasked" to the Wolverine Feature Film Co., of Detroit, for the Michigan territory; Exclusive Features, of Cleveland, for Ohio; European Feature Film Co., of New York, for Greater New York and Northern New Jersey.

The Itala Film Company of America announces that it is in no way connected with the Italian-American Film Company, whose offices are supposed to be in the Columbia Theatre Building, where the Itala offices formerly were. Much confusion has arisen on account of the similarity in the names. The Itala Film Company of America now has its offices in the Candler Building, New York City, and all communications should be sent to that address.

"From Dusk to Dawn," which exposes the struggle between capital and labor, introducing Clarence Darrow, the champion of labor, in a reproduction of the "conspiracy trial" at Los Angeles, has been booked with the Loew Circuit of theatres in Greater New York. A number of companies presenting this five-reel feature has been sent out on tour and the picture is doing a splendid business.

Kaiser Wilhelm of Germany has not been slow to recognize the educational as well as the permanent pictorial value of motography. King Alfonso of Spain, who is up-to-date in all his desires and employments, from the automobile to the aeroplane, is also interested in animated photography, and his children have appeared on numerous films and been shown for the edification of his loyal subjects. The cable last week stated, as a royal joke, that King Christian of Denmark played a striking though involuntary part in a cinematograph drama off the coast of Jutland. The King, on seeing a cinematograph camera in another boat, was much amused at his mistake and ordered the yacht to stop so he might watch the rest of the play. In a few minutes the beautiful heroine jumped into the water and began to swim ashore, but near the royal yacht she gave a cry of exhaustion, and was evidently in difficulties. The King hurriedly ordered one of the yacht's lifeboats to be lowered, and himself directed the operation. Modern Kings are popular in the ratio of their versatility.

FILM REVIEWS

THE Hour of Triumph. Imp. (Oct. 30.)—One of the best productions of the Imp Company. G. L. Tucker, the director, deserves commendation for the admirable casting of the parts. William Shay, who played the lead, knew just what was expected, and did it. Jane Gail, who played opposite him, carried her part well. Throughout the support was good, and the scenes perfect. A reporter-playwright has his drama refused, but the manager realizes that he is a great actor and casts him for a part in another production, for which he has been unable to find a leading man with sufficient strength. The new leading man has a sickly wife, who, unless she gets from the city, will die of the white plague. Consequently he works very hard. The night of the production comes and the first act is very poorly played, and the rest of the cast are in despair. But in the last scene he rallies and carries so much strength into his part that the play goes through and he is "made." As the curtain drops he receives the news that his wife has died, and from that moment on he is incapable of animation. Both reels are great, that being a vulgar but most expressive adjective in this case.

The Black Sheep. Broncho. (Oct. 27.)—Although the story possesses no really new features, it is thoroughly good all the way through, the acting especially being well interpreted. The son of a farmer is angry at his father because of a rebuff received, and goes to the West. Here he passes through many adventures, finally becoming an outlaw because of his inability to control his temper. He kills a deputy in self-defence and rides away. He receives a letter from his mother telling of his father's death and determines to return. He prevents some Indians from robbing a stage-coach by warning the sheriff at the risk of his own liberty, and is rewarded with his freedom and marries the girl who has come from home to hunt him. Great attention has been paid to details in this picture, and the scenery and photography are splendid.

Taming of the Shrew. Jupiter. (Oct. 27.)—Shakespeare's immortal comedy of the above title is far too well known to everyone to necessitate the telling of the story. The work of the Jupiter, alias Ambrosio Company, in getting this before the public in such a form is most commendable. It has often been said that if one were to try and produce Shakespeare without his wonderful wording it would undoubtedly fall to the ground. But this is disproved, for Sothern and Marlowe, with all their art, could not have produced anything more intelligent than this, nor could they have pleased the same audience more.

The Van Warden Jewels. Majestic. The first reel of this picture is a little weak, and spoils the effect, as the story really possesses some strength. It is a detective story, of the usual kind, not having anything sufficiently original to recommend it. The Van Wardens are society people and while they are entertaining week-end parties their jewels disappear. The audience is kept in doubt as to who the thief is, the son being blamed as he is known to be heavily in debt? The real thief is caught after some clever work by a friend of the brother. He is one of the house guests and an adventurer. There is a pretty love story interwoven in the yarn. A. M.

THE LIFE OF ST. PATRICK

(Condensed story of the film. For illustrations see next week's issue.)

The "Life of St. Patrick" is historically interesting to all to whom the patron saint of Ireland is but an iota of more importance than a name.

This reproduction of some leading incidents in the life of the saint has been prepared by Mr. J. Theobald Walsh, with the co-operation of a large number of Irish peasantry, working for the pure love of the cause, and the scenes have been all prepared on Irish soil as near as possible to the places where history and tradition tell us the actual events took place.

We are shown the baptism of little Patrick; how at the age of five he receives at his mother's knee his first knowledge of the story of the Crucifixion.

Later we are shown how he is captured and taken away to Ireland. He lands at the Giant's Causeway, and is sold as a slave to King Milcho, an Irish King.

For six years he tends his master's sheep. Then there appears an angel, who bids him return to his native land to prepare himself for a great mission. As the chronicler puts it: "He left Ireland a fugitive to return a conqueror."

He studied under his uncle, St. Martin, of Tours, and began to preach Christianity among the Gauls. A vision appears to him calling him to Ireland. He sets sail, is driven from the Irish shore by hostile Pagans, and at last lands among a friendly community.

He interests his hosts in his mission, he is invited to their religious ceremonies, where he so impresses his listeners with his definition of the Trinity by utilizing the shamrock-leaf as an object lesson that he converts a large number of the audience.

Then we are shown how the missionary was imprisoned, released by an angel, and immediately set forth to attempt the conversion of his former master, King Milcho. Later on, at an enormous gathering, met to celebrate the Baal festivities, Patrick performs miracles, drives the reptiles from the land, and destroys the altars of the idolaters.

He lived to a great age, and his death was mourned by the entire Irish nation.

"The Life of St. Patrick" is sure to be popular.

The Test. Vitagraph. (Oct. 11.) The name "The Test" does not seem to be the most appropriate that might have been chosen out of the many available. In this case "The Test" means little, as it refers to such a small part of the drama. Dick tests the man that is flirting with his wife and finds that he is wanting in nerve, and yet he leaves them together. That is where the title fails to enlighten. However, the name, in this case a small item, is the only fault to be found, while there are many things to recommend it to public favor.

One of these is the wonderful emotional acting of Clara Kimball Young as the misguided wife. Her disguise as a native was also good. The story offers nothing brand new. It tells of the jealousy of a woman of her husband, which is entirely undeserved. His brother officer and friend betrays his confidence and plants in her head mischief of all sorts.

The test comes when the husband discovers the truth, and cuts the cards with Larry Gordon to determine who will stay with Eleanor, and who will leave for the plague camp in the interior of Africa. The husband wins, but goes in Gordon's place as he thinks that is what the girl wishes. She, however, repulses Larry and in disguise joins her husband and nurses him back to life. Great attention is paid throughout to details, and the scenery is excellent.

PATHE WEEKLY No. 57

It is one thing to pick up the daily paper—one that specializes in foreign news will only serve in this case—and to read through its pages, analyzing and getting a mind picture of the most important items, but it is quite another thing to see them as plainly as though you were right on the scene. That is the duty of the various manufacturers who are placing "weeklies" before millions every day. And it is not the easiest thing in the world by a long way. Their photographers are as keen reporters as any star on a New York daily, when it comes to ferreting out the important news and getting it.

No. 57 of the Pathe Weekly covers many countries, opening with pictures of Travers Island in New York, where they show the amateur athletic sports, following with the unveiling of the Harry D. Thomas monument at Cleveland, O. The youthful King of Spain, who has miraculously escaped assassination so many times, makes an interesting picture. The strike of 7,000 miners in Colorado is followed by the giving away of many bushels of apples in Denver of that state, by the Governor, to poor worthy citizens. "Steeplejack" Wilson is pictured in Jersey City in some of his dangerous work, then a journey to Paris to see the Sultan of Morocco, then back to the National Park in Montana, then to Nebraska, and then after a lengthy and interesting trip, we finish in Washington, D. C., and are greeted by Oscar W. Underwood, who is responsible for the recent tariff bill just passed. Surely a pleasant trip!

PATHE WEEKLY No. 58

The truth of the few lines which precede the foregoing story must surely be evident to all. What a wonderful thing it is when we come "right down to tacks" to be able to sit in one spot and see the world in motion before our eyes, but, unlike the reading of the news of the day, we are sure to see it absolutely authentically, and not with the tampering that ofttimes accompanies stories in the press. We read that a nine-hundred-year-old turtle has been caught, and that it weighs fifteen hundred pounds, and that it is to be stuffed and placed on exhibition. But to be on the spot, almost, and see the turtle is most realistic.

JOHN J. CAULLET, manager of the Lyceum Theatre, East Orange, N. J., reports capacity business for four consecutive weeks with Kinemacolor featured at the top of a personally selected program of monochrome photoplays. "We have a cultured and rather fastidiuos clientele who regard the ordinary sensational photoplay with scorn, but respond enthusiastically to artistic or educational motion pictures, especially if they have real dramatic value," said Mr. Caullet. "Therefore I make it my business to come to New York and personally select such programs as I believe will appeal to our patrons.

"Kinemacolor subjects are very attractive, because of their intelligent selection and the artistic manner in which they are produced. We know that they are real 'drawing cards' because people visit the box-office several days in advance to inquire about the coming Kinemacolor pictures.

Scenic and scientific features are greatly in demand, and the Panama Canal pictures are still the talk of the Oranges. Features like "Jack and the Beanstalk," "Steam," "Nathan Hale," "The Scarlet Letter" and "The Rivals" bring out the "S. R. O." sign nightly, and our people are anxiously awaiting the promised Kinemacolor series of popular players in their hours of ease."

In addition to the Kleine-Cines stock companies now working at Lake Como, the several engaged at the central studio in Rome, and the company now operating in Sicily, Cines have sent a large company of their well-known "leads" to Seville, Spain, where the proper atmosphere can be had for a series of Spanish plays in contemplation. A troupe of Spanish actors, who have been working a good part of the summer in the Rome studio, returned to Seville for the new company.

WILL E. SHEERER
Of the Eclair

Eclair's character interpreter is an actor of experience and ability. His portrayal of the roles of Washington and Lincoln in "The Sons of a Soldier," the thrilling war drama that added many laurels to the company, was the work of an artist. Mr. Sheerer left the dramatic field for a short time during his service in the Spanish-American war. However, "once an actor always an actor" applied to him, as he returned to his chosen profession at the close of his enlistment. Three years ago he entered the motion picture field. His success in this work has been great. Since joining the Eclair force, he has appeared in one part or another in almost all of their productions.

Some of his notable parts have been the Doctor in "The Doctor's Humanity"; the Fakir in "The Vengeance of a Fakir"; and the Spanish Captain in "The Crimson Cross."

Mr. Sheerer is strong on the importance of make-up, and will, in no circumstance, slight the smallest detail. It is this attention to the proper dressing of his parts that adds force and realism to his characters.

WILL E. SHEERER

L. Germain reports that the response from exhibitors in the various states where he is offering Ambrosio's "The Betrothed" is very satisfactory, many desiring bookings for the latter part of October and early November.

Exhibitors will please note that his Eastern Pennsylvania office is located at 123 North Tenth street, Philadelphia, and he is now arranging for a representation at Pittsburgh to care for Western Pennsylvania.

The new six-reel thriller called "The Ghost Club," has already been secured by him for several states.

"The Ghost Club" is the first feature that W. H. Scofield will forward here from the Gloria Film Company in Torino. Mr. Scofield is now in Europe.

Jovial Mr. Sandmeier, manager of the Majestic, Peoria, Ill., is drawing such enormous crowds whenever he runs pictures that he has decided to never again have a "dark night." He will show movies on all days for which he has no big road show booked.

The children of Harlem, New York, a part of the most congested section of the city, want another park. They have but few and it is hard for them. Their petition and their actions in presenting it are accurately registered by the camera-man. The Missouri State Fair and the current baseball games all are interesting, especially the latter at this time. The great T. R. on his way to South America, where he will study politics; the launching of a new gunboat in Palermo, Italy—what can be more education—and finally, by the way of something lighter, the famous cartoons of Bud Fisher are run.

The Current. Ramo Three-reels. There is no greater trouble-bringer than a bad temper. It brings regret and distress to all that come in contact with it. Jack and Lois, a brother and sister living in the country, are forced to go to the city at their father's death in order to earn their living. The son's terrible temper had been accountable for most of the trouble, and finally it leads to the death of the father. The son gets work in the city only to be discharged frequently because of his outbursts of temper. His bad habits lead him into evil ways, and finally he becomes a gambler.

Lois, the girl, comes to the city and gets a place in a department store, where she meets with insult from one of the owners and leaves. She goes into the chorus of a show and makes a success. The brother and sister meet later and he "grafts" everything possible from her. Finally her fiancé gets him a position. Lois marries a wealthy youth, after his father had put her through a test to determine her worth.

Lois again meets the department store proprietor, this time on equal plane, and he again insults her, even though she is married to his prospective brother-in-law. He is repulsed and steals some jewelry and throws the blame on Lois, who is saved by her brother, who determines to do the right thing. The fire scene in the theatre is very good, as is also the yacht from which the villain is thrown off. A good, exciting story that will make a mark.

The Prairie Trail. Bison Two-reel. A good war story, vibrating with action and romance. Clifford loves the Colonel's daughter; Red Wing, an Indian girl, loves him, and she in turn is loved by the Indian chief. The Indians, led by a renegade, attack a settlement and kill some white men, and then decide they will capture the pay train. To do this it will be necessary to blow up the tracks. The soldiers hear of this through Red Wing, who also notifies the train. The scene where she tells the engineer is cleverly played. She swings on the engine from her horse. The train is stopped and reversed in time and a running fight ensues. The Indian girl is killed in saving the man she loves.

The Spender. Victor Two-reels. With Florence Lawrence and Tom McAvoy in the leading parts, a drama is sure of being cleverly played. The part of Flo is one that is exactly suited to the peculiar nature of Miss Lawrence and she plays with all her energy. The story starts with the childhood of two children, Tom and Flo, switching immediately to years afterwards, when they have both become "grown ups."

Flo has become a successful actress and Tom is the town's spendthrift. They have lost all trace of each other. Flo recognizes Tom one night at the theatre and violently flirts with him, to his great disgust. By many tricks, she at last gets to know him, and he becomes interested. She gets him to give her a large check each time he calls. Finally he becomes broke, and does not seem to care, when he receives a letter from his childhood friend asking him to call at her old home. Here they meet again and she returns him his money as a wedding dower.

Temptation of Jane. Imp Two-reel. If there was a little more of a moral lesson attached to this picture, it would be of more value from an educational standpoint. As a drama, it is a success from start to finish. A girl comes to the city to make her living, and meets with a profligate. The latter is wealthy and has nothing at all to do but amuse himself. She is working at the time as an artist's model. The man sends her presents of clothes, all of which she returns. Finally she attends a party given by him in her honor.

At this affair the man finds a note to her from her mother, telling her to be virtuous, and it changes his whole attitude. The mother arrives unexpectedly and the young millionaire introduces her as his future mother to the crowd of society people present. The part of Jane is played by Jane Gail. It is directed

DIRECT CURRENT LOW VOLTAGE OUTFITS THAT REDUCES ELECTRIC BILLS 50 TO 75 PER CENT

"Our plant operates to within five per cent of rated capacity for twelve or thirteen hours a day, seven days a week. The regulation for load variation is excellent and has to take care of a variation from constant load (momentarily) of 96 amperes. Generator is rated at 80 amperes. The cost of operation is about twenty per cent of that charged for Central Station service. The light is absolutely steady and produces a wonderful result in pictures projected—over that secured through the use of alternating Central Station service. This plant has been in operation since 1911 and has given us no trouble whatever. We consider the 15 H. P. Generating Set the ideal outfit for the average picture theatre. (Continued from page 48)

by George L. Tucker, who also carries the leading part successfully.

The Queen's Jewels. Itala Three-reel. Poor old Dumas, Sr., has surely turned over in his grave within the last few days. Imagine his wonderful story, "The Queen s Necklace," which is a continuation of the "Three Guardsmen" series, turned into a modern drama, with the application of all things modern, and yet not in the least a burlesque, rather, in the opinion of the writer, a more fascinating story.

Can you imagine anyone being able to beat Dumas at his own game? Yet I would wager that the above picture by the Itala Company would create more of a sensation than the original, in drama, of the same sort. The story is almost identical, excepting the modern effects, such as an aeroplane, an express train, a bicycle, automobiles galore, and other odds and ends too many to mention.

When the Queen, as in the original story, finds that she must have her brooch (in this case) she sends the lover of her maid, who is an aeronaut, to recover it from the lover (who represents the Duke of Buckingham), to whom she had given it.

He starts with an aeroplane but is waylaid on the return journey and, having but a short time to make connections, tries an auto, then a freight train, and then a passenger train, from which he makes a wonderful leap for life. Then the bicycle, and finally on foot he enters the city. But here he is captured again and held. His hiding of the pin while the searchers are at work on him is something the Itala Company are to be proud of.

His final escape from the prison and hand-over-hand walk on a thin rope, which gives way, are excellent. For genuine thrills one ought to see this picture. Finally he lands at the palace, just in time to give the queen her brooch, which she has to wear at the ball. The introduction of the difference in time is also a good idea. The whole film is fine. A. M.

A Life for a Life. Film Releases of America. Three reels. The story has to do with the time of the "little general," Napoleon the first, whose army of devastation in its march through the heart of Europe probably caused more graves to be dug than any other one affair in modern history. His conscripts were drafted from the universe, the world was his suppliant, and his name the terror of all. Such was the great Napoleon as history brings him to us.

In this case, Peter, a youthful German, is fighting against the invader, having been dragged away from his home and sweetheart to fight for his fireside. He is wounded and captured by the French and manages to write a letter home telling of his capture. The girl determines she will join him and sets out on a horse. After a series of adventures she arrives at the enemy's camp, and through a mighty clever and original ruse, succeeds in getting part of the uniform of the French to Peter, and in this disguise he makes his escape.

The wonderful scenery shown throughout could not have been "caught" anywhere but in the Alps, where the story is laid. The pair go to an inn, where they are surprised by the French and the girl is captured. In escaping by a rope she is recaptured and her lover is taken at the same time. He is sentenced to be shot the following morning. The girl, by giving herself to the Captain, obtains his permission to substitute blank cartridges for the ball. The Captain, however, unknown to the girl, changed the order and Peter is really killed.

This part is pathetic and one can hear the sympathies of the audience in repressed "sniffles" and eye wipings. The idea is an old one and has been successfully worked abroad before. The girl, finally, when she realizes that she has been "double crossed," kills the Captain and surrenders herself.

The Gambler's Ruin. Gaumont two-reels. It will not be overestimating the value of this picture if I say that it is by far the best picture that I have seen in a very long time. This refers in general to photography, scenery, and all the mechanical ends, but especially to the story. The picture in itself is a strong object lesson against the terrible vice of gambling, the curse that has brought many families to poverty, and will undoubtedly bring many more, so terrible is its hold on humanity.

Six months after Cecilia and Peter are married the gambling craze commences to show itself in their daily life, and it is not long after that before they are separated and the man is on his downward path to oblivion. However, after a time when he has become penniless, he seeks his father's aid for money and meets with a refusal. The setting in the father's rooms are very good. The father is an old inventor and the camera shows him seated among his instruments. He bears a remarkable resemblance to Thomas A. Edison, the American genius.

Cecilia also refuses to help Peter, now that he has become such a wreck.

ANNOUNCEMENT

We are now printing the word "Eastman" on the margin of all our Cine film. We want the exhibitor to know when he is and when he is not getting Eastman film. It will be to his advantage—and ours.

Of course it will take time for such identifiable films to reach the consumer—so don't expect results at once—but it's a step in the right direction—for your interests and ours.

Simplex

The Peerless Motion Picture Projector

This is the machine that in less than two years has so far out-distanced all competitors that it now fairly stands alone—the victor—accepted by all progressive users as without an equal.

Nearly every first-class motion picture theatre lately constructed or about to be completed has specified for Simplex equipment. Those houses now in operation, who have equipment that is not giving satisfaction, should at once investigate the claims we make for Simplex, and which are capable of proof.

In addition to selling the best projector made, we give without extra charge advisory service that is of great value to the inexperienced theatre owner.

Do us the favor to inspect the Simplex thoroughly before you buy, or if your present equipment is not up to the required standard necessary to meet your competition. If we fail to convince you the fault is ours.

Send for prices and literature, or call at our salesroom for demonstration.

Peter, in order to get money, robs a house in the country in which Cecilia is now living, she having moved there to avoid his attentions. He discovers her and in a moment of fear strangles her and robs her body. The father has discovered a new system of identifying criminals, and when at last Peter is caught as a suspect, his father tries out his invention, not knowing who the suspect is, and finds out that he is guilty. Then he discovers Peter's identity, and the fact that he has this criminal for a son so shocks him that he drops in a faint, and so the picture closes.

Much effect is gained throughout by showing double pictures by the use of a mirror. The part of Cecilia is played with much effect by Jane Marie-Laurent, the part of her husband by M. Dhartigny. A. M.

General Nelson A. Miles, Colonel (Buffalo Bill) Cody and other prominent Indian fighters made their debuts in "reel" drama recently, when the battle of Wounded Knee was reproduced before a motion picture camera. Two hundred soldiers from Fort Robinson and several hundred Indians participated in the fight. Colonel Cody, accompanied by General Miles, Maus, Baldwin, King and Lee, and Colonel Sickles, charged the redskins.

STATE RIGHT BUYERS

Are going to make a lot of money out of the newest big release

"A BOY AND THE LAW"

FEATURING

JUDGE WILLIS BROWN

AND HIS FAMOUS PARENTAL COURT AND BOY CITY

It's the exciting life-story of a really wonderful boy, following him through the persecution of Jews in Russia; imprisonment and escape to the U. S.; through law defying gang-life here; through the Juvenile Court and a great citizen factory till he becomes the first Mayor of a real City of Boys, and then on to honorable American citizenship.

FIVE REELS OF REAL LIFE

Just the kind of feature every manager is waiting for—true, exciting, and at the same time educational and uplifting. It will appeal to boys, girls, men and women alike.

The most successful feature film Selig ever produced was Judge Brown's "City of Boys," simply a few scenes in Boytown.

"A Boy and the Law" is Judge Brown's second and much bigger venture in the Movies. It's a real Photoplay. He appears personally in many of the hundred and fifty scenes.

It is good for the regular moving picture houses or may be booked in the large theatres and opera houses at advanced prices. Some state right buyers are preparing to do this. Premier in New York will be at the big New York Theatre on Broadway the week of Oct. 27. Come and see it.

COLUMBIA UNIVERSITY

ADOPTS THE WORLD FAMOUS

Simplex PROJECTOR

Columbia University of New York City is the largest in the world in point of attendance. In scientific matters, it has no superior.

The heads of the scientific departments who will use the Simplex projector, each has an international reputation and is recognized as the final authority in their own particular field of research.

The fact that this learned body of scientists selected the Simplex projector for their work is conclusive proof that it is scientifically correct and mechanically perfect.

No greater compliment can be paid to any machine than the endorsement of such an Institution.

It should be of great encouragement to the trade that the price of the Simplex projector places it within reach of the small exhibitor as well as the large one, thus making it possible for all live up-to-date exhibitors to give their patrons perfect projection by means of a machine which is built to wear.

Last Days of Pompeii

As Presented in America by

GEORGE KLEINE

Has Again Shattered All Known Attendance Records Here and Abroad!

This Magnificent Photo-Drama is Now Available for Theatres of All Kinds.

You Can Rent or Share

"The Last Days of Pompeii"! You can pack your house to the uttermost—clean up a month's profit in a single day and leave in the minds of your patrons an unforgettable impression of a night of joy!

Thursday, October 16th, was a rainy, cold and foggy day. The Great De Luxe Theatre at Evanston and Wilson Avenues, considered one of the finest picture theatres in Chicago, billed "THE LAST DAYS OF POMPEII" for a single night. Thousands were turned away! Enthusiasm became almost a riot—help was needed to keep the throngs in line at 20 cents a head! Streets were impassable for the third and last show at 9.30 P.M.! Automobiles lined the curb for two blocks either way—women fainted in the pushing crowds—electric fans over the box office were turned into the mass, despite the cold—The De Luxe never saw its like before or since!

You can do the same. Write quick if you want the benefit of this mighty subject while still new in your territory!

"The Last Days of Pompeii" was made at Turin and Pompeii, Italy. 5000 people were employed in the making—a tremendous throng that gives a weight and power to one of the most beautiful stories of any age or clime!

Keep Your Stars Before the Public!

Your Present Method of Advertising Attracts the Passer-By Our Publicity Cuts Go Into the Homes and Bring Them Out
They Stimulate Old Business — They Create New Business

ENTERPRISING, progressive exhibitors everywhere are successfully using the amusement columns of the daily and weekly newspapers to advertise their coming attractions and to keep their stars before the public. If you are not doing the same thing, BEGIN NOW AND WATCH YOUR AUDIENCES GROW. The best way to get this publicity free is to furnish your local newspaper with it in the most convenient and attractive form, the way the publisher wants it. That's just what we are doing for you. We know how they want it and we are supplying it accordingly. We print in the accompanying catalogue cuts of well known and popular players. The cuts and borders are gotten up in newspaper style, ready for use.

The cut printed herewith is a sample of the cuts we manufacture. We will supply you with a similar cut of any actor or actress in filmdom.

Every exhibitor should run one or more of these beautiful cuts in his local paper at least once or twice per week. Playgoers who have through habit been patronizing other houses regularly, will see your announcement, will be attracted by the picture of an old favorite, and you will see new faces at the performance and increased receipts at the box office.

At regular intervals you should run in the amusement columns a cut of one of the players who appears on your screen, with the wording below "Now Playing at_____," inserting the name of your theatre, followed by a brief write-up of the actor or actress, which we supply. These faces are old friends to thousands of playgoers and many persons who have settled down at home for the evening will see the photograph of their favorite actor or actress and visit your theatre. In other words these illustrations will stimulate old business and create new business, all of which means increased receipts.

These New Process Cuts are something new, something the publisher of your paper has perhaps never seen before, and you will find that he will be glad to run them for you. If you print a program or if you distribute circulars you can also use the cuts for that purpose.

Under each cut we print the name and number. The price of the small cuts is 25c. each, or $2.50 per doz., all transportation charges prepaid. The price of the large cuts is 50c. each, or $5 per doz., all transportation charges prepaid. Please make your selection and fill out order blank, inclosing the required amount and you will receive your order by return mail. Do not put the matter off, BUT SIT DOWN NOW AND FILL IN BLANK BELOW.

ANNOUNCEMENT

We are now printing the word "Eastman" on the margin of all our Cine film. We want the exhibitor to know when he is and when he is not getting Eastman film. It will be to his advantage—and ours.

Of course it will take time for such identifiable films to reach the consumer—so don't expect results at once—but it's a step in the right direction—for your interests and ours.

Coming Two Reel Releases

SILAS MARNER

From the famous novel by George Eliot.

We have preserved all the dramatic situations of George Eliot's great novel and have worked out her vivid character descriptions in a way that is sure to make a strong appeal to the thousands who are familiar with the novel. The film, as a film, will win the favor of those who do not know the novel because of the many big dramatic moments in the life of the weaver, Silas Marner.

Released Friday, October 24th

JANET OF THE DUNES

From the novel by Harriet T. Comstock.

When Devant deserts his country bred wife she flings herself into the sea, leaving little Janet in care of Captain Billy. The girl finds a secret entrance into a deserted house—Devant's—and is discovered there by him although he does not suspect her identity. An artist friend of his paints Janet, and falls in love with her. Devant learns who she is and, overcome by remorse, swears to atone for the desertion of her mother.

Released Friday, October 31st

"BIG BILL" STEINER

North American Film Corporation Takes the Field

UNLIKE the poet of whom I wrote last week, the film man can be made, given a modicum of inherited intelligence—brains; in other words, experience, hard work and devotion to the business, you can produce a film man who will be a credit to himself and the business. In this class I place William F. (Bill) Steiner, one of the best and most experienced film men in the business today. A real pioneer. A man to be respected, a man who deserves to "get his" (in the local vernacular) in right of hard work. Billy is a young man—he is still under forty — and should achieve, as he deserves, success.

WILLIAM F. STEINER

Mr. Steiner is a product of the epochal year of 1896 when the great chemico-scientists, A. & L. Lumiere, made the modern motion picture possible by their beautiful productions. The world owes much to the genius of France, and in my humble opinion certainly owes much to French readiness to demonstrate the artistic possibilities of the motion picture. This the Lumieres, in my opinion, were the first to do. Mark what I say, the artistic possibilities. Other great workers dealt with the industrial, the commercial, the business and other ends, but it is French genius and French artists' work that made motion pictures possible.

In those days Billy Steiner "slept under the counter." He began to sell motion pictures imported by himself and others. Then a little later he began to make them in a small way. Then still later he began to handle them commercially. So much so that five or six years ago Mr. Steiner was at the head of the largest film exchange in New York City. He not only ran exchanges but he ran theatres and ran them successfully.

It was a sight to go in any morning into the Imperial Film Exchange and see the floor black with operators changing films. In this way Mr. Steiner made money and friends and popularity, and added to his experience and knowledge.

Four and a half years ago the Edicts and Ukases from 80 Fifth avenue put Billy out of business. By way of complimentary return he had several suits for damages amounting to a million or two against 80 Fifth avenue. Number 80 made Billy bankrupt, but Billy smiled. He made and sold Yankee Films, he made and sold feature films. He can operate a camera (he teaches camera men), he can develop pictures, he can arrange scenarios, he can direct pictures. There isn't a nook or cranny in this business into which Steiner has not penetrated by hard practical experience.

Mr. Steiner is the practical head of the North American Film Corporation which is shortly to assert itself as a potent factor in the motion picture business of the world. With Mr. Steiner there are associated good practical picture men and makers. These men under Bill's guidance have been quietly at work for months past making stock in various parts of the country.

I went down to the North American studio the other day. It is the old Reliance studio in working order. I was greeted by many film friends there who are basic parts of the North American organization. I saw prints of some forthcoming releases. These are well-acted pictures built around fine stories, well photographed. They will please the motion picture public of the world because they are good motion pictures.

The North American controls twenty of its own exchanges. Now the owning of twenty exchanges makes any combination a powerful factor in the business. And the North American is to be also, I think, a good factor. I am betraying no secrets when I say that Billy Steiner's vicissitudes in this business have been almost contemporaneous with my own. "A fellow feeling makes us wondrous kind," and I freely say that I feel friendly disposed toward Mr. Steiner. There are many less worthy than he, less experienced than he, less deserving than he, but who have been well advertised who are more successful. But Billy should and will get his.

Mr. Steiner has hosts of well wishers throughout the world. He is loyal, free handed and good natured. He is a good fellow and a good man and beyond all he is a good film man.

Some of Mr. Steiner's pupils are doing exceedingly well. He knows how to train them. Many an actor, actress and producer owe their first chance to him. He has helped them to success in the film business. He is a thoroughly practical man and a hard worker. Above all things, if popularity be an asset, the subject of this sketch has a large stock of it. So large indeed that it would be difficult to estimate the number of his sincere well wishers. He has a band of loyal helpers. A better and more experienced director than Pierce Kingsley you could not find in a day's march. And Pierce is loyally helping the North American by producing some fine well-acted pictures. But Pierce himself, good boy, will form the subject of a separate sketch by and by. Then there is Jimmie Maher and he, good boy, will figure in these pages. Moreover, there are other prominent men of affairs taking a hand in the business end of the North American. Their names and ratings, when they are made known, will inspire the fullest confidence in the efficiency of what is designed to be a great film organization. But chiefest interest, of course, centers this moment in the practical figure, and that is W. F. Steiner. You cannot put a good man down. The fact that he is a good man is almost a certainty as it as an assurance that he is bound to make good. He is making good pictures, and is going to distribute them throughout the world.

The North American program isn't ready—but it is nearly so, and when it is ready it will be seen that it is worth handling, and that the pictures are being shown in the best motion picture theatres. There is always room at the top, and there is room for W. F. Steiner and his organization to take a topmost place in this great business. "'Tis not in mortals to command success, but we will do more. We will deserve it." This line was written by William Shakespeare. It is applicable to the subject of this sketch. It seems very repellent to write of such an engaging personality in this form and style. He is just plain Bill. He always was Bill and always will be Bill to his friends. He is one of the few men in the business of whom you never hear a harsh or unkind word said. When adversity came he faced it like a man and paid up. Some men face adversity and don't pay.

The offices of the North American are at present in the Exchange Building. I believe that new and large offices are in course of being taken. The old Reliance studio at present, well adapted for the work of staging and developing, is to be enlarged. There is plenty of spare ground space round about it. It is down there at Coney Island, facing the water. It is well situated. Within short distances from the studio, you may get material for a variety of settings. Small beginnings have great endings or rather very frequently have great developments. There is no reason at all why this Reliance Studio should not vastly expand and become as I think it will become, as big as any similar building in the country. You need a big studio and printing plant when you start in to make a program of motion pictures. The North American has made a good start, as I can testify. The world is all before it, where to choose, and in my opinion it has chosen a path which will lead it to great and every expanding success.

IT is all the more desirable that pioneer men of the type of Steiner should be encouraged in this stage of the motion picture business because of the entry into it of many who have neither his knowledge nor experience. To the pioneer belongs or should belong the spoils. The newcomers will "get theirs" in course of time when they have brought or paid for their experience. The fittest will survive and Bill is one of the fittest.

In course of time, we shall have a central institution devoted to the archives and records of motion picture progress and Billy, good man, will surely figure in those archives. It must be nice when you die to feel that you are going to form part of the history of the place you are leaving. Some certainty about that. After you leave the earth there is still, it seems, some uncertainty as Mr. Law is finding out.

Good luck, Bill!

By J.B.

"ST. PATRICK was a gintleman; he came of dacent people; he built a church in Doublin town, and on it put a stheeple." He was a grand man, St. Patrick. Patrick is one of the several names which should come between the T. and B. of this page. Only I don't use it or them. His Majesty of England has quite a number of Christian names in front of his surname. He, however, prefers to be called plain George; as I prefer to be called plain Tom. When I saw, some time ago, that a film on the subject of St. Patrick was to be made and released, I was genuinely interested. I am a bit of an Irishman myself and also a member of the ancient faith, though English. I have lived in Ireland and know the Irish intimately. Without laboring this point, I can see the extreme importance and value of such a film.

* * * *

THE patron saint of Ireland was, if I have my history correct, a Roman patrician. He was a missionary and he converted the heathen. He was the first primate of Ireland. The primate of Ireland resides in the See of Armagh. It is one of the most illustrious sees in the world. Cardinal Logue, the present occupant, is the hundredth and something successor of Patrick. You get an idea of the antiquity of the See of Armagh—its comparative antiquity—when I tell you that it is very near the Papacy in point of age. The present Pope is the two hundredth and something occupant of the Papal throne; the present successor of St. Patrick is the hundredth and something, so you see the latter is a pretty old job compared with the oldest position of its kind.

* * * *

OF all people on the globe, the Irish are probably more devoted to their patron saint than any other. The English have a very tepid devotion to Saint George. But then the English are tepid people; cold and phlegmatic. The patron Saint of Scotland is St. Andrew. The Scotch don't enthuse much over their man. The Scotch enthuse very little over anything but the haggis. Nobody but a true Scot can eat haggis. St. Patrick was a good man, judged by any standard of comparison, and his life is a lesson for all. Some saints have been violent persons, according to history. He was not. He not merely represents a pattern of sanctity; he is a national sentiment, and, being a sentiment, any picture around his personality makes a strong appeal to the Irish race—who are emotional, imaginative, generous and irrational.

* * * *

IF I were to go on at any length writing about this particular subject I might get garrulous. So I will refrain. But being a bit of an Irishman myself, I love argument. It is one of the traits of the Irish race, that they love arguments. Have you ever been to Donnybrook? Here the typical Irishman is said to trail the tail of his coat so that somebody may tread on it and start a row. The Irish race labors under many misapprehensions, the chiefest of which is that all other people want to row with them. The English are their pet aversion. Per contra—the English love the Irish. They love them so much that they never will grant them home rule for the simple reason that they know the Irish would fight themselves to death.

* * * *

TO be serious, Ireland is properly known as the Isle of Saints. Through all the vicissitudes of the ages, the majority of the Irish people have, rightfully or wrongfully, as the case may be, stuck to the faith of their forefathers. The north of Ireland people are not true Irish in the so-called meaning of the term. In England the greater proportion of the Roman Catholics there are Irish. In the United States, of the fourteen million Roman Catholics in the country, the greater majority are Irish, and the same proportion applies to Canada, Australia, Africa and other parts of the world.

* * * *

SO a film on the subject of St. Patrick appeals to a large percentage of motion picture theatregoers, and, being on a good theme, it cannot but do good. The life of any good man is a fit theme for a motion picture, but when you come to a supereminent man like Saint Patrick why, then, the good that is to be done by influencing the minds of those who look at the film is not easily to be measured. I think I am well within the mark in saying that this is the first film made on the subject of a life of a saint. We have had Pagan Rome, Greece and other scenes of ignorant profligacy made into pictures and now the balance is to be adjusted and we are to have a life of a saint, i.e., that of a good man.

TEACHING THE SUBJECT

IF to Syracuse University belongs the credit of being the first academical body to institute a professorship of the motion picture and to afford its alumni the opportunity of graduating in the science and obtain, presumably, degrees, it is to another country that the credit must be assigned for taking a step which places the study of the art and science of motion picture making within the reach of people of limited means. Last week we printed a letter and an article dealing with the suggested formation of a motion picture society, college or institute. It must be evident to all men of intelligence from this data that the question of the proper study of the motion picture art and science is in the air. The work is passing out of the empirical or trial and error stage and the demand is for real definite, concrete knowledge applied to the subject. This knowledge can only be obtained by hard study under proper guidance.

* * * *

IN various parts of Europe for the past twenty-five years there have been founded polytechnics or technical institutes—we refer especially to Germany, Austria, France and England—where for a little money you could study photography in many of its branches. You could qualify by examination and get honors. Many photographers and photo-engravers throughout the world obtained their knowledge that way, and this has led them to successful business. These places are just like colleges where the casual day or evening student can work up his subject.

* * * *

NOW we see with feelings of pleasure that the Polytechnic Institute in London under Professor E. Howard Farmer is opening classes for the study of the motion picture or cinematography, as it is clumsily called across the Atlantic. Professor Farmer is a personal acquaintance and correspondent of our own. In the last quarter of a century he has taught thousands of photographers. Some of the finest photographic artists in the world owe their original tuition to Professor Farmer and his efforts. Now we know that the subject of the motion picture at the London Polytechnic will be handled in such a way that the classes of students will be able to gain a practical insight into the subject. We wish we could persuade the authorities of the polytechnics or high schools in this country to do as Professor Farmer is doing across the Atlantic; that is, to give young students desirous of studying the principles of the art and science of motion picture making the opportunity of doing so for a small fee of a few dollars. It is apparent to us that there are many thousands who would freely avail themselves of the chance.

* * * *

WE feel so strongly on this subject, we realize so fully its importance that we shall bring this issue of The Motion Picture News containing this article to the notice of eminent educational authorities in the hope and the expectation that the proper facilities for studying the subject will be provided.

* * * *

THE more the pre-eminence of the motion picture is studied the more clearly intelligent men will see that even in the study of its making so many sources of human knowledge must be tapped that it is in itself an educative stimulator. Take anybody with a perfectly clear mind and with natural intelligence and start to make him a maker of motion pictures. Just consider what branches of knowledge you will oblige him to familiarize himself with. He must "get acquainted" with chemistry and physics, with theoretical and practical optics; he must be well equipped with what is conveniently called general knowledge. He should certainly have more than a nodding acquaintance with literature. The picture maker in a sense must be looked upon as an author and scholar, and film manufacturers and makers as in a sense publishers. That is to say, those who are competent to do the work from beginning to end, or at least supervise it, must be, as it were, the possessors of all possible knowledge. They make the picture; the film manufacturer sells it.

FOR saints, as I understand them, were just good men, plain good men who worked, lived, suffered and died for a cause. Such a film, therefore, in making this wide appeal should be assured of a long career. I hope the churches will take it up or rather the church interested in this subject. I went through years of training of a theological kind. I used to breakfast, luncheon and dine on lives of the saints, and I retain, I think, a pretty good idea of the salient points in the lives of all the great saints. And, of course, millions of others are in like mental degree with me. But I think had I as a child and youth looked upon motion pictures illustrative of their lives I might have been more influenced. I might have led a better life which is easily possible. And I might have been by way of being a saint myself. But I have entirely given up THAT idea. By the way, the reader may not know that the United States has produced one real saint. It might be a good thing to film his life for the information of American Catholics.

I ASSERT that this film cannot possibly be a bad one because it is on a good theme. It is a good feature film subject. Not many weeks ago I was lashing the unsuitability of theme chosen for these feature films. I put it to you, reader, who would you rather see in films, Harry Kendall Thaw or St. Patrick? I know what you will say in reply. Now we are coming to the difference between a good and bad feature film subjectively. Thaw is and was a degenerate. You cannot possibly make a good film out of his stupid adventures and misadventures, but out of the life of a man like Patrick, who at least was a civilizer, you cannot fail to make a good film. The theme being good, its treatment must be good in greater or less degree. That stands to reason. There is a great Ireland in the United States—a great Ireland of sentiment and feeling. One of the greatest pleasures I have had in New York City was to listen to Cardinal Logue, the successor of St. Patrick. He is an old gentleman and a witty old gentleman, although a Cardinal. With true Irish wit, he said when I heard him talk, that he came to this country to discover a new way of being killed—that is, by kindness.

ALL THE STARS AT THE ALL STAR NIGHT

Harry Raver Directs a Multiple-Reel Filler

TO wish Mr. Philip Klein, of the All Star Film Corporation, bon voyage, there was held on Tuesday evening last a beefsteak supper at Healey's restaurant, Sixty-sixth street and Columbus avenue, New York City. About twenty-five friends of Mr. Philip Klein appeared to support him and give him a send-off.

Mr. Harry R. Raver, president of the All Star Corporation, introduced Mr. J. W. Farnham as toastmaster. Guests included Mr. and Mrs. Philip Klein, Mr. and Mrs. G. J. Cooke, Mr. and Mrs. L. McGill, all of the All Star organization; Mr. Joe Miles and Mrs. Miles, Exclusive Film Company; Mr. J. B. Clymer, Mr. J. L. Hoff, Mr. L. Reeves Harrison, Mr. McArthur of the Moving Picture World; Mr. William Allen Johnston and Mr. Thomas Bedding, of the Motion Picture News; Mr. Fred Beecroft, Dramatic Mirror; Mr. and Mrs. A. Butler Graham; Mr. G. D. Proctor and Mr. Wendell Milligan, Morning Telegraph; Mr. Arthur Selwin, Mrs. Raver, etc.

Joe Farnham, newly associated with the All Star Corporation in an executive capacity, revealed unsuspected powers of oratory, introducing each speaker very tactfully.

It was suggested by Mr. L. R. Harrison that the function being so agreeable, it should form the nucleus of a weekly social gathering. Mr. Hoff, on being called on to speak, protested against being disturbed. On Farnham expressing surprise that Thomas Bedding and J. L. Hoff should be seated side by side, the two shook hands cordially. He called the former the Disraeli of the business, and in his reply Disraeli told stories implying that there was hope for motion picture editors to enter heaven. George Proctor scored the oratorical success of the evening by a witty speech in which he keenly criticised the toastmaster, who was paid by the pound for his services that evening.

Mr. Cooke, of the All Star Corporation, spoke appreciatively of his association with that body. At the end of it all, Philip Klein spoke feelingly of

The Toll of the Marshes

Essanay

A PHASE of life which is every day experienced by many unfortunates whose love of nature has compelled them to answer the "Back to the Land" call, but through the evil schemings of land agents are victims to unscrupulous money grabbers.

"The Toll of the Marshes" hits a human strain and makes an interesting story.

John Hammond, a young man whose activities in a commercial way have been confined to the city, but whose remuneration was not big, determines to take his mother south to buy a small piece of property, work a piece of farm land, and be independent. Mrs. Hammond, who knows more of the world than her son, pleads with him to continue where he is, arguing that the future would probably be brighter. John, however, like most sons, prevails upon his mother and wins out. He secures her permission to invest their savings, a few hundred dollars, into some land in the Southern states.

Enthused over their new acquisition, they leave for the farm country immediately. Their confidence in men and the good things in life are shattered when they discover that their farm is nothing more or less than swamp land. Without funds they are forced to remain there until they can earn enough to take them back to the North.

We are taken back to the office of the land president, where we see him gloating over his victims and furnishing his wife with the hard sweat and blood-stained money his investors had so willingly given up to him. John and his mother manage to make a bare living harvesting flags, but this does not last long, as Mrs. Hammond is gradually becoming a victim of malaria. The swindling land agents think little of their suffering victims, of those little ones death is claiming because of the terrible disease that so easily is bred in the low, swampy marsh land.

Rogers, the president of the land company, takes a trip to the South. He secures accommodations in the best hotel the town affords. Rogers' wife and child have accompanied him. The daughter, at a time she is not being watched, wanders off and gets lost in the marshes. Mrs. Hammond, completely worn out from her hard work and the ravages of the on-creeping fever, is compelled to have medical attention. John goes in search of a doctor. On his return from the doctor's house he finds Josephine stuck fast in the treacherous marsh, clinging to the weeds for her life.

Rogers is notified that his child is lost. The man who had robbed the poor for his own selfish sake, forgets his wealth and risks his life in Swampville, searching for his daughter. His land victims try to shoot him. He offers reimbursement to all in case his child is restored to him. Hammond carries the child to his tent, where the doctor is attending his mother. Medical attention is given her. Mrs. Hammond pulls through all right. Rogers returns the money for the land to Hammond. Mother and son agree to return to the North and Josephine is returned to her father.

SCENE FROM "THE TOLL OF THE MARSHES"

THE GENERAL FILM CO.'S EXCLUSIVE PROGRAM

The General Film Company has announced the addition of two more reels to its Exclusive Service program.

The original idea was to furnish twelve reels a week, divided into three programs of one multiple and two singles every second day.

The first release of the Exclusive Service twelve-reel plan was made on October 13th and proved a success, so great that the General Film Company wizards who had, in solving the Exclusive Service problem, accomplished a feat that has been considered impossible, were driven at top speed to keep pace with the progress of their idea.

Three months' hard work had been put in by the committee in working out the details of the new service, and it was thought that every wrinkle had been so well smoothed out that their plans would slide along without a jolt. But even the most confident of the wizards had not looked for the rush of bids which came in from all parts of the country the first week the service was turned loose.

Next week Exclusive Service program will be made up of fourteen reels, and it will be possible for any exhibitor whose business requires it, to secure a complete exclusive entertainment without resorting to a single "filler."

The General Film Company has received, in addition to orders, many letters expressing the gratification of the exhibitor over the assurance that the Exclusive program is not being prepared at the expense of the regular program, which will continue to be made up of the best quality films that the ten licensed manufacturers are able to produce.

Most of the letters express satisfaction with the statement made that Exclusive Service would not be furnished in any locality where its use might work a hardship on the exhibitor who is already using licensed service.

Mason Hopper, director, has been engaged by the Universal Company to produce comedies. Mr. Hopper's experience as a director has been extensive, having been associated for the past three years with the Essanay Film Manufacturing Company in the same capacity. Prior to entering the film game he started in vaudeville.

OVER THE CLIFFS

In a forthcoming Eclair release, "Over the Cliffs," Lindsay J. Hall made a jump during the taking of one scene from the top of a 228-foot cliff down a distance of 30 feet. This jump was taken from a pinnacle of rock, extending out 17 feet, the surface of which was but 6 inches wide. This narrow space was all that stood between Hall and eternity, and it is absolutely one of the most daring risks that has ever been taken by a photoplay artist in order to add realism to the same.

The camera operator confessed afterwards that he was unable to watch the man jump, as he expected to see him dashed to pieces on the rocks below, and when the picture was over the entire company was so unnerved that operations were declared suspended for the rest of the day.

This is but one of many such thrilling and hair-raising stunts which are pulled off in this picture, and photoplay patrons throughout the country have something coming to them when this Eclair production, "Over the Cliffs," is thrown on the screen for their edification and enjoyment. It will be a three-reel Eclair American feature film.

the great heartiness of his reception.

There was dancing in which Mrs. Klein, Mr. Clymer and others distinguished themselves. Mr. Raver danced for the first time, and it is understood that the writer of this article is about to emulate Harry by and by. After the dancing there was a lavish shedding of champagne and more good wishes for Mr. Klein.

Then the whole of the party motored to ship side and literally saw Philip Klein off the premises. There is no doubt in our minds that he will be cordially welcomed by the London film trade, as he is the possessor of an agreeable personality and has an intelligent grasp of the possibilities of the motion picture business.

We heartily congratulate the All Star on the success of a most enjoyable little function.

The Great Northern Film Company announces that the film production of Gerhart Hauptmann's "Atlantis" has cost $100.000. The feature will in all probability reach twelve reels. The sinking of a ship in mid-ocean and the rescue of many of her passengers is one of the exciting incidents of the photodrama. The offices of the Great Northern Company, in the World's Tower Building, 110 West 40th Street, is being asked for information concerning this feature, but as yet Mr. Oes is not prepared to make public his plans for its handling. A circular is being prepared which will be sent to the trade within a short time.

When Branch No. 11 of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League met in convention at Rochester, N. Y., last week their attention was directed on one evening to an exhibition of Warner's features, staged in the Hotel Rochester by D. J. Chatkin, local manager for the Buffalo office of Warner's Features, Inc. Mr. Chatkin scored a hit with "The Way to Happiness" and "Francesca da Rimini."

POWERS NO. 6-A PROJECTS GEO. KLEINE SPECTACLE

The Geo. Kleine big production, "The Last Days of Pompeii," opened at the Bijou Theatre, New York, last Monday. The show was well attended, and the six-reel spectacle was beautifully projected by Powers' Cameragraph No. 6-A. It is to be a four-a-day show.

FOR THOSE WHO WORRY O'ER PLOTS AND PLAYS

William Lord Wright

Sir Herbert's Confession

THEATRICAL managers are noted for the poor quality of the drama they offer us. To quote "The Film Man," of the Dramatic Mirror: "Manufacturers of motion pictures, the men who exhibit the films, and the public that pays to see them, are within their rights in demanding treatment on a par with that accorded purveyors of stage entertainment." One almost believes that stageland managers would do better if they produced the plays they reject. A drama that they believe possesses popular appeal is put on the stage and immediately shunted off either by the police or an unappreciative public. Every season Broadway has been strewn with such wrecks. On the other hand, we read of plays, such as "Paid in Full," which went begging for months and was then produced only in a half-hearted manner by obscure managers, who afterwards reaped a fortune. Indeed, the query is pertinent—how many plays which we would have enjoyed have been suppressed by managers who seemingly have one hand on the till and the other on the public purse? Sir Herbert Tree, according to the Cincinnati Times-Star, has made a confession that will perturb the theatregoer, for Sir Herbert's sins must be few compared with those of his less intelligent rivals. The English actor-manager admits having refused production to "Peter Pan," "Kismet," "The Prisoner of Zenda," and "If I Were King." It is a matter of theatrical history that they eventually found production and great success. This leads us to the inquiry: How many good plays have been refused in both stageland and filmland and have never found production, because, mayhap, the technical development was not such to suit some fastidious reader? How many "Paid in Fulls" and "Great Divides" have died premature deaths because of editorial rejection? It is something on which statistics are impossible, but it is nevertheless interesting as a suggestion. We dare some village Barrie to send a "Peter Pan" to the ordinary (we said ordinary) New York producer. If it ever appeared it doubtless would be expurgated of poetic charm and its name significantly changed to "Peter Punch."

Kinemacolor Treatment

"Kinemacolor Treatment" has become a significant expression among photoplaywrights. It means the best of treatment. We receive hundreds of complaints weekly, of all kinds and designs, but the magic name of Kinemacolor is conspicuous by its absence. It is a record to cause pride. Mr. Perry N. Vekroff, editor for Kinemacolor of America, writes the following interesting communication to the department:

"Being somewhat overstocked at present, the Kinemacolor Company of America is considering such scripts only as excell in originality of treatment and strength of plot and situations. We prefer stories that can be developed into one or two-reel comedies and modern dramas. An occasional melodrama, Western or otherwise, is also acceptable, providing it is written around some theme which can elevate as well as thrill and entertain. While the value of a scenario is determined according to the strength of the plot and originality of its treatment, the preparation of the script itself is also an important factor. The less editing a manuscript will require, the more its value will be when the check is made out to the author. In fact, technical perfection in this respect is fast becoming one of our principal requirements, it being the policy of this department to be abreast with the progress of up-to-date and efficient production. A concise yet comprehensive synopsis is generally the first ear-mark of conscientious effort in scenario writing. This should so outline the salient features of the story submitted as to enable our readers to grasp its value at once. Subtitles and the description of the action itself should likewise be short and clear. The author must bear in mind that the director will endeavor to 'put over' the story in as few feet of film as possible. Indulgence in details, other than those essential toward development of the plot, are quite unnecessary. The sad deficiency of most authors in this respect is perhaps largely responsible for the delay in their being credited upon the screen. Technically perfect scenarios are few compared with those that must be edited and practically rewritten that it would hardly be just to make a general practice of a courtesy to which only a limited number of authors are entitled. In the instance of our own department, the privilege of screen publicity is extended only when the benefit thereof promises to be of equal advantage to ourselves as well as to the author. As to the question whether directors should best confine themselves to directing and editors to editing, the writer's experience in both capacities has taught him to believe that best results can be obtained through the close co-operation of editor and director, rather than through any arbitrary arrangement between the two. During the course of production many a contingency is likely to arise whereby the play may be marred or improved, as the case may be. It would be a pity, indeed, if the director, for fear less he infringe on the editor's province, hesitated to make a change here and there which would improve the play as a whole. No matter how carefully a scenario may have been prepared at the editor's desk, parts of it are bound to turn out differently at rehearsals. The director, therefore, should be invested with sufficient authority to alter according to the dictates of his better judgment. For, after all, when all is said and done, it is he who is held responsible for the success or failure of the production."

Editor Vekroff puts the proper relationship of editor and director concisely and logically. Anent his argument as to film and poster credit for photoplaywrights, we differ. If an author writes an excellent script he should be credited therefor. To credit only those names "which will be a benefit to both author and manufacturer" is rather a selfish attitude. If an obscure writer turns in deserving work and receives poster and film credit therefor, his name ere long will possibly prove valuable to the producer, just as his script has proven of value. Mr. Vekroff's statement is valuable to all writers, particularly the question of script preparation.

The Woes of Authorship

Here is a letter from a lady who has experienced the woes of authorship. We have endeavored to tear away some of the tares and thistles that have obstructed her upward journey along the literary path, and predict that she will be heard from sooner or later, now that she is started right: "I've come to you because I have not been able to get the help I need from people who, generous or not, never fail to collect in advance. Not wanting to work in the darkness, I paid the 'school' $22.50 to teach me the art of photoplay writing. Among my exercises was a play about a woman whose husband objected to equal suffrage. He is nominated, becomes ill, and his wife jumps into the fray and wins his election for him. I thought it was a comedy, but the 'faculty' said it should be developed along serious lines. I acted upon the suggestion, but the editors would have none of it. Later I sent it to an 'expert.' He tore it to pieces and told me to write it another way. I did so and sent it to him, and he said, 'It is too weak.' If he had told me how to strengthen the weak points, I would still have my faith. Now I am at the beginning again. I feel that my money has been spent in vain, and that I am as much in the woods as when I started. I want to know the truth about my work, and how to bring it up to standard. I have done my best to make a good play, and have bought all the 'expert help' I can. It's up to you and your generosity." We violated a necessarily strict rule in this particular instance, and read the play that accompanied the above letter. It was written in longhand, good handwriting, but nevertheless longhand. The script proved the author a careful student of technic and familiar with proper lay-out. For the first script it was exceptionally well prepared. The story was too long for a single reel and too short for a multiple-reel production. The plot was hackneyed as a drama, but the idea could be turned into comedy, and by its very nature succeed excellently well. We advised the writer to forget the "school instruction," to rent a typewriter, to take a notebook and visit the motion picture theatre and dissect the playlets; we urged her to subscribe for and read all motion picture publications, and, finally, to be independent of "professors" and "sharks," and to use her own ideas, which, in this instance at least, might have won her an early market and saved her the expenditure of $22.50. The advice we gave this lady is applicable to hundreds of others of our readers.

Hennessy Is Ill

George Hennessy, the only man who ever had the courage to state, after trying the game, that photoplaywright correspondence courses are impractical, has been very ill in Bellevue Hospital, New York. Word reaches us that he is slowly improving. We are glad to hear it, for the game could ill afford to lose so versatile and voluminous an author as Hennessy. He will probably be glad to hear from his friends. We said friends—not "pull-seekers."

The Hall of Fame

James Dayton, head of the Western Universal script department, is doing some extraordinary work. According to Universal press sheet, he wrote twenty-seven scripts during July and August, every one of which was produced.

Jack Byrne, staff reader under Editor-in-Chief Calder Johnstone, of Universal, is doing some fine commercial work. He is also a splendid director, and is producing the commercial features in great shape.

Universal employs eleven scriptwriters on the coast.

The screen adaptation of "Tess of the d'Urbervilles" is a triumph of silent art. Everyone is wondering who wrote the picture story. It was Benny Schulberg, of course, and he did it under pressure, and that is just when he works the best.

Maibelle Heikes Justice stopped writing two-reel features just long enough to dash off a vaudeville one-act sketch for Robert Drouet, who was waiting for it, and there are more coming. Then Captain Peacocke is going to do it again. Verily, it seems that stageland's stars are turning to photoplay writers for material.

Miss Louise Lester, better known in filmland as "Calamity Anne," writes all her own scenarios in which she plays this character.

The Slough of Despond

Four heads of correspondence schools, incldng Eugene Berry Watts, whom we here and now dub "Kilowatts," are in the slough of despond. Uncle Sam has been taking the "course." "Everybody cannot do it." If you have any complaint to make anent any particular "schools," making money through misleading advertising, write to the Postoffice Department, Washington, D. C.

Word from Buffalo

C. E. Horton, 361 Normal avenue, Buffalo, N. Y., wishes Mr. Sargent to inform him about his Inquest Club, and we suggest that Mr. Horton address Box 70, Madison Square Station, New York City. Horton also says "I have noticed in several of the magazines, devoted to writing in general, some articles on 'How I Wrote and Sold My First Photoplay,' which were apparently written by persons knowing little or nothing of the game in the least. Now I haven't exactly arrived yet myself, but I do feel that I could write a very good article on how I did write and sell my first one. I read three of Charles Van Loan's interesting and instructive stories in the Saturday Evening Post." Horton has read the entire series, then. We never read those "first photoplay essays" he mentions because they frequently make us weary. The clipping Mr. Horton encloses from a newspaper "syndicate" page advises an "amateur producer" to write to Nell Shipman for information as to how to "present a motion picture play in some leading theatre."

You Can Afford It

A photoplaywright stated recently that he could not afford to revise his scripts at present prices. Present prices are not ideal, we admit, but you can afford to revise your scripts for no price at all. Whatever is worth doing is worth doing well. One out of a hundred writers can send out stuff first draft, and send it out complete and intelligently. Have pride enough to send out finished work, and when the halycon days come you will be among the first to profit thereby.

From a Script Reader

A manuscript reader on the editorial staff of one of the best known film concerns sends us this: "I like to give any assistance in my power to budding scenario writers because I agree with you that it is to them the picture producers will have to look in the coming future. I admit that the 'free lance' writer at present has a difficult time to place his stories, except they be of exceptional merit and embrace very original ideas, as the staff writers are in touch with the directors and know exactly what description of stories are required by them. Then, also, each director has usually some star in his company who has to be exploited, and the staff writer has the opportunity of studying their requirements. All this mitigates against the chances of the 'free lance' writer, but the staff writers have nearly all been 'free lances' and have served their apprenticeship. Writers must recognize that nothing is gained except by hard and continued effort.

I believe that giving credit to authors on posters will assist in stopping plagiarism, and it will be an inducement to the better class of writers to enter the field." This letter is interesting, coming as it does from no editor-in-chief, but one of a staff of men who frequently decide whether or not a script is meritorious enough to merit the attention of the editor-in-chief. In commenting thereon, we assert that there is entirely too much "star exploiting" on the motion picture screen. This evil has been carried from stageland to filmville. Stories are written in certain studios purposely to exploit and pamper some high-priced lead who howls to high heaven if a good, consistent plot is submitted in which he fails to have the lion's share of business. Many star writers of yesterday are not star writers of to-day. The work of several is noticeably hackneyed. The course of natural events makes it so. The "free lance" writer of to-day may be the staff writer of to-morrow, and the evils of the "leading man" system we hope to see overcome sooner or later, although in justice, it must be stated that Edison and several other companies do not countenance the evil which mitigates very often against the true worth of output.

Short Story Writing

A Milwaukee, Wis., correspondent writes: "Your advice has proved very valuable to me, and now I am going to take another step forward. I am going to try my hand as a short story writer. It will not be my first effort, as I have been writing stories for practice for over a year, but now I would like to write for publication. What form do you use in writing the short story? Do you place a synopsis before the story proper? What books would you advise me to read, and where would you advise me to secure a lot of competent publications in the field? I am fighting shy of 'schools,' and want to get started in the business right, just as you started me a year ago in the script-writing profession, in which I have achieved some success, thanks to your departments." There is a great demand for good short stories up to about 5,000 words. Any magazine editor is glad to read original work that shows talent. Many script writers are turning to the short story field, just as fiction writers are entering the photoplaywriting profession. Because one has achieved some success as a script writer is no argument that he may win in fiction. The work is not similar only that in both you must be familiar with the writer's tools and trade, and know how to put pen on paper. Many are versatile in both fields of endeavor, the latest and most notable instance being Maibelle Heikes Justice, who devotes one month to fiction work and another to motion picture plays. We have utilized several rejected photoplay plots for short story plots with success. We have also, with permission from kindly magazine editors, utilized our magazine stories for motion picture plays. In fact, the first photoplay we ever sold was taken from a magazine story we had previously sold to a magazine. However, in such instances the permission of the editor in question must first be gained, and this permission had become difficult the past year Dr. Esenwein's "Short Story Writing" and Phillips' "The Plot of the Short Story" are recommended to those ambitious to succeed in the field of fiction. A subscription to "The Writers' Magazine" is also money that is well spent.

What Her Diary Told

American

IN this one-reel picture the American Film Mfg. Co. is releasing another good subject played by their second company. They are to be commended for the inside scenes, which are nicely finished and furnished. The exteriors also are of the kind that are evident in so many American pictures and noted because of their beauty and picturesque background effects.

Miss Winifred Greenwood and Edward Coxen in the leading roles carry their parts well. The photography is of the kind for which the American Film Mfg. Co. is famous. It is clean-cut, shows splendid detail, and is always well in focus. The picture is well constructed and has an interesting story running through it.

Although Janet Warren is in love with Harold King, her desire for wealth and position has taken deep root and leads her to marry John Wilbur, a young man of high social standing. Janet, like many other impressionable young ladies, keeps a diary, and on the night of her marriage confides the story of her love for Harold to her little book. As the weeks pass John is puzzled by her indifference, never dreaming that she had married him for his wealth and position.

One evening, as John chances into her boudoir, he finds her diary on the dressing-table and reads it. He comes across the paragraph relating her love for Harold King. He is stunned and heart-broken and decides to leave her immediately and make it possible for her to marry the man she loves.

Through his attorneys he arranges for a monthly allowance of two thousand dollars to be given her and all his wealth at his death. He then leaves for the mountains, where he becomes a prospector. His absence causes Janet to awaken to the love she bore him. Her efforts to trace him, however, prove futile, and her pining for him makes her ill. On the advice of her physician she goes into

FAKES IN MOTION PICTURES

(From the Scientific American)

A KNOWLEDGE of the various methods by which photographs may be produced is of no small value to the amateur and professional worker. The well-nigh insatiable demand which exists for curious and interesting pictures makes it necessary for the latter to be up-to-date and original in his output, while the former is always desirous of surprising his circle of acquaintances by some new evidence of his skill. By following hints readers will be able to produce an almost endless number of strange and deceptive pictures, not a few of which will be provocative of mirth.

Moonlight effects in photography are generally gained by trickery. Of course it is possible to take photographs by moonlight, the exposure varying from thirty minutes to two hours; the results, however, are rarely satisfactory, owing to the movement of the shadows producing a blurred effect in the finished print. To obtain a moonlight picture of the approved sort—a fine cloud effect with the moon casting a long line of brilliant light upon water—special preparations must be made.

A rather cloudy sunset must be chosen. Then, when the sun drops low on the horizon and is partially obscured by the cloud bank, one seizes the opportunity to secure a snapshot (the lens being well "stopped down") right into the eye of the light. The plate thus obtained should be slightly under-developed. If all has gone well, the resulting negative will supply a picture exactly resembling a moonlight effect, and by carefully gumming a small circle of opaque paper upon the film, one is able to print out the "moon" into the bargain.

Photographs in which the snow appears to be falling are usually produced by artificial means. If the subject is to be a portrait, the sitter should be garbed appropriately and placed before a wintry background. When the negative is obtained it should be dried and well varnished, then place flat upon a table with the film side uppermost. Take a soft toothbrush charged with rather thick India ink and carmine mixed up with water, and draw it over the teeth of a comb, which should be held some little distance from the negative. If this operation is carefully managed the result will be an irregular spattering of the pigment upon the varnished film, and when this is dry a print will be produced which looks just as though the negative had been taken in a snowstorm.

Photographs of the class in which ghosts or visions appear may be "faked" in several ways. The first of these may be described in the duplicate exposure method. Suppose, for example, we wish to photograph a man inside a bottle which will hold no more than a pint of liquid. To accomplish this apparently impossible feat, proceed as follows:

First, photograph the bottle standing upon a dull black support and with similar background. While focussing take care to mark out what will be the bottle's boundaries on the plate by fixing little pieces of gummed paper to the ground glass screen of the camera. Then get your man to stand or sit in a chair upon a black cloth, with a smooth black curtain behind him. Focus upon him so that he falls within the boundaries of the bottle—this being easily managed by means of the gummed paper guides. Finally, expose the plate which has already been used to photograph the bottle; and when this is developed, your friend will duly appear—inside.

This method will be found in practice to explain many pictures which at first seem very astonishing. To make a "vision fake," arrange a little scene, such as a bare room with an empty hearth, with your model sitting listlessly in the foreground. Make your first exposure on this scene, being careful to mark out on the ground glass screen the space into which the vision must fall. A dark curtain, or dark woodwork, should occupy this space in the first picture. Now procure a sheet of dead black paper, mount it evenly upon stiff card, and with a little Chinese white sketch out an appropriate vision.

If you cannot do this yourself, get an artist friend to help you; but see that the sketch is placed in the correct spot, i.e., the spot which you have arranged for it to occupy in the finished picture. When the sketch is finished, set it up before the camera, focus and see that it falls within the required boundary upon the screen. Then expose again the plate which has already done duty, and—if no miscalculations have been made—an interesting "vision" picture will result.

The ghost "fake" may be made in exactly the same way, only in this case an appropriate scene would be a deserted churchyard, with your model posing in awestruck attitude beside a tomb. In all photographs of this kind the reader should bear in mind that a dead black background does not appreciably affect the sensitized plate, but a show plate should be used whenever this is possible as by this means any slight tendency to "fog" will be obviated.

Another way of obtaining this particular k'nd of freak photograph is to fit a tube in front of the lens. Instead of using a cap, the tube should be closed with a kind of folding door arrangement, so that one-half of the lens may be uncovered at a time. A still more simple plan is to use a cap which covers only one-half the aperture, and to control the exposure by means of a shutter behind the lens. This method, however, makes it necessary to "stop down" the lens to at least 1-3, and a long exposure is thus rendered inevitable.

SCENE FROM "THE BARRIER OF BLOOD"
Ammex Feature Film (2 Parts).

It is well known that the nearer an object is to the camera the larger it appears to be in proportion to other objects in the picture; and by taking advantage of this fact some astonishing pictures may be obtained, particularly if a lens of somewhat short focus is employed. Not long ago the writer saw reproduced in a popular magazine a photograph which was described in all seriousness as depicting a cabbage of gigantic proportions.

Doubtless, most people who looked at the picture were deceived for the cabbage partially obscured a whole family of five or six persons who stood somewhere in the background. Yet in reality the vegetable was of only ordinary proportions, and merely looked large in proportion to the human beings because of its nearness to a lens of short focus. In the same way, if a fisherman has caught a fish six inches long it may be made to appear gigantic in the photograph. By means of his rod and line the fisherman may hang the fish a good six or eight feet nearer the camera than he himself is, and the lens does the rest.

Very laughable caricature photographs may be made by simply moving the "swing back" of the camera out of the perpendicular. Your friends may be made to look like reclining giants, or dwarfs with big heads. In fact, an almost endless variety of quaint deformities may be devised by varying the elevation of the camera, and the angle of the back. Care must be taken, however, to "stop down" the lens as much as possible, in order to bring the whole picture well into focus. This, of course, means that a good light is required, otherwise the exposure must be a long one, and your model may move and spoil it.

HOUSE-ORGANS

We (The Bioscope) have pleasure in giving publicity to the following:
To the Editor:

Sir—The exhibitor's life is such a busy one nowadays that he has perforce to limit his reading to the absolutely essential for the well-being and good running of his business. In these circumstances it certainly seems to me that many of the elaborate house-organs and magazines issued by some of the manufacturers are weary reading, and serve no good purpose, unless it be to the printers. It is true that many contain good advertising and useful information, but, alas! both these are only too frequently lost amongst a number of biased so-called "articles," and a mass of excerpts from various papers, the latter, of course, always being stale by a good week. I, for one, have always read them beforehand in the papers or periodicals in which they have originally appeared, and, doubtless, hundreds of other exhibitors find themselves in the same position. As to trade "news," will the trade papers give me the real thing, not the spurious article—manufacturers' advertising. Of course, I want to read, but why shouldn't it be plain and sensible? After all, honest advertising need not be disguised, nor spoiled like good fare is with a poor sauce. Yours, etc.,

London. AN EXHIBITOR.

The Feature Photoplay Co. has transferred its offices from the Exchange Building to the Candler Building at 220 West 42nd Street. The program which the Feature Photoplay Co. has mapped out for its future includes the best product of foreign manufacturers and many productions of its own make. Mr. H. A. Lande is, as usual, at the helm of the Feature Photoplay Co.

Motion Pictures in Teaching Children

(From the New York Tribune)

IF Thomas Edison's theories, borne out by actual test, are to become a general medium in the public schools of the land, it is goodby to the time-honored primer and the phonetic method of grouping A B C's. Weighty treatises on physics, chemistry, astronomy and botany will become the understandable playthings of the youth not yet in his teens by means of the motion picture.

For instance, Mr. Edison proposes to show to the children of the land a cat. Further, that cat will walk, trot, switch its tail, lap its milk from a saucer, nurture its young and creep stealthily on its rodent prey. Its form and habits will be instilled into youth so that when the ability to tell of it is acquired cats will be an open book to the juvenile student.

Mr. Edison has gone about evolving the most astounding method of mental culture in history. His staff of specialists is being constantly enlarged and his photographers have been given carte blanche to obtain material from any point in the world.

How carefully and understandingly he has entered upon the development of this new step in education may best be determined by the admission of the inventor himself that he listed between 700 and 1,000 of the subjects for child study, and so far only 50 or 60 have actually been developed into film form.

These subjects are assigned to experts in the particular field they cover, and these experts devise the way and the material to put them in scenario form. Finally they are taken to the laboratory of Mr. Edison and a class of children is brought in. The reels are run off, and Edison and his corps of assistants plainly can see what stands the test and what does not. Then comes the revision—the cutting out and the adding to—in an effort to make every point clear.

Mr. Edison takes an ordinary housefly, magnified thousands of times, and with the aid of the motion picture he teaches the child its every motion, and its habits of living.

Twenty-five years ago a primary teacher stood before a chart on which was a line drawing of a dog. Beneath this picture were phrases similar to these:

"I see a picture."
"It is a picture of a dog."
"The dog can run."
"It can bark, and also it will bite."
"It has long hair and a tail."

Naturally the child acquired those facts concerning the dog with rapidity. He probably had a dog at home and studied its habits. But when he came to the subject of the elephant it was a different story. He had only the picture to rely upon. If that child could have had an elephant for close inspection the result would have been more quickly accomplished.

That is just what Mr. Edison purposes to supply. He's going to bring the elephant from its jungle haunts in South Africa and put it on a screen in action before the child.

Child interest is one of the greatest problems of school life. Truancy has been the bane of educators for years. Those who have investigated declare that motion picture instruction will remove much of this delinquency. It will create a tremendous interest in education. The child, instead of abhorring the coming of a school day, will hasten to classes with expectancy.

the mountains to seek comfort and new environment

John, while working his claim, is injured by an unexpected explosion. As they carry him toward his cabin, Janet passes in her auto. In gazing on the victim of the catastrophe she is shocked to recognize her husband. He is placed in her care and hurried to the shack and medical aid secured. On the earnest pleadings and sincere protestations of love on the part of Janet the two are reconciled.

PLAYERS' ELECTROS FOR EXHIBITORS' USE

A unique plan has been put in active service by the New Process Electro Corporation, of New York, whereby the exhibitor may get cuts of the screen players at a much smaller price than he has hitherto been paying. These cuts are especially available for program work, or for use in the local newspapers. It is the experience of the writer, on small papers, that a city editor will always use a story if a cut is to run with it. He will not put his paper to the expense of making the cuts for free advertising, but he will always use the cut, even though he does not wish to use the story.

The plan of this company is to supply cuts of any player in their catalog, in any company, at a very nominal fee, together with an authentic biography. The scheme should be most successful.

ARIZONA IN MICHIGAN

Arizona and the next eleven of the big feature productions to be made by the All Star Feature Corporation will be handled in Michigan by the Casino Company, of Detroit. The deal was closed after the members of the Casino Company had made a special trip to New York to conclude the negotiations. Eight large theatres in Michigan are directly controlled by the Casino Company, which is beginning to rank as one of the largest and most successful of the firms renting feature films to exhibitors in the Middle West.

TRADE NOTES

Mack Sennett, managing director of the Keystone films, has added a new burden to his shoulders. He has taken twenty boys and girls, ranging from the age of four to twelve years, and is training them for motion pictures. They will be seen shortly in "kid" comedies.

A picture just finished, "Love Sickness at Sea," was made upon the Pacific Coast Steamship Company's boat "Harvard," the fastest passenger-carrying ship that floats the American flag. This ship was chartered by the Keystone Company, and during a run down and up the coast, a full reel was made. This picture portrays the improvements that have been made in fire drills aboard seagoing vessels, and this was used as a basis upon which a great comedy was made. A company of fifty people made this trip, and over two hundred of the employees of the boat were used in the films.

A Keystone comedy, "Speed Kings," just finished, shows Santa Monica and the Coronada races, Earl Cooper, winner of both, is used in this subject, as well as his Stutz No. 8, present holder of the world's road race record. Teddy Tetzlaff, another world's speed champion, is also used, along with Barney Oldfield, Ralph De Palma, Spencer Wishart, and several more of the racing celebrities of this and foreign countries.

Mr. James Cornelius, formerly of Kansas City and the Famous Players Film Co., has been appointed manager of the St. Louis office of Warner's Features, Inc., succeeding M. J. Goldbaum. On October 17th, Mr. Cornelius, assisted by Mr. Samuel Grant, district manager for Warner's Features, Inc., in the middle Western States, gave an exhibition of the new and future Warner releases to a large gathering of exhibitors from St. Louis and surrounding territory in the Lafayette Theatre.

The World Special Films have just bought the marvellous Eclair film, "Protea," and will have it ready for the exhiibtor about November 1st. This is one of the most remarkable films ever brought out.

Walter MacNamara is the latest to be added to the staff of Universal directors. For the past year he has been connected with the Universal as photoplay writer, and for the past few months has been acting in the double capacity of assistant-director and author.

Mr. MacNamara has had a good record as a film author. He has written King Baggot successes and most of the later successes of Miss Jane Gail.

Cecilia Loftus has been added to the gallery of Famous Players. The Famous Players Film Co. has engaged this artist to appear in the novel and play, "A Lady of Quality," by Frances Hodgson Burnett. Miss Loftus began her dramatic career under the direction of Daniel Frohman. In two years she had succeeded so capably that Mr. Frohman made her leading lady with E. H. Sothern, then under his management. By a coincidence, as in the case of James K. Hackett, Miss Loftus returns to Mr. Frohman's direction under new conditions, through the medium of the motion picture.

The organization of the World Special Film Corporation is gradually assuming large proportions. Branch offices have been opened in Chicago, Cincinnati, Atlanta and Kansas City lately. For the Chicago office F. H. McMillan, formerly of the M. & F. Feature, has been engaged as manager. In Cincinnati, G. J. Trask; in Kansas City, S. J. Berman, and in Atlanta, C. G. Bailey. Extensive alterations have been made in all of these offices, and they are now ready for business.

Daring exploits are performed in the Eclipse films, released in America by George Kleine. The Eclipse Company never asked an actor to perform a more daring bit of work than that done by "Arizona Bill," leading man for "Eclipse," in a coming two-reel, the name of which has not yet been determined. There is a spectacular touch in this film as the Bleriot monoplane in which are seated "Arizona Bill" and his wife blows up and falls to the earth, taking the two performers with it. This occurs in full view of the camera.

Music and the Picture

Suggestions Invited, Questions Cheerfully Answered

Address: Music Department, The Motion Picture News

I AM pleased to be able to state that once in a while an orchestra will try to do justice to a picture and show what can be done to enhance the beauty of certain productions.

When the film of Essanay, "Tony the Fiddler," was shown at the Circle Theatre, Broadway and Fifty-ninth Street, New York, the orchestra surprised me in the efforts of its leader to take advantage of certain features.

Each time that Tony was shown on the screen, playing his fiddle, the musicians would stop, except the violinist, who would accompany Tony on his violin. The effect was great, as the sentimental tunes of Tony's playing were not drowned by a full and noisy music, but on the contrary, the soft playing of the violinist gave the impression that the notes were coming from the picture on the screen and not from the orchestra pit.

As there was no noise, no crash of cymbals, bass-drums and other instruments, the audience enjoyed greatly the production, and the comments heard in the house were favorable.

On October 9th I had the misfortune to witness the same Essanay film, "Tony the Fiddler," at the Bijou Theatre, of Providence, R. I. I say "the misfortune" as the good impression I had retained of the production vanished at the miserable piano playing. It was not the same picture, all the sentiment was gone. It was a common picture.

Mrs. J. Clement, of the Bijou Dream, of Boston, has some strong views on music. She is opposed to a pipe-organ and to a full orchestra, as she claims that the party accompanying the picture must not only memorize much, but must improvise most of the time. Mrs. Clement claims that no matter how efficient can be the members of a full orchestra, it is impossible to have them improvise the same kind of music at the same time, especially when the jumps from one scene to another are so quick on the screen. Mrs. Clement claims that all that is needed is just enough music to follow the actions of the picture and create the desired impression on the audience. She believes in a good pianist, and she is paying the highest wages to her lady pianist, she insists also on having the piano tuned each week and changed every six months.

If Mrs. Clement was not right in her views she would not have the best patronage of Boston, and the fact that the most cultured class patronizes the Bijou Dream is a proof that Mrs. Clement fully understands the music question for motion picture shows.

I met in Norwich, Conn., at the Colonial Theatre another manager, Mr. Chas. McNulty, who has views identical with those of Mrs. Clement. He believes in a good pianist and a drummer, but Mr. McNulty wants the drummer to follow the pianist's orders and not to go by himself. The pianist is Mr. Chas. A. Dowsett, whom I was pleased to meet, get his views and hear him play a picture. Mr. Dowsett studies the theme of the picture, and he seems to put his whole soul into his work. While his fingers run on the keyboard, his mind is not on something else, but on the picture alone. The lovers of motion pictures of Norwich so well appreciate the efforts of Mr. Dowsett that they come to the Colonial Theatre in preference, and, as they like to compliment him on his clever way of playing the picture, he is greatly encouraged, and tries to better himself day after day.

Why are the photoplay houses of small towns far ahead of the ones of the big cities? Merely because in a small town everybody knows everyone. A good picture, a fine projection, appropriate music go from one person to another. The manager, the pianist, the operator are praised, and all these praises are a constant encouragement to do better. In a large city it is selfishness, it is indifference. The patrons, strangers to the manager, to the pianist and to the operator, walk away without a word of praise.

I had the pleasure of hearing the Wurlitzer Unit Orchestra at the new "Heights" Theatre, on Wadsworth Avenue and 181st Street, New York. When such a wonderful instrument is in the hands of a competent pianist, like the one of the "Heights" Theatre, great effects can be obtained. I was charmed with the rendition on the Unit Orchestra.

The new "Olympia" Theatre, of Boston (in course of construction), announces a full orchestra and a pipe-organ to cost $150,000. I could hardly believe the sign, as I cannot see the advantage of such an expensive musical instrument to accompany the picture. When I asked some persons of Boston if the announcement was not a bluff, I was told that generally Mr. Gordon means what he says.

The only argument I can offer on this wonderful pipe-organ is that it will put a stop to the fad of pipe-organs to accompany Western scenes of fighting cowboys and Indians. The pipe-organ has been a fad like the abuse of posters, and as long as a pipe-organ could be purchased at $2,000 or $3,000 on the installment plan, many exhibitors took up the fad, and to be able to meet their obligations, they placed a cheap dance-hall pianist at the keyboard of the organ. Now that Mr. Gordon comes up with a pipe-organ to cost in the six figures, it will be so prohibitive that the exhibitors will not follow the fad and will even stop buying organs to cost in the four figures, as a pipe-organ of $3,000 will not compare favorably with the one of $150,000. The pipe-organ has been a mere fad—because Jones had an organ, Brown had to have one, etc.

MARGUERITE RISSER
Of Pathe Freres.

Critics are not always fair, and in their haste to find fault, often overlook a kind action.

This was the case at the Herald Square Theatre, of New York, on a Thursday evening, when the drummer, animated by a great desire to save motion pictures from the constant slurs of the enemies, tried to shield what in his good judgment was a cruel scene.

The film in question was "When the West Was Young," a Vitagraph. When the kind Indian takes care of the settler's little girl, who had befriended him and who had been killed, is attacked by other Indians, he defends the little girl by killing one of the pursuers. While the Vitagraph gives us to understand that there is actually a murder, they do it in such a manner as to avoid any bad feelings on the part of the spectators. They show the Indian raising his tomahawk and dropping it on the head of the other Indian, and it is done so quickly that no one has time to see the actual blow.

The drummer of the Herald Square Theatre thought that such a scene would unnerve the audience and perhaps create a panic, so, full of good intentions, he made up his mind to change the chill that would have gone through the audience into a laugh. He was clever and succeeded beyond all expectations, as when he used something like a mallet on an empty dry-goods box, he created a genuine sensation. What a sound! Yes, it was a sound that called for a laugh, and women, instead of taking their handkerchiefs to wipe off some tears at the sight of the Indian falling dead, had to hide their faces behind their hands to try to suppress a laugh. I have seen so many pictures that I consider myself self-proof, but in this case the laugh was too general, too contagious, and I had to join the crowd.

While I said in other pages that it would be far better to omit certain sound effects than to produce them incorrectly, I must admit that improper effects, as in the above case, have the advantage to detract the attention from the picture and consequently allow some supposed objectionable scenes to pass unnoticed.

One fault with many drummers is that they do not reason the sound effects, and have the wrong idea that they must exaggerate their effects to create the impression that they are working.

Many drummers are like many exhibitors who want to show a big picture to please the persons sitting in the rear of the house, to the detriment of the patrons of the front and middle seats. The drummer wants to make much noise to be heard from the last seats, without realizing that he is a bore on more than half the audience.

When he gives the horse trot, he never considers if the horse is in the back or foreground, if he travels on grass, muddy roads, snow, asphalt or pavement, it is always the same trot effect. He does not even look if there are one or more horses.

Movie Scribblers Move in Love Feast

Stan Twist a New York Host

MORE than a year ago Stan Twist, in Chicago, entertained his brethren of the "gray goose quill" on the ocsation of the Chicago convention. Now on assuming a position with the World Special Film Corporation, he sets in to keep up the character. On the evening of Wednesday, at the Café de Paris, he gave his second annual love feast, at which there were present, besides himself and Mr. E. Mandelbaum, the president of the company, the following: James J. Hoff, The Moving Picture World; William A. Johnston, The Motion Picture News; Mabel Condon, the "Shy Girl" of Motography; Arthur Leslie, Ernest Shipman, J. W. Farnham, and George D. Proctor.

Mr. Mandelbaum, whose long and honorable association with the business entitles his words to respect, stated that his company had in preparation a series of pictures of a highly artistic nature, details of which he preferred at present to withhold. Mr. Mandelbaum is conservative in his methods and prefers to conduct his business along sure and well-defined lines.

He is in the business for the good of the business, and not merely as a temporary speculator of the in-and-out kind—a far too common figure in the motion picture field hitherto. Moreover, he believes in co-operation between motion picture press, manufacturers and exhibitors—a policy which is entirely that of this paper. We desire to say that the policy of the World Special Film Corporation as outlined by Mr. Mandelbaum has our support.

Stan Twist, as usual, made himself agreeably evident to his brethren of the pen. His début in New York, if we may so put it, was an entire success. As we made clear last week, he is well equipped, mentally and artistically. Moreover, he is a sincere picture man—a factor which entitles him to our commendation.

The World Special held a most successful function, indeed. Stan Twist has the savez of making his fellow "movie scribblers" his friends. In return they of the craft extend to him their best wishes for success personally; and success also to the World Special and its amiable president, Mr. E. Mandelbaum.

The following is the menu:

Guglielmo Marconi, the electrical engineer generally credited with the invention of wireless telegraphy, like our own Edison is not content to rest his laurels upon the invention and the corralling of sounds ne'er before heard o'er land or sea, but has gone on in other directions of science. One of his latest discoveries is the production of an explosive, known as the Marconi dynamite, which is instinct with terrible energy, yet subject to control that does not have death as a resultant from its vibration. An exemplification of this new and powerful explosive was given at Chicago recently at the La Salle Hotel as an entertainment feature of the banquet to State bankers. In this experiment Mary Ruth Newkirk, a clever tot who has appeared in Selig motion pictures from time to time, was incarcerated in a safe, and the door was blown off with a charge of Marconi dynamite, and the little lady stepped forth, smiling and unharmed.

E. Mandelbaum, president of the World Special Films Corporation, returned from Cleveland this week, reporting big business on "Les Miserables" and "The Betrothal," which they control for Ohio, Indiana and Kentucky. At the Knickerbocker Theatre, in Cleveland, "Les Miserables" played to close to $3,500 on the week.

On the Road

Attleboro, Mass.

I HAVE always claimed that the big cities have the poorest motion picture shows, while the small towns are far ahead in the game.

Attleboro confirms this statement, as it was a genuine pleasure for me to find two well-managed theatres in this small place, after my rather poor experience in the crooked and narrow streets of Boston.

When I entered the Bates Theatre, of Attleboro, the atmosphere was so clear and everything was looking so bright that I knew the house to be spotlessly clean. The fresh gray walls, relieved with neat gold mouldings, the dusted chairs, the well-polished brass railings, the curtains at the windows, hanging on brass poles, in fact, everything denoted the greatest care.

While the theatre is on the second floor of a brick building, it is large and well ventilated, and fitted with all the latest improvements, like the Von Duprin Self-Releasing Doors, the Indirect Lighting System, etc., features not always found in the theatres of the larger cities.

The neatly-uniformed and most courteous attendants added a great charm to the place. The doorman seems to know everyone and everyone, even the children, knows him, yet while answering all questions, he does not show any undue familiarity; he knows how to keep his place and be respected.

Mr. John F. Patten, the manager, is a perfect gentleman, extremely polite, courteous. He does not wear his hat nor does he smoke or chew while on duty, and, like his doorman, Mr. Patten seems to know everyone and the patrons seem to like to meet him in the lobby.

The Columbia is a smaller house under the management of Mr. A. H. Allen and leaves nothing to be desired as to cleanliness, comfort and safety. Like the Bates Theatre, the Columbia would be a great credit on Washington street of Boston.

While the Bates Theatre shows licensed pictures, the Columbia shows the Mutual program, and as both houses change their pictures three times per week, Monday, Wednesday and Friday, they do not conflict with each other, but, on the contrary, they give a chance to the patrons to see all the pictures shown in Attleboro.

As both Mr. Patten and Mr. Allen work in harmony, motion pictures will be prosperous in Attleboro, and there is no danger to fear long shows of from ten to twelve reels for five cents. Few posters are used.

Providence, R. I.

With a population of over 200,000 inhabitants, Providence has more pawn shops than motion picture theatres. I had to do a lot of tramping before I could locate six picture houses, while I could see the three balls in every direction.

As I could not believe that Providence was so much behind the times in the game of motion pictures, I questioned three exhibitors. Two of them gave me the number of shows to six (6), while the third one claimed seven. My census is six, as follows:

Straight pictures:
- Casino Theatre.
- Bijou Theatre.
- Nickel Theatre.

Vaudeville and pictures:
- Union Theatre.
- Bullock's Amusement Co.
- Scenic Temple.

The Union is the finest and newest vaudeville house, entirely fireproof, with a seating capacity of over 2,000 chairs.

The Bullock's Temple of Aumsement is an old church remodeled. On the first floor is a large billiard parlor, while the theatre proper is on the second floor. Bullock's Temple is resplendent in a fresh coat of paint.

The Scenic Temple—here again the word "temple" is used as the building is also an old church transformed into a theatre.

In the three above named houses, vaudeville is the backbone, while the pictures are the side line.

The Casino, the largest motion picture house of Providence, is located on the second floor of an old building, but the manager is doing a good business because his projection is the best and due, as he claims, to a mirror screen.

The great advantage of the mirror screen is its high cost, which practically prohibits the use of a too large screen, and we all agree that a moderate sized picture is always richer in details and photographic quality.

The Bijou is the most beautiful photoplay house of Providence. It has a white front of a neat and simple design with a fine electric lighting display. The interior does not correspond with the exterior. It is sombre of color with nothing to relieve the eye. There are too many ceiling lights. The floor is not inclined, and as the curtain is too low on account of its great dimensions, the heads of the persons sitting on the front chairs show on the lower part of the picture.

The Bijou, as the finest theatre, has not the courage to ask a straight ten-cent admission, but the cashier sells a five-cent ticket and the patrons have to pay an extra five cents for a reserved seat, as more than half of the house is in reserved seats. The ten-cent front seats of the Bijou should not be the reserved ones, as we know that the best seats in a motion picture theatre are not in the front rows but in the rear of the house.

HOW GEORGE KLEINE'S "QUO VADIS?" IS BILLED

The above gives one a partial idea of how George Kleine's "Quo Vadis?" is being billed throughout the country. The cut shows the corner of Fulton Street and Fourth Avenue, at the entrance to Golden Gate Park, San Francisco. The photograph was taken August 3, 1913.

The Nickel has a less pretentious front, although it has been freshly renovated and painted. The lighting under the balcony is poor and gives too much illumination of the heads of the spectators to enjoy a good picture. The five clusters of four lights each, or twenty lights, could be replaced advantageously by two indirect light fixtures.

Providence needs a first-class motion picture theatre to show a first run of good pictures and less of the imported sensational supposed features, with appropriate music, etc.

Notwithstanding the numerous pawn shops, Providence is a rich, prosperous town, and even if conservative, there should be enough lovers of motion pictures out of a population of over 200,000 inhabitants to support a first-class ten-cent photoplay house.

New London, Conn.

New London has only three motion picture theatres. To be correct, I should say two, as the Lyceum is the general playhouse for vaudeville, road shows, etc.

At this writing, the Lyceum is showing vaudeville and the Universal program.

Licensed pictures are shown at the Empire theatre, while the Orpheum shows the Mutual productions.

The three houses average a seating capacity of one thousand chairs each. They all show vaudeville and while they each complain of the competition of the others, not one of them is willing to give up vaudeville to show straight pictures only. While the manager of the Orpheum believes that there is more money in showing straight pictures, he is afraid to try the experiment.

The Orpheum is the only theatre with a front of some importance, the exterior decorations are in good taste, original, and could be make very attractive with effects of colors.

Norwich, Conn.

Like New London, Norwich has three houses. They all show pictures but they do not follow the same idea of their neighbors of New London.

The Auditorium is the regular vaudeville and shows pictures of the Universal program.

The Davis Opera House is the big theatre devoted to passing road shows and pictures of the Mutual Corporation, when no special show is booked.

The Colonial is the straight photoplay house with the licensed pictures.

This arrangement is far superior to the one of New London, as real lovers of motion pictures—and we have plenty of them—can go to the Colonial where they can see a better run of pictures, well projected and accompanied with appropriate music. Those who like pictures as a side line and prefer vaudeville, can go to the Auditorium. There is no doubt that even in small towns we have enough lovers of motion pictures to support a straight photoplay house. It if was not so, Mr. Charles McNulty would not have gone to the expense of remodeling his Colonial Theatre. If Mr. McNulty spent much money in fixing the whole building, repainting and refurnishing the Auditorium, it is that he has a prosperous theatre, it is that there is a class of persons in Norwich who do not care much for cheap vaudeville, and we find such classes everywhere, even in New London.

Our friends of New London should take the hint and one of them at least should abandon vaudeville to his competitors and give all attention to a perfect projection of the best pictures.

A MESSAGE FROM MARS

Charley Hawtrey in Motion Pictures

The release of the picture entitled "A Message from Mars" by the United Kingdom Films Co. will serve to introduce to the motion picture public of this country one of the most finished comedians on the other side of the Atlantic. This is Charles Hawtrey. Mr. Hawtrey has for many years been the acknowledged light comedian par excellence of the English stage. He is another John Drew. He will be remembered as having made a great success in the "Private Secretary" over twenty years ago. He is debonair, alert, fascinating. The play, "A Message from Mars," on which the film is made, is popular with the public. In the character of Horace Parker, Hawtrey made one of his greatest successes. The supporting company in this film includes many of the original performers in the play. Mr. C. Holman Clark, Mr. Hubert Willis, Miss Kate Tyndall are thoroughly well-known artists.

LUNG YI-SUNG, A WEALTHY TRAVELER, VISITS KLEIN OPTICAL CO.

One of the visitors at the offices of the Kleine Optical Company recently was Lung Yi-sung, a wealthy Chinese, now touring the world in search of information concerning American pictures and picture-makers which he can use to advantage in the new China. Mr. Yi-sung says that picture theatres in Shanghai do not open until nine o'clock and run until midnight, that the cheapest seats are 75 cents in American money and $1.75 for the highest. Needless to say, the motion picture show is a rare institution and patronized only by the wealthy. Mr. Yi-sung believes that a splendid opportunity exists in China for the same character of picture theatres that he finds here, and thinks that the remarkable interest in pictures evinced by his fellow-brothers on the coast can be duplicated among the five hundred millions of his native land.

EDISON TO START NEW SERIES

Edison is shortly to begin releasing a new series of detective stories under the title "The Chronicles of Cleek." They will be mystery tales, founded on the stories by Thomas W. Hanshew, which have been all the rage in England. They will be published in this country simultaneously with the film releases by the Short Story Magazine. Each film will be released on the last Tuesday of the month, beginning November 25th. Ben Wilson will appear in the title role.

MARGARITA FISCHER RECOVERING FROM ILLNESS

Margarita Fischer, a popular motion picture actress and a delightful personality, has been sick, so sick that a slight operation was necessary. This little lady found out what a wonderful favorite she was with the general public, as well as with her studio companions. She received flowers and cards from people she never heard of and her stage companions, even many of the extra people, sent beautiful bouquets of flowers. One little tot gathered a bunch of field flowers and sent them up with a little note, full of real affection and bad spelling. So many flowers were received that the hearts of many sufferers in the other wards were made happy. She is around again and hopes to be in harness soon.

APPEARANCE AND MANNERS

Suggestions Invited, Questions Cheerfully Answered

Address: Exhibitors' Department, The Motion Picture News

SOME time ago I visited a new theatre. Not a five-cent house, but a supposed refined photoplay theatre.

The theatre must represent a large investment, as everything is first-class and nothing has been spared to insure the comfort of the patrons.

Yet there was something queer in the atmosphere of the place, something that did not seem to harmonize with the rest. The best illustration to my mind is the country boy dressed in an evening dress and making his first appearance in society. His clothes may be of the finest material and workmanship, but he does not know how to wear them, he does not feel at his ease and he is the target of everyone.

The doorman and the ushers had new uniforms, very neat in pattern and well-made, but somehow they did not seem to fit, because the men did not know how to wear them, and, like the country boy, they did not feel at ease. To tell the truth, the men were not the clean-cut fellows to make efficient and courteous attendants, they were of a low type, most likely engaged because they were willing to work at low wages.

As I said in a previous issue of this magazine, good manners are born with the man and, while they can be taught to a certain degree, the vulgar man will always show his true nature at one moment or another.

You cannot expect good manners from the attendants if the manager has no manners himself.

The manager of this new theatre is a man who was lucky to make some money, but in gaining wealth he did not change the manners of his former days.

When the manager saw me seated and enjoying the show, he came to shake hands and to thank me for having called on him. Keeping his hat on and still holding a smoking cigarette between his fingers, he took a seat next to me and started to give me some details on his new theatre. His voice was not muffled, and, as he could not see that he was annoying the patrons, who had paid an admission to enjoy the pictures and not hear someone talk, I had to excuse myself so as to put a stop to the conversation.

When in the lobby in the full light, I was surprised that the manager, after spending so much money on the building and even on uniforms for his attendants, had not bought a new suit of clothes for himself. He was looking very shabby in his personal appearance, and he did not look like the manager, at least not a man to be approached by the patrons.

The result will be a poor business, and the manager will wonder why his patrons go somewhere else and shun his beautiful theatre. He will say: "I have done everything, I have spared neither money nor pains to build a most refined theatre."

I know a number of successful managers, who, while they do not wear the regulation uniform, have a special dress to wear while on duty. They keep in the office a fresh suit of clothes, and they don same before the opening of the show, so as to look neat and inspire confidence.

The question of personal appearance does not seem to enter in the mind of the motion picture exhibitors and managers. They do not seem to realize the importance of good manners and neat appearance, even in places where the admission is five cents only.

Appearance and manners have made great progress in the United States during the last twenty years. I remember when waiters, sales-people, etc., were allowed to go to work in any sort of clothes, as long as their forms would be covered. To-day it is a different question.

Hotels, restaurants, lunch-rooms, cafés, soda-fountains, etc., compel their employees to wear either black or white jackets, to wear clean linen, in other words, to take care of their personal appearance. Same with the sales-people. The department stores compel their employees to wear certain dresses. It is general all over the country, good manners and neat appearance is the keynote to success.

SCENE FROM "THE LURE OF NEW YORK"
Four-reel Feature Film, New York Film Co.

The owners of a big department store in a suburban town, who are strict on the personal appearance of their sales-clerks, cash-girls and other employees, yielded to the temptation to erect a photoplay theatre on a vacant lot adjoining their stores. They placed a manager who does not seem to know much about appearance, as the attendants of the theatre are a great contrast to the employees of the stores. I don't see why the owners, so strict on the personal appearance of the employees of the stores, do not enforce the same policy on the attendants of the motion picture theatre. It cannot be a question of the price of admission. The patrons paying ten cents admission to see motion pictures are entitled to as much courtesy and clean service as the women who purchase a spool of thread, a paper of pins or a glass of soda.

It is, I am sorry to tell it, that the same prejudice exists in the minds of the exhibitors as in the minds of the enemies of cinematography, viz.: Motion pictures are the low amusement of the common people, consequently do not call for good manners or appearance.

This is the whole secret. Too many of our exhibitors, and of our manufacturers, to tell the truth, have this wrong idea, that motion pictures are to be classed with the side-shows of the fairs and circuses, or to be the ornament of the Bowery and of other such thoroughfares. With such a belief, the exhibitors do not see the need of a polite, clean, neat and courteous service. The manufacturers, on their side, do not want good, uplifting scenarios, but on the contrary, they will produce any scenario, no matter how unnatural it can be, as long as it is sensational.

Evidently, as every rule has its exceptions, we have a number of manufacturers and exhibitors who are doing their very best to uplift cinematography, but they are few, and some of them in course of time fall by the wayside because they lack faith in a better future for motion pictures. Yes, when men with no means, men who have been known to hide themselves so as to avoid a collector, can brag of making a little fortune by putting out feature films and claim that they never spend over one thousand dollars on a production but get the money by putting out sensational posters, it is enough to discourage the honest manufacturer, who spends thousands on a single negative. Unless this manufacturer has a great faith in the future he will fall and imitate the unscrupulous little manufacturer by making sensational films to please the passions of the low classes. Same with the exhibitor who tries to uplift the business. He goes thus far and because he sees his neighbor make an ugly display of posters, give souvenirs, he is tempted to do likewise.

The day is coming when this wrong prejudice will make room for a better sentiment, and it is because motion pictures are here to stay that many men are working hard for the uplifting of the industry by investing large sums of money in the building of fine theatres and the production of high-class films. These men, with enough faith in the future, will naturally and gradually push out of the field both the unscrupulous manufacturer and exhibitor. J. M. B.

Boosting the Business in Berlin

THE Berlin motion picture shows, or "Kinos," as they are called more frequently there, have finally found the panacea which makes the multitude storm the ticket office.

Up to a few weeks ago they seemed to belong to the past, for the people did not patronize them any longer. Thirty or more had to close their doors. Then for a while the managers did some thinking and experimenting. They combined a vaudeville show with their theatres, engaged acrobats and songstresses of whom the audience always was in doubt whether it would not be better if the song birds handle the heavy dumb-bells and the strong man try to sing the "Last Rose of Summer."

It was of no avail. The public did not stream en masse, the sheriff finally arrived, unmercifully attached the cash box receipts and closed the doors. And in many instances the kino show ended with a free-for-all fight.

Necessity, however, the greatest inventor on earth, finally found the ways and means to change the conditions in favor of the impoverished manager. The great achievement of technical sciences was pressed into service, and to-day the kinos again are overcrowded, and that state of affairs has been reached which the manager in Goethe's Faust dreams of:

"When to our booth the current sets apace,
And with tremendous, oft-repeated urging,
Squeeze onward through the narrow gate of grace:
To reach the seller's box, a fighting host,
To get a ticket break their necks almost."

You sit in the kino and look at a series of pictures of a detective story. The bloody murderer is chased and jumps in the swiftest touring car that is in existence. The police get in an express train.

And now reality sets in. The mad race between the two machines is depicted. The spectator hears the noise of the approaching beasts, the thundering of the heavy locomotive on the steel rails, the whistling of the steampipe and the chug-chug of the auto. The two monsters draw nearer and nearer. You hear the mewing and spitting and groaning and notice the approaching glaring lights. The noise increases, steam and sparks are emitted into the stage, and finally a rattling and crackling auto and a screeching and squeaking locomotive stop at the stage in front of the dumbfounded spectator. The detectives jump from the machine, the fleeing rogue is caught and the play goes on according to the plot. The melodrama that commenced with pictures is now finished by real actors. So far the people in this nerve-tearing center of over civilization have to go to attract a crowd.

But if the teel-tempered thoughts of a new era spontaneously enter the world of imagination, if Thalia is visited by Count Zeppelin, then such a wonderful scene may happen as we had the pleasure of witnessing last week at the open air theatre in little Wannsee.

Hebbel's monumental Gyges drama was given in the presence of a small but artistically inclined and appreciative community of connoisseurs. The spectators were deeply moved by the strong prehistorical and mythical play when suddenly, from the distance, near the end of the show, a howling and roaring noise was heard that drew nearer and nearer. Was it old Helios himself who drove up with his several fiery stallions to witness the scene so familiar to him? When the people looked up they saw a big Zeppelin cruiser sweep by at the height of not more than about 300 feet

It was the most unique demonstration and object lesson of the wonderful development of human genius within 3,000 years.

The new era greeted the far past.

Advertising the Picture

IT is a fad. Nothing else than a fad to display too many posters.

A new theatre has opened its doors on Eighth avenue. It is not an old common store transformed into a photoplay house. No, it is a specially constructed building. The Drury Lane is the name. This name means something and reminds us of the famous old London theatre where so many famous dramas and spectacular plays have been staged.

The owners of the new theatre did not, like others, adopt an architecture contrary to the meaning of the name, but they have an entrance and lobby of ancient English construction, to conform to the name of Drury Lane.

The antique woodwork, decorations, ornaments, lamps, and even the poster frames, give an odd appearance to the building which is rather pleasing and that would denote that the Drury Lane is a theatre devoted to the refined class of lovers of motion pictures.

We know that this part of Eighth avenue is not what could be considered one of the best districts of New York, as the colored element is very strong and it is frequented by certain characters. For this reason, the persons who have to reside in the immediate neighborhood were praising themselves at the sight of having a refined motion picture theatre, conducted for the benefit of the best element.

The dissatisfaction is that the managers of the new theatre could not resist the poster fad and thought that they had to copy their neighbors, the small dumps in which you have to hold your nose and feel that you have to scratch yourself during the show. Yes, the Drury Lane has most of its antique woodwork and decorations covered with posters, not as many as the theatre a few doors below, but in course of time they will come to it.

Evidently the colored and low elements, the frequenters of the cheap dumps, were delighted to see that the Drury Lane would not be a refined photoplay house in which they would feel out of place, but, encouraged by the vulgarity of the display of posters, they came in force.

The projection is excellent. To be correct, I should say the light is excellent, as no good projection can be obtained when the managers, not able to give a show of over forty-five minutes, crowd four full reels in less than forty minutes. This is the show that the low element wants, plenty for the money without considering the quality. The two-reel drama feature of Selig, "The Conscience Fund," was butchered on account of the speedy actions. It was ridiculous, not to say out of place, to see nuns in the parlor of the convent running like mechanical toys. A regular Punch and Judy show. How could it be otherwise, as, by my watch, the operator gave nine (9) minutes to each reel.

The exterior of the Drury Lane is odd, fine, and has an atmosphere of refinement; the light on the screen is excellent; the music, although not following the picture exactly, is of the best and far superior to what is heard on Broadway. With all these advantages, it would have been easy for the managers to cater to a better element, with less posters and less reels. Three reels at a speed of eighteen or twenty minutes would have assured a good steady patronage and would have kept others out.

On my right side I had an Italian woman with a baby in her arms. While the baby was not crying (he was sleeping) I could smell that it was Saturday evening, waiting for the weekly wash. On the left I had a colored man, who must have been on his way from work. In front of me I had two characters that you meet on the Bowery. One was sleeping and the other insisted on keeping his cap on his head during the whole show.

Yes, there was a sort of usher—a tall young man in his Sunday clothes and a high fashionable collar, more on the order of a cuff. It may be that on account of his high collar, the young fellow could not lower his head, and this would explain why he could not see the sleeping man and the one who insisted in keeping his cap on.

When will the exhibitors reason the question of posters and realize that this great abuse is doing more harm than good to the prosperity of cinematography?

Even the six and eight-sheet posters do not seem to answer the purposes any more, as the exhibitors who have no respect for their neighbors add now to their large display of posters, banners with big black and red letters that can be seen at a great distance.

SCENE FROM "THE GAMBLER'S RUIN"

The other day a theatre in Fourteenth street, near Broadway, displayed the following banners:

Indian Blood.
Convict's Sweetheart.
From Out of the Depths.
The Kid Gloved Crook.
Sentenced to Jail.
The Wages of Sin Is Death.
The Exposure of a Great Crime.
How to Make an Innocent Victim Guilty.
Woman in Black.

Is there any wonder that the clergy, the press, and our best citizens are opposed to motion pictures when they see such titles flashed on our main thoroughfares?

While these films may be good and contain no objectionable scenes, the titles convey an unfavorable impression and seem to say that motion pictures are scenes of murders, assaults, crimes, prisons, tortures, infidelity, injustice, etc.

We claim that motion pictures are to become the great educator of the world, and to this effect several of our manufacturers are already producing films to show scientific experiments, industries in operation, scenic views from all over the world, pages of ancient and modern history, passages from the Scriptures, etc. On the other hand, Fourteenth street raises its voice and says: "Motion pictures are the school for crimes." Read over the above titles and let us know if such a list of films is not enough to convey the impression that motion pictures are a teacher of crime.

What opinion can strangers have of New York when they cannot pass our main streets—Fourteenth street is considered a main street — without having to blush at such posters.

Is it advertising motion pictures? No. It is not even advertising the show, as these posters and banners are, in most cases, very deceiving; they are there to catch a number of the suckers and hayseeds who come to the metropolis to see the sights. Regular lovers of motion pictures do not patronize Fourteenth street much. While we know that thousands of good members of the numerous small towns and villages surrounding New York come to the city to visit places that they would not patronize at home, I don't know if it is good for the industry in general to allow certain exhibitors to give such a black eye to cinematography.

If we have a number of outside visitors with money to burn and who want to see things that have been kept away from them, we have, on the other hand, many schools, churches and other institutions wishing to adopt motion pictures for an educational purpose and who send delegates to study the question. These delegates, most of them strangers to New York, do not know their way to the uptown respectable theatres, like the Regent, Riverview, Heights, etc., but follow the crowds and find themselves in the congested districts, where they have to face motion pictures under the worst conditions. One failing of man is to go by the first impression, and if these delegates have the misfortune to pass Fourteenth street and see the sensational posters and banners, they are liable to give up the task of investigating and to return home with an unfavorable report.

Such unfavorable reports, and many have been made, retard the progress of the little pictures such as the Universal Educator. If, on the other hand, these delegates could see some of our best films, like "Quo Vadis," "Oxygen," "The Lagging Industry," "The Culture of Cocoa," "Last Days of Pompeii," "Arizona," "David Copperfield," etc., they would return home delighted with motion pictures and make a favorable report.

As I said, these posters and banners do not advertise the pictures, not even the show, but they retard the progress of cinematography. J. M. B.

Joe Miles Talks of the Exclusive Program

BY following the line of least resistance the program of the Exclusive Supply Corporation has achieved a great growth. That line of least resistance is that of the feature film.

The foresight of the officers of a number of film manufactories some time ago has resulted in the establishment throughout the country of a program which meets the needs and wants of exhibitors and spectators.

Five months ago the Exclusive was inaugurated. It then began with a monthly output of nine feature subjects and twenty-one single-reel releases of the Gaumont, Great Northern, Itala and Solax brands. Since that time several standard brands have come under the Exclusive banner, forming a program of balanced weight and strength.

Free from politics, with fair-minded business men as its officers, and a staff of reputable employees, its clean-cut methods have earned for the Exclusive a good reputation.

A few days ago, before a meeting of representative motion picture men, Joseph R. Miles, general manager of the Exclusive Supply Corporation, in commenting upon the demand for high-class feature subjects, spoke well of the productive results of the Exclusive Manufacturers in their efforts to meet this demand with quality subjects. Mr. Miles said: "While I am proud of the success of our program, I attribute the attainment of that success alone to the fact that our brands are of such recognized quality that the names alone assure their sale. The character of our organization is such that not only is competition not eliminated but is encouraged to such an extent that a keen rivalry exists among our manufacturers to break sales records.

"Strength is being added to the strong. The addition of two more American brands, the Laclede and Great Western, with two feature releases each monthly, beginning early in November, and the New Ammex, beginning November 1st with a Western feature every two weeks, will give balance to the aggregation of foreign brands, including as they do, the pick of the pick from the studios of Gaumont, Great Northern, Itala, Eclectic, Film Releases of America and Lewis Pennant. The American brands now on our program include Solax, Blache American, Dragon and Ramo.

"The decadence of the single-reel release seems inevitable. Its length does not allow the picturization of stories of cumulative power and thus variety of plot is limited.

"In the widening of the Exclusive program's distribution has been exhibited the ever interesting and somewhat amusing trait of human nature that one always wants what the other fellow has. In certain territories our program for some time went begging, but just as soon as the Exclusive rights were secured by an individual or company, every competitor in that territory realized that he also wanted the program."

A noted star to soon be presented in motion pictures will be James O'Neill, the romantic actor, in the characterization he has interpreted for more than five thousand times on the stage, "The Count of Monte Cristo," to be released by the Famous Players Film Co. November 1st.

Influenced by the quality of the subjects thus far imported by the Film Releases of America, Harry Samwick, representing Exclusive Features, Inc., of New York City, has contracted for the entire output of this feature company for Greater New York, New York State and Northern New Jersey.

CONSTRUCTION, APPEARANCE, ADVERTISING—THREE IN ONE

THE Motion Picture News reproduces in cut No. 1 the outline plans and in cut No. 2 the exterior of the "Bellevue," of Newark, N. J., devoted mainly to photoplays. It was designed by Architect Nathan Myers, of the Woolworth Building, New York, and Cort Theatre Building, Newark, N. J.

Cut No. 1 Plan—A, commercial building, stores, offices; B, entrance to theatre; C, the lobby; D, the foyer; E, ticket office; F, resting room (ladies'); G, smoking room; H, emergency exit through commercial building; I, auditorium; J, exit on alley; K, operating booth; L, M, exits; N, stage and screen; O, dressing rooms.

The reader will note that the architect has a practical experience in the planning of theatres, as in the accompanying plan it is shown that he provides a long and narrow auditorium, the best disposition to insure a good projection. At the same time, the most valuable part of the lot is devoted to a commercial building, reducing much the rent on the theatre proper. A very spacious and handsome vestibule, followed by a fine lobby and a foyer, off of which are located the men's and women's retiring rooms and ticket office, occupy the wing having frontage on the main street.

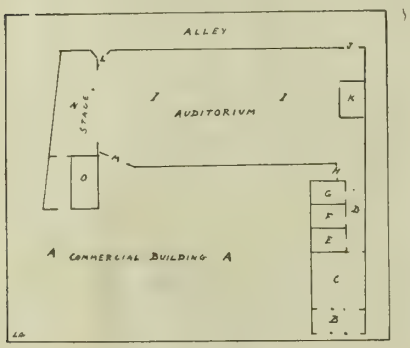

ILLUSTRATION NO. 1

The auditorium is 36 feet by 91 feet, and comfortably seats almost six hundred. A mirror screen of size the largest ever made is one of the features of an otherwise perfectly equipped vaudeville stage. The screen is hung on six steel cables and is counterweighted the same as elevators, and is safely and easily raised and lowered by one man. The building is absolutely fireproof in all parts, and is provided with sprinkler and standpipe systems, and receives the best insurance rating on the local exchange. The most minute care has been taken in all details of the house, inclusive of seating, ventilating, lighting and electrical work.

Architect Nathan Myers has overcome the great drawback of the mirror screen when used for a combination vaudeville and picture house. To my knowledge, many exhibitors desirous of showing their pictures on the celebrated mirror screen, had to give up the idea because no practical device had been suggested for the raising and lowering of the said screen.

The small cut, No. 3, shows the beautiful operating booth of the "Bellevue" Theatre.

(3) OPERATING BOOTH, BELLEVUE THEATRE

The "Bijou" is the most successful motion picture theatre of Springfield, Mass. There is not a more inviting home for motion pictures. Larger houses exist, but none more artistically complete in all details for the comfort of the patrons. The exterior is simple but dignified, with concrete walls and stained-glass windows. Perhaps a resemblance to some building in Mexico is first suggested. On either side are the steps leading to the balcony; then the enclosure on the right side of the lobby is comfortably furnished as a ladies' parlor, while on the left side is the ticket office and the smoking room. Six swinging doors leading directly into the foyer.

As stated in "Advertising the Picture," the Bijou does not display posters or banners, but the advertising is done, as shown in the illustration, through two frames and easels; one containing a card sign of the programme, the other a few photographs of some of the actual scenes of the pictures or of actors.

Cut No. 5 shows part of the interior of the said Bijou Theatre, with the private boxes. Three of these private boxes are on each side of the auditorium. The curtains and potted plants around the stage show how particular Mr. Knight is with respect to all the details that can improve the appearance of the place and please the patrons.

Cut No. 6 shows the beautiful Broadway Theatre of Messrs. Goldstein Bros., of Springfield, Mass. This illustration represents the coming architecture for photoplay houses. Substantial buildings free from the ginger-bread decorations of old days, something to impress the public that motion pictures are no more a fad of a few days, but are here to stay. Real palaces to house the great artistic films produced to-day.

The appearance of such a building is a better advertisement than posters and banners, and is a safe guarantee that the picture shown within can be nothing else than the refined in every respect. The men who are looking for highly sensational films to thrill their degenerate passions need not stop in front of such buildings.

The Broadway Theatre is not exactly a motion picture house, as it is devoted to passing shows, but when the Goldstein Bros. show films, they are the best that can be secured.

Cut No. 7 is an illustration of the arrangement of the screen at the Washington Theatre, of Boston.

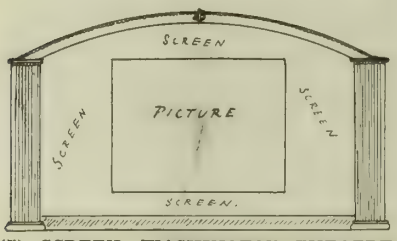
The curtain or screen occupies the entire opening of the proscenium arch and is painted white. The curtain is not only too long and too wide, but is out of proportion and larger than the picture. The picture, as shown in the illustration, occupies only a portion of the curtain, and as there is no border to separate the picture proper from the balance of the white curtain, the projection is dull. The white sides around the picture are hard on the eyesight.

Another drawback to this arrangement is that for a curtain set on the rear of the stage, the proscenium arch is entirely too low. It is true to state that the auditorium has a rather low ceiling.

Cut No. 8 gives an idea of the present floor space of the Washington Theatre: "A" too wide an auditorium, "B" space wasted for a foyer, "C" the ticket booth, "D" the office of the manager.

(6) BROADWAY THEATRE, SPRINGFIELD, MASS.

If the architect had followed the plan shown in cut No. 9: "E" auditorium long and narrow, "F" space for stores on busy Washington Street,



(7) SCREEN, WASHINGTON THEATRE

"G" ticket booth and lobby, he would have made an auditorium better adapted for a motion picture show, and would have gained much valuable space for stores. The stores would have yielded more rent than the second floor, which floor could have been used to give more ceiling height to the auditorium, provide a balcony, office and storerooms for the theatre.

While the Washington is not a bad theatre, it cannot be called the finest and best equipped of the United States, as smaller towns can show far superior motion picture theatres.

Cut No. 10 shows the arrangement of the curtain at the Pleasant Theatre, of Worcester, Mass.

As I said in my letter, "On the Road," Mr. E. W. Lynch is a gentleman who fully understands the exhibiting game, who studies every device and always tries to improve, so as to increase the beauty of the picture and insure more comfort to the patrons.

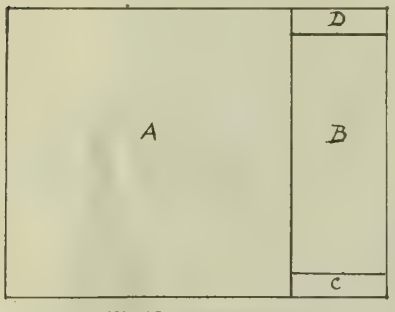
Mr. Lynch is a strong believer in the "Mirror Screen" as the best curtain to bring out all the details and give a depth to the picture. In addition, Mr. Lynch claims that the very best screen will prove a failure if it is not surrounded properly.

(10) CURTAIN, PLEASANT THEATRE

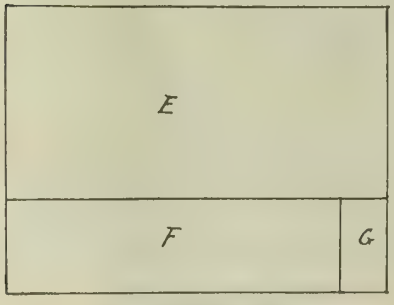
Mr. Lynch knows that unless the screen is set back on the stage, the picture is too close to the front seats to be enjoyed by the patrons. Instead of having the wings of the stage fitted up with regular scenery, as is too often the case, Mr. Lynch draped the whole stage with heavy dark curtains, and by so doing, formed not only a very effective shadow box, but made it very pleasing to the eyes of the audience. The mirror screen is incased in a beautiful, handsomely-carved frame, painted in a dull black, with just enough old gold to relieve the monotony.

A projection under such conditions is bound to be the very best and enhance the beauty of the picture several-fold.

This arrangement does not only



(8) ILLUSTRATION



(9) ILLUSTRATION

(12) AUDITORIUM, PLEASANT THEATRE

benefit the picture, but gives such a taste of refinement to the place as to command the highest patronage.

Cut No. 11 shows one side and the balcony of the theatre, and the surprise is that a good picture can be shown with such light-painted walls. It is true that white-colored walls have the tendency to dull the picture, but in the present case the admirable setting of the screen overcomes the drawbacks of light walls. The beautiful delicate decorations of the walls and cornices add to the refinement of the place.

Cut No. 12 gives a general view of the auditorium from the stage, and it will be seen that the same rich effects of the stage are carried all over the building, even in rich, heavy portieres over the doors.

Cut No. 13 shows a corner of the ladies' retiring-room.

The Pleasant Theatre was destroyed by fire last March from crossed wires under the stage. There were no casualties, as with the admirable service organized by Mr. Lynch, the patrons walked out without the least sign of a panic. After the fire, Mr. Lynch tore out the whole inside of the theatre and rebuilt the present beautiful palace for motion pictures.

I am sorry that I could not secure a photograph of the splendid white marble lobby, with its monumental staircases, and a photograph of the uniformed attendants, to show that everything, under the able management of Mr. Lynch, works in perfect harmony.

We hope to see more of these beautiful theatres, they will do more than anything else to uplift the industry, provided the manufacturers take up the hint and improve the pictures as the exhibitors improve their theatres.

(13) LADIES' RETIRING-ROOM, PLEASANT THEATRE

Jules Burnstein, of the World Special Films Corporation, returned from the convention at Rochester Monday, having shown to the exhibitors their new film "Protea." It was voted one of the most sensational and thrilling ever shown on the screen. Jules made quite a hit. [Jules always does.—Ed. M. P. N.]

EARL METCALF

Earl Metcalf was born in Abergavenny, Wales. Educated in Cincinnati University, also studied for West Point. He organized a company of Kentucky State Militia during the night rider troubles in that State. Metcalf has been twelve years on the stage, with stock companies in Cincinnati, Indianapolis, Memphis, Chicago, New York City, Montreal, St. Paul, etc. He was leading man for Stella Hammerstein, and juvenile man for Zelda Sears. Earl never appeared on the screen except in Lubin films.

Since the purchase of "The Palace of Flames" for territorial rights in Alaska, the gold-seekers have become so enthusiastic about motion pictures that A. R. Thorne has purchased another Itala subject, "The War Correspondents," and is also negotiating for exclusive rights on all Itala future features.

Arthur D. Gans, representing the National Film Exchange, of Baltimore, has purchased the rights for "Unmasked" for Maryland, Delaware, District of Columbia and Virginia. The Sedeg Feature Film Co., of New York City, has purchased another copy of "Tigris" for Greater New York City and Northern New Jersey.

Among the purchasers of state rights on "The Gypsy's Kiss" are the Golden Gate Film Exchange, of San Francisco; Northwestern Feature Film Co., of Portland; Union Film Company, of Chicago; Big 4 Feature Film Co., of Dallas; Weiland Feature Film Co., of Pittsburgh; Electric Theatre Supply Co., of Philadelphia; Exclusive Features, Inc., of New York City, and Famous Players Film Co., of Boston.

Joe Welch, whose Hebrew impersonations have been delighting vaudeville audiences for many years, will appear shortly in a three-part Warner's feature, entitled "The Struggle for Wealth."

INTERESTING FILM REVIEWS

Educational—Industrial—Scenic—General

THE Troublesome Telephone.—Kalem. Oct. 17.)—A comedy which presents several new features which are clever and productive of mirth. Something of a burlesque on real life. A dentist is annoyed by his wife's continuous telephoning. He is always having to leave his work and answer her calls. Most of them are merely assurances that "baby is not fretting." or "baby shows signs of getting her first tooth," etc. Finally when he has a patient firmly ensconced in the chair, and has administered gas to him, he has to go home and get rid of an annoying rat. The story is sure to amuse.

The Boston Floating Hospital. Kalem. (Oct. 17.)—This interesting picture is on a split reel with "The Troublesome Telephone." Boston, ever a city of innovations, has here set a precedent which might be carried out by all the other cities, so successful has it worked. The Kalem Company states that it is the only hospital of its kind in the world, and for this reason it should be most interesting.

There are two classes of nurses in the hospital's employ, the "shore" nurse and the "floating" nurse. One follows up the work of the other. Both the mother and child are looked after by this hospital, and when they have been nursed back to life and happiness and are again sent ashore, the shore nurses follow up the good work by showing the people how they should live to be conducive of good health and morals.

A most philanthropic labor which is appreciated by all whose good fortune it is to get in their care, instead of going to the regular hospitals. Fire drills and other safeguards are demonstrated.

A Stolen Identity. Powers.—This opening paragraph is not intended as a "knock," for "A Stolen Identity" is really a good story, but why certain companies on the Universal program will always use the engravings representing the "Roman Ruins" of "The Coliseum." I don't know. Whatever the interior scene is, it seems these decorations are bound to crop up. Of course they are standard pictures, etc., but are there not others? As before mentioned, this is not a "knock," merely a kindly suggestion.

"A Stolen Identity," although a most improbable story, is one of great interest, and holds the attention of an audience right through. It is the tale of two men who are so exactly alike that one steals the identity of the other in order to get some property in the other's name. Just as he is about to receive the money, however, the rightful owner intercepts him, having broken lose from his prison. A very thrilling automobile ride against time is one of the featured parts. Very cleverly acted in duplicate by Edwin August. Jealousy also has much to do with the story.

Wynona's Vengeance. Bison.—A tale of the Indian warfare in the West, probably about the time of General Custer. The Indians are on the warpath massacring everyone, until they are stopped by the soldiers, who fire their village. Wynona is adopted by the Colonel's daughter and sent away to school. Her father, the Chief of the Indians, in an encounter with an officer of the fort disfigures him for life, thus turning the man's hatred forever his way.

Wynona, on her return some years later from school, inherits this hatred and is badly treated. The chief, her father, insists on the whites giving up the girl, and upon their refusal attacks them. The fight is going against the whites when Wynona, in order to avenge herself for the insults she had received, blows up the fort and all within it. The story thrills with action and excitement, the finale particularly being very good.

Lasca. Bison.—A clever and pretty effect is gained in this picture by having the sub-titles enclosed in boxes made of bark and moss. The story is a very beautiful one in poetry and tells of the love of a man and its result. An old ranger is supposed to be telling the tale of two companions. He had once loved a girl and been dearly loved in return, so much so that when he roused her jealousy she had stabbed him.

Later they are on the desert when a storm breaks and drives a herd of cattle on a stampede. The two of them ride away on one horse, but are unable to keep ahead of the herd. When they dismount the horse gallops away and the girl, Lasca, forcing him to the ground, lays on top and protects him from the hoofs of the galloping of the cattle, losing her own life in the attempt. A pretty story and well told.

The Buccaneers. Bison.—The third and last of an interesting historical series of the Bison brand, dealing with the lives of "famous pirates." The stories are all historically correct, and are most interesting. Capt. Jean La Fette and the notorious Blackbeard are the subjects of this last effort. They are rival buccaneers, but the latter is defeated by La Fette, so they join hands and form a terrible alliance. On one of their marauding cruises La Fette adopts a little boy. The years pass by and John is forced to take a part in their looting, but refuses to kill anyone, though there is a reward out for his capture, as well as that of his masters. His manhood finally awakes, however, through the persuasions of a girl, and he refuses to take any part in their future transactions. The two are captured through the treachery of Blackbeard, but La Fette escapes, and when he hears that John is to suffer through the maliciousness of Blackbeard, he returns and tells them that John had been forced to take a part in the work of the pirates and John is let free. As he finishes his tale La Fette is shot by his rival and dies in the courtroom.

The Dread Inheritance. Victor, Two-Reel.—A splendid story, well told and dealing tenderly with a forbidden topic. It is something on the order of "Damaged Goods," but is so told that young people in general will have difficulty in understanding the subject. The reviewer believes it to be safe to show anywhere, and it should have a big tendency to produce good results. A father in dying imparts to his son the knowledge that there is a possibility that he (the son) may have inherited a terrible disease from him, as in his youth he was rather wild. The son goes aghast at the news and breaks off his engagement with his fiancee, deeming himself unworthy to associate with her. He is examined by a doctor, who is also his rival for the girl's hand. The medical man withholds an opinion, thus leading the younger man to believe himself afflicted. Prayer finally accomplishes what other efforts would not, and he knows he has miraculously escaped. The mother of the girl seemed a bit young for the part, but played it well. J. Warren Kerrigan and Jessylyn Van Trump played the leads.

Animated Weekly No. 84. (Oct. 15.)—Containing nine news items of interest. The photography is excellent and the subjects taken very good. The news is as follows:

1. Pontoon Bridge Accident—A series of accidents threaten to mar the annual exhibition and manoeuvres of the British Army Engineers at Portsmouth, England.

2. The Louisville Handicap—Iron Mask creates a new world's record when he travels the six furlongs in 1.10 2/5.

3. Unveiling Ceremonies at San Diego—Many notables, including the representatives of President Wilson and the King of Spain, assist in the dedication of a cross to Serra, first white man to settle on the Pacific Coast.

4. Aviation Carnival—World's famous aviators compete for the greatest prize in aviation—the International Aviation Cup—Rheims, France.

5. Weekly Fashion Hints—Suits and dresses of velveteen and corduroy are popular for Fall.

6. Battle of the Thames—Is re-enacted by prominent citizens of the city of Louisville and is the feature of the Kentucky Perry Centennial Celebration.

7. Great Liberal Rally—Sir Wilfred Laurier, ex-Premier of Canada, attends the Liberal rally at St. Martine, Quebec. Sir Wilfred Laurier lost his Premiership through his advocating the reciprocity treaty between the United States and Canada.

8. Remarkable Marathon Race—Many remarkable athletes participate in the classic race of the South—the Times-Despatch Marathon — Richmond, Va.

9. Exciting Motor-Boat Races—The fastest motor-boats in the world race for the International Motor-Boat Trophy—Osborne Bay, London, England. The race was won by the Maple Leaf at the remarkable speed of 57 miles an hour.

The Mate of the Schooner Sadie. Lubin. (Oct. 17.)—The moral of this story is a little overdrawn, so that the good effect that it should have is greatly lost. It is, however, with the exception of this an excellent drama. Lute Drew is the mate of a schooner, and is affianced to the daughter of his captain. Knowing that the love of drink must be in his veins, he assiduously keeps away from its lure, until one day he is forced to take a drink to honor his approaching wedding. He immediately becomes a raving maniac and tries to kill the father of his sweetheart, failing in which, and being chased by the police, dives overboard and swims to the "Sadie," which he boards. He immediately proceeds to fill himself with whiskey and then attacks the captain again, this time injuring him seriously. He then dives overboard again, but does not reappear.

Pathe Weekly No. 59. (Oct. 16.)—An unusually interesting number of the semi-weekly, containing much news of moment. The motor-boat races in Oregon show some very speedy traveling. Much trouble has been experienced in Colorado, and especially in Denver, because of the poor irrigation facilities. Governor Ammons and Secretary Lane are shown studying the situation. James Whitcomb Riley, the beloved poet, is seen in his home in Indianapolis on his birthday, receiving the plaudits and tokens of affection from the children of that city.

The most interesting part of the film was the chance offered to compare the German soldiers with those of this country. There was a review before the Kaiser and his sons in Berlin, and another in Washington before the President. It must be admitted that in foot soldiery the Germans were perfect, while the American troops aroused a cheer by their wonderful cavalry work. Scenes from Oskaloosa, Iowa, and New York were shown. The Panama Canal, nearing completion, was very good. These pictures, incidentally, have been accepted by the United States Government as official documents. The closing baseball scenes were fair.

The Bridge of Shadows. Selig. Two Reels. (Oct. 13.)—The great desire of the manufacturers to produce more than single reels has led to the padding of several dramas that hitherto have not had more than one thousand feet. Not that this is necessarily one of that class, but it does seem that the picture above mentioned would have greater strength were it confined to the single reel. The story deals with the failure of a large insurance company through the recent floods in the West, and the consequent poverty of the companies' employees. The daughter of the president, now by herself in the world, loses her position and wanders from one thing to another, finally landing in a gypsy camp. From this position she is adopted by a wealthy family through having brought back their lost child. The hero, who had been a detective in the employ of the company, is wrongfully accused of theft and sent to jail. After his release he cannot obtain work and is desperate. Finally the girl and he are brought together again by force of circumstances, his innocence is established, and she regains her wealth through the findings of the court. A. M.

The Cursed Drug. Eclair. Three-Reel.—The terrible curse of the drug habit cannot be too plainly demonstrated to an unknowing public. The word "unknowing" is used advisedly. This feature of the Eclair Company tells of the terrible effects of opium upon a man of strong will and character, whose whole life and future is wrecked through the baneful influence of a drug.

Roberts parts tenderly from his fiancee and goes to India to look after some of his father's interests. While he is there he falls into the drug habit quite by chance and it is no time before he is a total wreck. Two coolie girls, whom he has brought on the ship with him on his return voyage, find a pair of gloves that the girl at home had given him as a memento, and the sight of them causes him to have his last vision, in which he sees his sweetheart dying at home, and the shock is such that it causes his own death. A strong picture, which carries a good moral.

The Veteran. Broncho. (Nov. 5.)—A two-reel feature of the Broncho Company which does not in the least follow their regular style of production, inasmuch as it is a drama of modern days, referring to the days of the past, when the North and South were fighting one another. Amos Hood is a veteran of the war, but is living at his own home with his wife, Martha, and his daughter on the pension received from the government. Owing to an error the pension is held up and Amos sees the possibility of poverty and the old home going. He is invited to a banquet, and there presented with a medal. It is pitiful to see him stealing food from the table to take home instead of eating it. On his arrival home he finds that his wife has died in the meantime, and life seems dead to him from then on. His comrades have in the meantime taken up a collection for him and arrive at the house when he is in the middle of his sorrow, accompanied by a brass band. The situation is explained to them and they mourn with him. A sad tale, but well acted and moves our sympathies.

From Out of the Storm. Broncho. (October 29.)—If one-half of the criminals who leave prison were to reform, there would still be needed another twenty-five per cent to catch up to the number of convicts who turn good in motion pictures. Of course it is necessary, once in a while, but to quote the New York American, "in 'real' life they don't, but in 'reel' life they do." A noticeable difference. This drama is the story of a girl who formerly was a crook, has turned good, and is married to a ranch foreman when her old pal turns up. She starts to leave with him, but on their way they rescue her husband, who has just been injured. The crook reforms now. Indians are introduced, with cavalry against them, which supplies some action. The former crook is killed by the redskins. A fine realistic rainstorm is also introduced.

The Passer-by. Rex Two-reel.—A quaint picture, which, although utterly dissimilar, somehow reminds one of "The Servant in the House," which is probably still fragrant in the minds of all. There is a little difficulty experienced in following the thread of the story. As the title shows, the hero is just a passer-by who joins a merry throng, and after settling a love affair in which he has to fight a duel, disappears down the road. A strong drama and well directed.

The Jew's Christmas. Rex Two-reel.—An original and good story written by Lois Weber, who, together with her husband, Phillips Smalley, produced and acted the leading parts. The cast is made up carefully and the interpretation excellent. How Rabbi Isaac, who cared naught for any Christian and disinherited his daughter for marrying a Gentile, but who later became reconciled to the Gentile, is well told. The rabbi has been reduced to poverty, and is living almost a pauper's life when he meets his little grandchild and expends his last cent to buy her a Christmas tree. He does not know her name, nor her relationship to himself, but he loves her. Through the child reconciliation is brought about. The Jewish praying in the tabernacle is most instructive, the ceremony being genuine.

The Pink Granite Industry at Milford, Mass. Edison. (Oct. 8.)—The post-office at 33rd Street and Seventh Avenue, New York, as well as the new Pennsylvania Railroad Depot, nearby, are notable examples of the uses of this stone. The mine or quarry at Milford has been in operation for seven years and makes a good picture. The stone is seen in the various stages, from blasting to the finished article. The drilling with pneumatic tools, which cut a 1½-inch hole at the rate of 12 feet an hour, and the smoothing and splitting processes are well demonstrated.

Buddhist Temples and Worshipers. Vitagraph.—Among the hundreds of religions and creeds of this earth, there is none more intricate and interesting than the belief of all of the Indias, Buddhism. Possessing many features similar to that of Christianity, yet on the whole totally different, it is indeed a most interesting topic for anyone, whether he possess the mind of the theologian or not. Their method of worship, their various hopes and beliefs, and a comparison of these with the expectations that the Christ taught, form a deep study. The Vitagraph is, of course, unable to go into the matter as deeply and earnestly as they would have liked, but the most vital points are shown.

MOVIE CENSORS

If Company Owning 3,000 Films Succeeds in Its Contest May Be Minus Jobs

The legality of the act creating the Ohio State Board of Motion Picture Censors may have to be determined by courts, and there is still a possibility of the inspectors losing their jobs, according to developments at Columbus, O., recently.

A large film company, with headquarters at Cleveland, has refused to abide by the law requiring all pictures shown after November 4th, to be inspected by the censors and will not allow the board to inspect any one of its 3,000 films.

Two scenarios accepted by the Reliance for early release are by actresses of the company, and in both cases the authoress has been cast for the leading role.

Carey Lee is responsible for the photoplay "For Love of a Man," or "The Woman Who Began Again," in which she will appear in the star part. Writing scenarios is not a new departure for Miss Lee, as several of her literary efforts have found their way to the screen.

With Irene Hunt, who will be seen in her own drama, entitled "The Other Woman," however, photoplay writing is a new line of endeavor, "The Other Woman" being her first attempt at writing.

Western features, long wanted to balance the Exclusive Supply Corporation Program, will now be available. Three companies releasing aggregately six and eight features monthly have signed contracts with Joseph R. Miles, general manager of the Exclusive Supply Corporation.

One of the companies, the Ammex, is not unknown, but the two others, the Laclede and Great Western brands, will start fresh.

Making Pig-Iron. American. — A subject which always holds the interest of the audience. We can see iron every day in its hard state, but to see it melting and running like water is indeed a novel sight. The American Company first shows the loading of scrap-iron which is lifted by means of a powerful electro-magnet. Blast-furnaces having a capacity of five hundred tons are also shown full of molten metal. The loading and shipping is also novel. A good release.

Making of an Auto Tire. Keystone. (Oct. 27.)—Twenty years ago the rubber industry in this country was in its infancy. A few manufacturers were prosperous, but the market had not grown. To-day, with the great demand for bicycle, motorcycle and automobile tires, the business has become one of the country's greatest. The Keystone Company shows all the processes the rubber passes through, from ordinary Para to "non-skid" tires. The vulcanizing, baking the rubber for three hours at 290° F., and the final tread.

The Primeval Test. Universal.—A suggested new method for curing wives of unfaithfulness, and for bringing them back to the husband thoroughly chastened. Whether the method would really work in life is a matter of surmise, but it makes a good story, and that is what we are after. There is plenty of action to the two reels, and the work of Marguerita Fisher and Bob Leonard is of their usual standard.

Imagine yourself with an unfaithful wife, or rather a wife that wants to be unfaithful, and in order to cure her, you take her to the mountains, far away from civilization, and there give her the clothes of the prehistoric cave dweller, and inform her that until she had learned to love you there she will stay. Would it work? Too much work is the cause of the husband's carelessness and the reason for her seeking comfort from others. But when her would-be lover finds her later when the cure has been accomplished, he is no longer "in the swim." The photography and settings are good.

Captain Kidd. Bison.—The life of the historic and notorious Captain Kidd is the foundation of an interesting drama by the Bison Company. It is the second of a series dealing with the lives of celebrated pirates, and is interesting, if from a historical standpoint only.

Captain Kidd was a gentleman, his actions to the contrary. How he became the scourge of the high seas, simply because he believed himself to have been jilted by his fiancee, is graphically told in this drama. He receives a commission from the King, William III, because of his great powers of persuasion over men, to go out to sea and rid the highways of the pirates that were such trouble to the sailors. In taking leave of his sweetheart, he finds her in the arms of another man, who was really her brother, but whom Captain Kidd had never seen. In anger he goes away, and when out at sea becomes the monster that we now know him.

The photography in the hold of the ship was not up to par. The mechanical rocking of the ship was done very well and was most realistic. His first act was to cruelly put to death two men whom he had caught conspiring to steal the ship by provoking a mutiny among the crew. Peggy all this time was bemoaning her lover, and finally decides to go to America. She is captured by Kidd, and in her dying breath she makes him realize that she is innocent.

Widow Maloney's Faith. Domino. Two reels.—A quaint old Irish tale with a touch of the Irish romanticism showing throughout. The picture seems true to life, and the acting is good. Widow Maloney and her son, Dan, whom she idolizes, live together. Dan is in love and is loved by a girl. Mike also loves her. The latter is a villain and plans to get the girl, so he hires the local innkeeper, Dougherty, to dope Dan and then shanghai him aboard ship.

This is done and Dan's ship is wrecked; after a series of mishaps he reaches his native land with plenty of money. The old house is for sale and Dan buys it and then makes his identity known, giving the house to his mother and the girl. Mike is then shanghaied in turn, together with his mates. Full of action from start to finish, with a pleasant mixture of Irish humor.

A GIRL OF THE SUNNY SOUTH

American Kineto Company. Four Reels. Adapted from the Play of the Same Name by Travers Vale

THE story of this motion picture is placed about the time of the Civil War in this country, scenes from which are included in the tale with effect.

Searelle and Raymond, a lawyer, are in love with the same girl, the latter, however, losing to his rival, who marries the girl amid much celebration on the part of the negroes, who are not at all fond of Raymond and his aide-de-camp, Le Roy. The latter adds much humor to the various situations, and one feels that despite his villainous intentions he is worthy of sympathy. The two go away to the war together, but Raymond and Le Roy, in order to disgrace Searelle, forge a letter and so get Harry to desert. He is caught and is shot, immediately after being found by the Federals and rescued half dead. He has lost his memory, and after the war wanders from place to place, finally landing back at his own home. Here, although no one knows him, he sees Raymond and Le Roy kill the girl's father when he had caught them in the act of stealing some money, but as his mind is a blank he forgets it, and as he is on the spot, is sentenced on circumstantial evidence. Le Roy is caught with the money in his possession and is sent to jail as his accomplice. The two escape and go to sea as stowaways. Through the carelessness of Le Roy the ship catches fire, and they take to a raft. Then, after a number of exciting and animated adventures, they arrive back home and take part in helping to convict Raymond for his crimes.

The Judgment. Domino.—Two reels. Richard V. Spencer, the writer of a number of excellent scenarios, has produced one of his very best in this story of the stern law of the Puritans and their interpretation of the "unwritten law." The tale tells of the ruining of a girl, Mercy, the daughter of a cobbler, by a dandy who has just arrived in the settlement. When he learns of her trouble he leaves and the girl is banished from the colony and wanders away.

Forty years pass by and Mercy, now an old hag, is tried before her own son in Salem for witchery. She is found guilty and writes her confession, which she asks to be delivered to her son after her death. The magistrate, upon reading the truth, learns of his identity. An unusual picture, which although not at all resembling Hawthorne's "Scarlet Letter," manages to recall the latter to our mind. The photography is excellent.

Matrimonial Manœuvres. Vitagraph. One reel. (Oct. 17.)—It is a pleasant change to see Maurice Costello in comedy—not that he is not good in drama—but because the writer believes him to be a most versatile actor, and so ought to be given a chance. In this comedy, however, he does not excel, the part apparently not suiting his style.

The story is not a very good one. A young man promises to introduce his aunt to a nobleman, for which she suggests that she will pay handsomely. He gets an actor friend to impersonate a lord, which he does very well. The aunt, however, discovers that she has been "buncoed" when she sees this same erstwhile lord on the stage in town. She gives her nephew just time enough to make the next boat out.

A Woman of the Mountains. Selig. One reel. (Oct. 17.)—A very fair melodrama, with plenty of action and several new features. Stella is engaged to a man named Brice, but loves the foreman of a mine where she lives. Brice is sent as a secret agent from the Power Company to try and put this smaller company out of business.

On his way he loses a paper in a novel way, and this is found by Stella, who sees that Brice intends to commit a villainous action. Brice with a helper has placed a load of dynamite in the tunnel, and is to set it off at 12 M. Stella arrives just as the fuse is to be touched off, and the foreman gets there a second later, having ridden through on a rope incline. A thrilling ending.

Phantom Dungeon, or The Treasure of Baux

Union Features—Three Reels

THE very name itself is alluring to a public demanding and insisting on melodrama. And there is plenty of excitement in this picture, although there is a generous amount of romance to do with it. The story is of a young fellow who has had plenty of money, but through adverse circumstances is rendered penniless. Because of this his engagement to the daughter of Banker Stern is broken off by both father and girl, and in a moment of despair he is going to kill himself when he has a vision of his ancestors burying their treasures in the old family castle, when Richelieu was Cardinal of France and all was terror.

The vision was so real that he sets out for the now ruined castle in search of the fortune. While he is there he meets with an accident, which brings him in contact with a girl of the quarries, who helps him and shows him a secret way into the bowels of the castle.

SCENE FROM "THE PHANTOM DUNGEON"

After much searching he recovers the hidden valuables, but as he starts out he finds that the men of that neighborhood, having discovered his secret, have walled him in. The girl blasts the wall and sets him free. Together they return to his home, where he marries her, and when the banker and his daughter try to make advances, he introduces them to his bride.

McENNERY REFUTES FROHMAN'S STATEMENT

A deal of interest is being taken in the threatened suit of Charles Frohman against the United Kingdom Films and the future disposition of "A Message from Mars." A few days ago McEnnery received word from Charles Frohman in which it was claimed that he, Frohman, held the sole playing and picture rights to the film, a statement which McEnnery strenuously denies.

Speaking on the subject to a Motion Picture News man, Mr. McEnnery said: "Mr. Frohman's claim is absolutely ridiculous, and outside of instructions issued to my lawyers I am ignoring it entirely. 'A Message from Mars' as a picture subject is the property of the United Kingdom Films, and we have ample evidence to prove it. Furthermore, the United Kingdom Films is a reliable concern which would never lend its name or give consideration to any doubtful business proceeding."

The organization of the World Special Films Corporation is extending. Offices are now open in thirteen towns, extending from New York to Kansas City.

In this age of keen competition you must be, if you would succeed.

If you have not the best, the man around the corner has—and he gets the business.

It matters not how good your film service may be, IT IS THE MACHINE THAT DOES THE WORK.

Perfect projection, durability, ease of operation and safety by means of exclusive features, these qualities are all combined in

Proof of the Pudding Simplex Quality Stands the Test of Service

Read the unsolicited opinions of "reel" live wires:

Salvin Rock, West Haven, Conn.

Precision Machine Co., New York.

Gentlemen:—I have used the Simplex machine for several months and would say that it is, in my opinion, the best and most satisfactory machine I have ever used. Have had sixteen years steady experience as a moving picture operator and during that time have used many good machines, but I consider the "Simplex" the best and easiest running of them all. (Signed) J. P. DIBBLE.

603 Carolina Ave, S. E., Washington, D. C., Feb. 24, 1913.

To the Manufacturers of Simplex Machine.

Dear Sirs:—I believe in the "Simplex." I am a machinist of twenty-two years' experience and have been operating five years, using all kinds of machines, and I think I know a good one when I see it. (Signed) W. H. MARSHALL,
Chief Operator Avenue Grand Theatre.

San Bernardino, Cal., Oct. 16, 1913.

Precision Machine Co., 317 East 34th St., New York City.

Gentlemen:—Received the Simplex machine and I am well pleased with it. If any one that lives in this locality inquires about a machine, tell them to go and look at the Temple Theatre in San Bernardino and if they don't buy a Simplex they don't want a machine at all. I am showing a better picture than any I have seen in California. The patrons claim there is none like it in Los Angeles or San Diego, so clear and steady. Wishing you continued success for your most excellent machine, I remain, Yours very truly, (Signed) GUY SLIPPER, Temple Theatre.

Such convincing proof of Simplex superiority is of tremendous value to the prospective buyer, especially when backed by the Precision guarantee of accuracy of workmanship, high grade materials and that exclusive quality of projection.

UNIVERSAL TO SPEND QUARTER OF A MILLION DOLLARS ON NATIONAL ADVERTISING CAMPAIGN

"RESOLVED, That the sum of two hundred and fifty thousand dollars ($250,000) be appropriated from the net surplus of the Universal Film Manufacturing Company for the purpose of exploiting the Universal Program in the United States and Canada through the medium of magazine, newspaper, billboard and street-car advertising, and that the executive officers of the Universal Film Manufacturing Company be, and they hereby are, authorized to enter into a contract with the Witt K. Cochrane Advertising Agency of Chicago, Ill., on the basis of the above-mentioned expenditure." (Unanimously adopted.)

THIS EXTRACT from the minutes of a meeting of the Board of Directors of the Universal Film Manufacturing Company, held Tuesday, October 28th, will give the exhibitors of America an idea of our determination to teach the people that Universal exhibitors are showing by far the best program of films in the world. Not a cent of this vast appropriation is to be taken from the fund which is used for making our productions. On the contrary, it will come from the net surplus of the company—in other words, it would be "dividends" for the stockholders of the Universal if they preferred dividends to a national advertising campaign.

THE FIRST one to benefit by this enormous advertising campaign will be the Universal exhibitor. The second will be the Universal exchange. The third and last will be the Universal Film Manufacturing Company. Up to now, we have spent fortunes on improving the quality of the whole Universal program. We have succeeded in reaching the highest point in quality ever attained by any film concern. There is not even a close second to that Universal program. It is now our intention to teach the people—the "ninety millions"—that the best theatre to patronize is the theatre that shows the Universal program.

BE READY TO REAP THE BENEFIT OF THIS ADVERTISING CAMPAIGN from the very beginning. If you are not using that Universal program now, communicate at once with the nearest Universal exchange before it is completely represented in your neighborhood. You have either seen or heard of the astounding things we have accomplished in the past few months. We are going right ahead with our quality improvement and at the same time we are going to create a terrific, widespread and never-ending demand for that Universal program. Now arrange with the nearest Universal exchange for the whole program before your patrons demand it of you!

Film Quality

Quality in the film—quality from a technical photographic standpoint is as important to the Exhibitor as is interest in the story that the film tells.

There's one film that's recognized the world over as the standard of quality — that is always used by those whose effort it is to give the Exhibitors the very best goods and the very best service—Eastman film.

And it is identifiable. Look for "Eastman" on the perforated margin.

WHY IS AN ADVERTISEMENT?

THE above title is rather a large one with which to begin this informal series of little talks on advertising.

COUNTLESS reams of paper have been used up in attempts to answer this query.

* * *

THE writer recalls an advertising men's banquet at the Sphinx Club in London in which several earnest young men bored the diners for several hours with this very subject. Then the guest of honor was called upon for the concluding speech. He was a Napoleonic little man, known to a suffering world as Doctor Munyon.

* * *

THE little man slid to his feet and with a sphinx-like smile raised a forefinger. "Gentlemen," said he. "There is hope!" The verbose young men told of how and why the other fellow did it—after the other fellow did it. Dr. Munyon made a living image of a trade-mark which he built up to a million-dollar value —and didn't tell.

* * *

IT'S a very big and platitudinous subject—this why of advertising, and here are a few "whys" which may offer some suggestions that may hit home—which is the modest aim of this series.

"WHY advertise?" said a big manufacturer about two years ago.

IT is amusing to note that this same man had formerly been advertising manager of a weekly publication and now declined to swallow the medicine he had so often prescribed for others. So he went to the other extreme.

* * *

HE had a force of more than eighty field salesmen, each costing him from $2,500 to $12,000 yearly. They kept his plant overrun with orders. Then he saw a light. He started a small advertising campaign and as he increased it he cut down his sales staff. Now he does more business with thirty-odd salesmen, and his selling cost is almost 50 per cent less.

* * *

THESE two go together, by the way—advertising and field salesmanship. Either is expensive or inefficient without the other.

"WHY advertise?" asked a well-to-do merchant. He had the leading furniture store in the city of Troy, N. Y. Forty years of hard work had built up a fine business. It was there, solid and self-sufficient, with customers enough and permanent. The aged proprietor was about to turn it over to his son, with the feeling that the business was secure—forever.

* * *

"WHY insure?" was the answer. "You wouldn't leave your store to-night if it were uninsured. You wouldn't turn it over to your son, if you felt that he would let his policies lapse."

* * *

"NOW, suppose a new concern with plenty of capital and experience comes here and starts advertising. Where will your son and your business be in two years? Why not insure your store with advertising—now?"

* * *

AND the conservative old tradesman did.

* * *

SO here are two "whys" of advertising:

To sell goods economically—if you want to sell them and market is open.

To insure their sale in the future, if you don't need to sell them now and if your market happens to be temporarily closed.

BOTH of which "whys" apply very intimately, it would seem to me, to a number of makers of films and theatre equipment supplies.

WILLIAM ALLEN JOHNSTON.

PICTURES OR BOOKS?

NO one has ever accused Thomas A. Edison, the wizard of East Orange, of being mentally deficient. 'Twere rankest folly to speak thus of the world's greatest inventor, and one whose glimpses into the future are being realized in a way that is well-nigh terrifying.

So when he predicts that some day motion pictures will replace, at least, partially, text books in schools, it behooves the world to listen respectfully.

His leading argument is that pictures illustrate many subjects far more graphically than text books ever can. Pictures can never teach logarithms or Greek declensions, but as a vehicle for history or geography the strip of celluloid can not be surpassed.

Travel has been called the greatest broadener of the mind. Through the medium of motion pictures one may be mentally transported to Jersey City, Hong Kong, London, and Cape Town, within ten minutes.

The people walking on the streets, their dress, manners and customs, may be seen. Books can not do that. The scholar gets a much more vivid impression of Burma by seeing a Burmese scene on the screen than by reading "the Burmese are a peculiar people who wear their hair in outlandish styles."

To the dull or indifferent scholar a text book is a bug-a-boo. Motion pictures are not. Films may never replace school books, but Mr. Edison is surely right in saying that they will prove an invaluable supplement.

SOURCES OF INSPIRATION

ONE of the recent successes of the art world in Europe was a problem picture, if we may so call it, entitled "The Fallen Idol." This picture was by the Honorable John Collier, a well-known painter who has made a specialty of problem pictures—pictures that in the cant phrase take a note of interrogation as the motive. These problem pictures are easily identifiable—because they excite curiosity. When you are looking at them you are conscious of having a case presented to you. You say to yourself, Well, what is he or she likely to do next? What is likely to happen? What will be the outcome of it? The majority of great paintings, display incidents: historical, dramatic, and so forth. Modern art, however, is turning more and more to the problematical. As in the play, so in the picture. You are left guessing. Writers and painters of advanced methods of thought think it the right thing to leave you guessing.

Now, in this picture (there were reproductions of it in the New York Times and other papers in this country last summer) we see a man seated, as it were, at his study table with a troubled expression on his face. At his feet kneels in suppliant attitude a beautiful girl, presumably his wife. The interior where the figures are placed by the painter shows culture, refinement, if not wealth. The man might have been, in the mind of the painter, a successful professional man—lawyer, engineer, surgeon, or architect.

Thousands of guesses were hazarded by those who viewed the picture as to what it meant. Had the girl fallen from grace? Been found out by the man? Rebuked? Was she asking forgiveness? Would he relent or not?

When we saw this reproduction in the newspaper we realized its dramatic value. In fact, we cut it out of the paper and preserved it as a text for an article which we knew we would one day write. Now we see that a film maker in Europe has taken this picture as the kernel of a film story. He has dramatized it. He has led up to it. He has made the picture motive the principal motive of his film play. He has had it written up and round about. He has taken this simple incident and made a film play of it.

To the best of our recollection, this is the first instance in which a single picture has formed the inspiration of a film play. This film of a "Fallen Idol" seems, by what we read, to be making a success. Have we not here a valuable hint to film makers who are constantly complaining of the dearth of original plots. You have all the great pictures of the world to give you inspiration. Nothing can be simpler than to turn a hack scenario writer adrift in a great picture gallery, tell him to select some of the incidents shown on the canvas and write film plays around them. The painful monotony of theme so evident in these motion pictures would possibly be mitigated by the importation of a little picture gallery variety. Motion pictures FROM pictures seems to us rather a good "stunt." What say you, Messrs. Film Makers?

By J. B.

SOMNIFIC! Thank you, Mr. Klauber, of the New York Times. I avow myself one of your constant readers. Theatrical criticism is one of the many trades I have touched at times—God help me. My favorite author, Lord Beaconsfield (Disraeli) stigmatized theatrical criticism as "the last resort of the mentally destitute." I was not mentally destitute when I took up the work; I was broke. At best it is a thankless job. In return for all the appreciatory and critical stuff that I have written in my career, I have received far more kicks than ha'pence. But that is in accordance with the fitness of things. A man who is so far driven as to be a critic (conceding his ability to think and write even Laura Jean Libbey's stuff) deserves no pity.

SO having been a critic I endeavor to see what the best men in the game are doing, simply, I guess, by way of pity and sympathy. Most of us who have been to school or college revisit those places in after life just to see what it is like; just to see the new fellows suffer as we have suffered. I read theatrical criticism simply because I like in a way to contemplate the mental gymnastics in which a critic is bound to indulge. And now and then I get an idea from these gymnastics, which I can switch for use in my mental survey of the motion picture field.

* * *

MR. KLAUBER'S description of a recent play as somnific is a master-stroke of incisive writing. He tells anybody like myself, who is in the game, that the play was dull, that it would send one to sleep. It was somnific, somnificational, somnificatic. Hey, fellows, here is a fine series of lingual curiosities for you to struggle with. When you read such a description as this in ordinary dramatic criticism, you are driven to wonder whether, outside a terse analysis of the play, detailed criticism is worth a red cent. It suggests to you that the managing editor of the daily newspaper might be content to afford just sufficient space for telling what are the salient characteristics of the play: no more; no less. Such as—well, such as can be readily imagined. You could apply the principles of quantitative and qualitative chemical analysis to your play. When you submit a sample of an unknown body to a chemist for analysis, he sends you a little slip in which he tells you in effect that in a hundred parts of the substance there are so many parts of this, that or the other thing making up the "demnition total" (to quote Mantalini) of a hundred parts.

* * *

MR. AUGUSTUS THOMAS, as was pointed out the other day, has adopted the synthetical method of making motion pictures, because he charts and plots the movements of his characters. He builds up his pictures. That is synthesis. Analysis is another thing. Analysis means that you simply take the thing to pieces and see what it is made of. And that is what Mr. Klauber did in his criticism from which I am quoting. He practically said: "In a hundred parts of this play there is somnificitis q. s." In other words, the play, though good in many respects, was so dull that it would send you to sleep. And dullness is an unforgivable sin in any play—or in anything which is designed to interest and amuse.

SOMNIFICALITY (oh, my, how I do love to fondle over this blessed word) is the besetting sin of a very large percentage of motion pictures as now made. They are dull because they are undramatic or old in theme. They outrage the formula given time and again: A good play, well acted, well photographed. Of course every photoplay cannot be a good one any more than all stage plays can be good ones. William Lord Wright on another page is doing fine work in teaching the photoplay aspirant the rudiments of the subject. He is attending to the story part of the formula. He is inculcating the enormous value in these photoplays of action. There wasn't enough action in the play Mr. Klauber criticised, and so he somnificated!!!

I WENT into the Automat the other day. This institution impressed me very much. There were serried rows of little receptacles on the wall. You drop a nickel into them, and you take pie or what you want to the value of your nickel. You build up your lunch by automatic means in 5-cents worths. You get down, in the Automat, to the unit system of lunching. Well, that is what you have to do in the matter

E. MANDELBAUM

Concerning the President of the World Special

THE fluctuation in the motion picture business has brought to the fore a man who has the capacity of playing a distinguished part in it—the man who is the subject of this portrait. Mr. Mandelbaum was for many years prominent in the exchange branch of the business. He now is president of the World Special Films Corporation. He bids fair to be prominent in the picture publishing and producing end. Mr. Mandelbaum is one of those men—quiet and self-centered — who shows his mind by his actions. He has associated with him the popular and suave Jules Bernstein, an acknowledged master of exchange and distributing work. Then he has enlisted the aid of Stan Twist, a clever and cultured young recruit to the great New York film world. If a man is known by the company he keeps, then Mr. Mandelbaum demonstrates that he is entitled to a place of great esteem and respect in the motion picture business of the nation.

E. MANDELBAUM

Mr. Mandelbaum is in his intellectual prime. He is eminently one of those who realize what it is the fashion to call the "possibilities" of the picture. He has shrewd business principles allied with very fine ideals as to the proper qualities of motion pictures. He is a man who would deprecate sensationalism in posters, in subject, in dramatic treatment. He stands for pictures which tend to appeal to the better instincts of the human mind, and as such, his policy deserves the commendation of this paper.

Mr. Mandelbaum is conservative in his methods and outlook. He is one of those men whose business judgment in all affairs is animated by caution, by prudence, by, above all things, common sense. He realizes that the picture at the present time is the subject of a "boom," i.e., that a period of inflation may be setting in. In this crisis, for such it is, regarded from an economic standpoint, a man of the type of Mr. Mandelbaum proceeds warily. There are not wanting those who think with the subject of this sketch that over-production, over-capitalization and the other symptoms of inflation, such as have been apparent in other industries, like that of the automobile, are plainly to be discerned in the motion picture business. Reading these signs of the times, Mr. Mandelbaum is adopting a policy of conservatism which is bound, we think, to result in success for the World Special Film Corporation.

The "World Special," under the guidance of Mr. Mandelbaum, should be watched not for what it does in the way of making pictures, but for how it does it. A good business policy by any individual or corporation is bound to react favorably on the business in general. There are many fly-by-night organizations in the business which have all the potentiality of "going up" sooner or later. And sooner than later. But Mandelbaum, Bernstein and Twist shall endure.

of these photoplays. In a reel of a thousand feet, in order that the thing can get over, there must be a certain amount of automatically-provided pabulum. You have to assure so many units of action—movement—animation—thrills—call it whatever you will; there must be something doing, more or less, all the time. In order to hold the attention of the audience you must calculate this out, this something, with a fair amount of accuracy.

OF course I am leaving out of consideration such factors as the appeal to the emotions, the sentiments, the sympathies of the individual. This is another matter. But many a bad play has succeeded because it had plenty of action in it—I mean a badly constructed play, old in theme. And many a good play on a new theme, or at any rate an uncommon theme, has failed because there was a lack of action in it. It is the same with film plays. It is the PLAY that is the thing, and there must be ACTION. While thought is a great factor in making this little old globe of ours go round on its axis, action counts most. Acta non verba. It's what you do that counts; not what you think, or say. I think it is Kipling who, in one of his finest poems, makes the celestial janitor say to the would-be entrant, "What have you done?" It is the doings in a picture that count in a major sense, not the thoughts.

THE moral of all this is that scenario writers, producers, film makers, should assure as far as possible that there is action of the best kind in their film plays. Some plays I have recently seen are deadly dull. They have relied too much upon atmosphere and sentiment for their effects. You must adjust the constituent elements of your theme as hinted above in order to produce a good play. You must never forget that the motion picture is or should be in one of its aspects an impressible agency. Impressible, that is, in respect of affecting the mind through the brain. It does not in the majority of cases appeal to the sense of color. The film is monochromatic as a rule. Therefore, to make up for this chromatic deficiency you need to be insistent in your action in order that the full effect may be made on the brain. A Kinemacolor picture may succeed in virtue of its colorificality—the story and the action being subordinated to the color effect. But from a black and white picture the color is absent, so in order to make up for this deficiency you gotta give 'em plenty o' punch. So punch, punch, brethren, and do not somnificulate, s'il vous plait.

A VIVID VISUALIZATION OF A VIVID STORY

"The Sea Wolf," by Jack London, Does Not Lose Force on the Screen

JACK LONDON'S works are characterized by an absolute knowledge of his subject, a large consideration for details and good descriptive power. In this he outshines any contemporary.

It is for these reasons that his novels are so easy to dramatize, and it seems that this will account greatly for the future success of the moving picture version in seven acts of "The Sea Wolf," produced by Bosworth, Inc. For it will be a success, it cannot very well be otherwise unless it be exhibited exclusively in homes for the blind. Its unescapable virility insures that.

The interpretation of that character, "Wolf" Larsen, by Hobart Bosworth is so good that it really defies description It is a hard character and it is doubtful if any other actor could render the emotional parts as well as does Mr. Bosworth. This character, "The Sea Wolf," is the dominant note of the story. In comparison with him the remainder of the cast sinks into insignificance. Try to imagine a man, rough and uncouth, a veritable beast at times, cruel to the last degree, a terrible bully and yet with all this a philosopher and student, and a constant reader of Browning and the Bible. Is such a type possible? Jack London made it so in his book and Bosworth does the same on the screen.

The action tells of the ship "Ghost," commanded by Wolf Larsen, and known as a "hell ship." Humphrey Van Weyden, a literatteur, is wrecked in the collision between two ferryboats, and after being in the water some time, is saved by the "Wolf" and put to work immediately as cabin-boy. Soon he learns to hate Larsen and hopes for relief. His troubles are numerous and supply much of the life of the picture.

After the death of the mate, "Humph," the former art critic, is put in his place. Through mutinies and disaster he helps his chief, until the girl, Maud Brewster, gets in the "Wolf's" clutches in the same manner as Humphrey. "Wolf" quickly learns to love her in his cruel way, and "Humph" has much difficulty in protecting her from insult. Finally, when the "Wolf" is in the throes of blindness, the malady which sometimes afflicts him, the two leave the ship, hoping to land in Japan, but are washed on a desert island.

Larsen, now sightless, is powerless to prevent his crew deserting and joining his brother, "Death" Larsen. The "Ghost," now deserted save for Wolf, is washed ashore on Endeavor Island. Humphrey and Maude repair the ship and sail away.

The last moments and death of Larsen are masterpieces of acting. The final scene shows Humphrey and Maude at home, where they are starting the writing of their book.

By far the strongest scene is the wreck in the San Francisco fog of the two boats. It is a dramatic wonder.

It is very probable that the production would not lose in strength if cut

SCENE FROM "THE SEA WOLF"

Spectacular Pictures His Long Suit

"Tom" Ince, of New York Motion Picture Corporation, Stands Preëminent in This Field

THIS is the era of the high-salaried producer of drama in motion picture form. This is only natural. At present the producer, or director, is to a production what a keystone is to an arch. Without him the structure would become a chance collection of disconnected units shaped by chance.

At the present the whole burden of production, in the average studio, rests upon the shoulders of the director. First, he is the scenario expert. Scenario departments fill their place, and it is an important one, but their province ends when that of the director begins, and when a director doesn't want to produce a script he very seldom does. Then he usually revises the script to suit himself, introduces his own style of "business" and eliminates or adds "stunts" until it is stamped with his own personality or way of doing things. Then he looks over the stage setting. That, too, comes in his precinct.

When the players come on ready to rehearse he is to constitute himself the "makeup" expert. He passes on not only details and suitability of dress, but also as to the use of the "makeup box," with proper regard for how the players will photograph and appear on the screen. Then, when the rehearsing begins, the director ofttimes plays over every part in the picture himself, possibly several times, that he may imbue his players with the spirit or motif which he wishes to have appear on the screen.

With a need for such versatility in a director, it is no wonder that the demand is for a very capable man. Hence it is the competent man—the man who has been all things to all pictures produced under his care—that has won a reputation for himself during the past few years.

Of a Theatrical Family

The time is coming when the director will only direct. The New York Motion Picture Company even now has a system whereby the director only directs. That is to say, he only supervises the dramatic work of the players. He enters the studio to find his sets all ready, his act players all made up, and his script fit to use. So all he has to do is to rehearse and take a scene. That is a director's idea of heaven.

From the ranks of the same firm, the New York Motion Picture Corporation, there has also risen one man who has lived a strenuous life as a director. He is Thomas H. Ince, scion of a well-known theatrical family, an actor from his boyhood days, who entered the motion picture business about three years ago and now enjoys a reputation as a producer of spectacular military and battle pictures which is absolutely second to none.

It was some three years ago that this man saw the possibilities of the motion picture art. He started as an actor, and in three weeks was made a director. Now he is famous in the industry.

In 1911 he joined Kessel and Baumann and the New York Motion Picture Corporation. Since then he has received a stock interest in several of the brands produced by that big concern. These interests, together with his salary, make his total income from his work as a director about $1,200 a week, or a yearly income of more than $62,000.

THOMAS H. INCE

"The Battle of Gettysburg" is perhaps his most famous single production. Making this single picture burnt up more than $20,000 worth of powder and gave employment for several weeks to armies of "supes" large enough to amply represent on the screen the great warring forces of the Blue and the Gray. In addition, he has had charge of all Kay-Bee, Broncho and Domino productions, and it is largely through him that these brands have achieved their reputation as spectacular productions.

So interesting a man and of such creative ability naturally has had an interesting career.

In the year of 1911 Mr. Ince joined the New York Motion Picture Corporation and immediately left for the coast to take charge of productions. After producing several single-reel Western productions at the Los Angeles studios of the company, Mr. Baumann entered into negotiations with Miller Bros., owners of the famous "101" Wild West Show, then wintering in Los Angeles, and wrested from several competitors a contract for the use of the entire "101" show for a series of spectacular Western films.

The feature productions that followed made Mr. Ince's name famous. His original lead has been followed by other companies, who immediately followed in his footsteps to make two-reel productions.

Mr. Ince's rise in the picture business from then on has been phenomenal. He made the original name of "Bison 101" famous throughout the world, and after the New York Motion Picture Corporation lost the title through litigation, Mr. Ince established the prestige of the Kay-Bee, Broncho and Domino trade-marks here and abroad. Mr. Ince is one of the associate owners of the New York Motion Picture Corporation, and holds the positions of vice-president, general Western manager and chief director.

His Fads and Hobbies Few

Personally, Mr. Ince is beloved by every member of the companies he directs. He is an indefatigable worker, and is on the go night and day. In other words, he is the main-spring in the watch of the New York Motion Picture Corporation.

Mr. Ince is perfectly familiar with every angle of the producing end of the business. In addition to his marvelous skill as a director, he is the photoplay dramatist par excellence, and without a rival in this difficult branch of the profession.

As to his fads and hobbies, they are very few. When opportunity offers, there is nothing that he likes better than to take his gun and go deer-hunting. Last season he bagged one of the biggest bucks taken in the Malibu Mountains with a clean score through the heart. The mounted head of the five-point deer now adorns his library. He also has one of the choicest collections of Indian wearing apparel, headdresses and bead-work to be found in America, and is constantly adding to this valuable collection.

Mr. Ince is still a comparatively young man, being on the sunny side of forty. He is married and the father of two lusty sons. Mr. Ince has two brothers, also in the picture business. Ralph has been with the Vitagraph Company for six years as leading man and director. John is one of the leading men with Lubin.

OH, IT'S AN INTERESTING LIFE!

Punctuated by George D. Proctor

LIFE in the motion picture business is kaleidoscopic. All the component parts of the spectacle are nicely straightened out when along comes an unseen hand and gives the whole thing a shake. Then the units rearrange themselves in a different pattern. For further information on the kaleidoscope part of it refer to Joe Farnham, "Alkali Ike" Carney, Hector Streychmans, Willie "Wishful" Hines, John B. Clymer, Larry Griffith, Herbert Brenon, State-rights buyers, actors and myself. As far as I am concerned, I like the way the world looks now the best of all.

There is nothing new nor novel in writing about Joe Farnham, the weightiest of those who have made changes during the week. Men and Arthur Leslie call him "Jolly Joe." That's all right as far as it goes, but if that sort of pet name were popular, men would some day call him "Brainy Joe," for he's a student of the business. Joe is now safely ensconced as right-hand man to Harry Raver, president of the All-Star Feature Corporation. Thus is a happy family reunited. For Joe quit "making the rounds" as an advertising man way back last Winter to decorate the front office of the defunct Film Supply Company of America. Now he is back again with his old playmates, right where he wants to be, right where they wanted him, so everybody is happy.

Which reminds me that the All-Star crew, which has been making "Soldiers of Fortune" in Cuba, is due back next week. The roster includes Richard Harding Davis, war correspondent and author of the book; Augustus Thomas, playwright and head producer; "Silent Bill" Haddock, whose return the new Screen Club awaits with shivers, aide-de-camp to Gus Thomas, and a picked lot of players. Harry Raver showed me some of the "still" pictures, and the only comment was "they're doing it right." It's not a bad little thing for the business, either, to have men like Thomas and Davis putting their gray matter into it. There's room for all, and may the best man be the most prosperous.

By the way, I hear rumors of a new concern to work along lines parallel to those of the Famous Players and the All-Star. Three firms won't overcrowd the field, for, after all, there's always room at the top, which being freely translated means, "Good pictures are always welcome."

With a Baedeker of Paris under his arm, Augustus Carney, the famous little "Alkali Ike" of Essanay pictures, dropped in sort of casually Wednesday. Carney has left his friends at the Niles, Cal., studio and is now en route for Europe, where he will spend a vacation of several months, with the accent on his old home in Ireland, for "Alkali Ike" first saw the light of day 'mid the lakes of Killarney.

Carney has no plans for the future, but he should worry. After three years in a little town, with no chance to be frivolous, he feels he is entitled to kick up his heels for a bit, and, on his return, will think about working again. He's a little bigger than the dolls that Don Meaney sent around to his friends, but not so much.

"ALKALI IKE"
In a "biled shirt" and string tie.

During his brief stay, "Alkali Ike" said a few of those things that I am always glad to hear.

"Exhibitors do read and exhibitors do think," he said. "I met a lot of them last year when I was appearing at picture theatres, and on the whole I think that, around Chicago, anyway, they have the uplift idea. The folks that think the operator in the booth is the only person to see the motion picture publications are mistaken. The exhibitor reads every editorial and every review he can get hold of. Of course, he judges a picture by the way his own patrons receive it, but he is anxious to learn all he can about the business and get all the different attitudes on it."

President Neff's censor board has struck a very concrete snag out in Ohio. The Mutual people at first opposed the dull weight of inertia to the censor idea. They simply failed to show their pictures. Now they have gone farther and obtained a Federal injunction freeing them from the censors' action. This will be water-tight till December 6th, anyway. At that time it comes up for argument.

Censorship long has been a vexing question. President Neff proposed to stage a conference of manufacturers a while ago to discuss the subject. Only two showed up and they were only there to look around.

I asked one of them "why weren't more there?" "The manufacturers aren't taking any interest yet," he said, "because they haven't been affected." That was before the Ohio bunch got going.

Now, when state censorship starts the Mutual runs to Uncle Sam.

Without taking any sides, it is evident that the start has been made in a series of events which will settle the legal status of the first official censor board.

Every picture has its buyer. Sort of Napoleonic that. Like "every bullet has its billet." Whether at eight cents a foot or ten cents a foot, the buyer is always found. That is, right now. Six months from now things will be different, judging by the way the barometer is jumping. Remember that there are only about twenty-five live State-rights buyers, and most of these are either tied up with standing orders with firms who can deliver the goods, or are tying up. Harry Raver, who has been marketing films and doping out the situation for, lo, these many moons, says that six months from now the man with only one feature to sell will be in an unenviable position. As Kipling used to say, "That's another story." It's a long if not sad story. More about it later. Lots more.

Dignity doesn't buy any shoes, but it's an asset which many have been trying to apply more and more to the motion picture business. Then along comes an advertisement with the word "movies" spread all over it. Oh, well.

Whether it has dignity or not, the business is here to stay. Mottoes are bad things. One is supposed to stick to them through thick and thin, and they don't apply when the hundredth turn comes along. But one motto is "Down with the person who says 'the motion picture business is only in its infancy,' or 'the surface has only been scratched.'" Ernest Shipman has it right. He says that when he had a lot of shows on the road the mention of the fact in theatrical circles brought a stifled yawn. Now when he tells his old cronies he's in the motion picture business, they prick up their ears and want to be declared in.

The theatrical end of our local main street pricked up its ears when the Bosworth seven-reel production of Jack London's "Sea Wolf" was shown at the Winter Garden. At least four hundred were on the job, including Mr. Shubert. They were mostly theatrical folk, all eager to pick up a little knowledge of the motion picture business. But that can't be acquired in a morning, as many have learned to their discomfort.

George Terwilliger, who can doctor up a sick script and make it presentable, has quit the Lubin scenario department for the directing end of the business. His next effort is a three-reel subject, which will be released on the exclusive program of the General Film Company early in November. That sets the seal of approval on his work before I had a chance, but I was going to do it, anyway.

William W. Hines, publicity man for Noah in his famous voyage and for many other things since then, is now guarding Albert Blinkhorn's outer office and caring for his publicity and advertising in his inimitable way.

King Baggot, King by name and king by nature and in the hearts of his friends, with the laurels of his European trip fresh on his brow, is going after more. I caught him over in Eleventh Avenue a few days ago playing a "wop" in "The Return of Tony." Leave it to King to make a good picture; even his director, George Loane Tucker, one of the best, by the way, has sailed for dear old London to join Harold M. Shaw and his London Film Company.

Working by King's side was Charles Eldredge, well remembered for his work in Vitagraph pictures.

When it comes to actors, don't overlook my alter ego, Harris Gordon. After playing with Reliance and Eclair, he was snapped up by the Famous Players a few days ago and left for Boston to take some scenes. Gordon put over a juvenile lead in an Eclair production, "Over the Cliffs," recently. This is the picture in which Will Sheerer does a head-stand off an eighty-foot cliff, or something like that, take it from Bert Ennis.

Carl Laemmle was again reminded a few days ago of what the bunch at the Universal studio at Los Angeles thinks of him. He received as a present a stuffed lion cub. The little rascal, about two or three days old, has a head three sizes too big for the body, but blame nature for that.

Jeff Dolan, the famous demi-tasse, is much exercised over the report that he is going to leave the North American Film Corporation. He says he is going to stay right under the wing of Bill Steiner, and doesn't know where the report started. Well, no more do I.

More glory for "Little Mary" Pickford and King Baggot. A. Coleman, chairman of the ball committee of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' Association of Greater New York, says they will lead the grand march at the annual affair at Terrace Garden on Monday evening, December 15th.

Earl Metcalfe, of Lubinville, is one of our best little week-enders. Every Sunday finds him in the Screen Club for a brief visit.

Watterson R. Rothacker, the young and handsome head of the Industrial Moving Picture Company, of Chicago, is making one of his month-end visits to New York.

It gives one sincere pleasure to note steady and consistent improvement and growing recognition for a screen player. This goes for Jane Gail, formerly of Lubin, with Imp for several months, one of the few actresses in motion pictures who has real brains and uses them. She has a great emotional lead coming in "Who Killed Olga Carew?" a sort of a Craig Kennedy scientific mystery story.

I caught Darwin Karr, late leading man of Solax, hard at work at the Vitagraph studio. He was working in the coming feature production of "Mr. Barnes of New York," which should be considerable of a picture. The cast includes Karr, Maurice Costello, Clara Kimball Young and lot more good ones.

Got word from the new Tampa Film Company, down in Tampa, Fla., on the roster of which is Frank Beal, director; Ed Carewe, leading man, and Jack Byrne, scenario expert. Jack Byrne says, "Our first picture, 'The Diamond Smugglers,' is finished, and the second is on the way. This town and surrounding country is well adapted for picture-making of the superior sort, although it has some disadvantages in the way of starving insects and other reptilian gastronomes, which fairly revel in the rich flavor of Northern blood." Now, isn't that just like a script-writer?

Add to the list of "sailed for England," G. Blake Garrison, president of Midgar Features. He is now bound for the other side on the Olympic. He will visit London, Paris, Hamburg and Berlin. Home again in December is the program, with a bunch of good stuff under his arm.

One interesting little war on our local main street is that between the two versions of "The Last Days of Pompeii." The Kleine-Ambrosio version has now camped right across the street, at the Bijou, from Wallack's, where the Pasquali version is playing. Don't make any mistake, though. Both sides tell me that they have been helped by the other. Which proves again that there is plenty of room for all.

Pilot threatens to get back into the game. James Gordon, former Edison actor and producer and Famous Player actor, is putting on his second feature, "Hoodman Blind," out there in Yonkers. Bert Angeles has been producing films there, too, so all the signs of future activity are in working order.

William Robert Daly, the well-loved Universal director, is glad his leading woman, Fritzi Brunette, is alive. She was taxi-ing down to the studio in a hurry a few days ago when the machine did a headstand down a cellar, after crashing through an iron railing. Fritzi injured her side, but now she's as well as ever.

Hector Streychmans, who has rivaled Stanley Twist as a jack of all trades and master of most in the film business, is now entrenched behind the publicity and advertising desk of Harry Raver's Itala Company. There's Harry Raver again, did you say? John Clymer, who has been splitting his time up between Itala and the Exclusive Supply Corporation, found, a few days ago, that the growth of the Exclusive made that concern take up more and more of his time. No man can serve two masters, so he chose Exclusive. Now Streychmans has added another square to the checkerboard of his life. He has been very busy since he escaped from Chicago, and kind hands have turned the kaleidoscope often for him. A few weeks ago he was the big noise, those words are used advisedly, at the offices of the Pasquali-American. Then I heard of him acting as steerer with the Pilot Company. Now he is back downtown in the heart of things.

FOR THOSE WHO WORRY O'ER PLOTS AND PLAYS

William Lord Wright

The Unusual Thing

THE usual thing in photoplays is to be avoided and the unusual thing is devoutly to be wished. The usual thing usually reads well in script; it seems to stand for a whole lot. The usual thing has much technic and an ancient idea; the unusual thing sometimes appears quite "skimpy" in script, but cleverly develops the unusual idea. The copy of the successful fiction-writer frequently does not "stand up well" in manuscript, and the same rule is applicable to other forms of literary endeavor. But the skilled writer's stuff that does not make the immense hit in script, frequently proves mighty successful in cold type or on the screen. Edison's "One Hundred-Dollar Elopement" is a case in point. In script form the plot would appear very transparent to the inexperienced editor, but the story struck Edison's readers and producers right between the eyes. It contained the unusual thing. The story is not so impressive. A giddy maiden is placed by her father in a girls' seminary. A worthless young man starts a flirtation with her. The head of the seminary discovers the elopement plans. She notifies the girl's father. He hands the young man $100 to sign a paper giving up the girl, and then he takes the young man's place and meets his daughter and returns her to school. It is the character work and the fine shadings in the action that make this story the unusual thing. Several notes figure in the action. But one is flashed, the rest are put over by suggestion and are plainly understood. The text of a note flashed on the screen about every one hundred feet detracts from the atmosphere. Edison producers understand this fact. The first letter sent to the girl is read, but its text is not flashed at all. Every-day sort of people are shown in action and they perform every-day sort of business without the aid of firearms, ball-rooms, death-bed scenes or automobile chases. The unusual thing comes right along to the end of the picture. The father and the preceptress of the seminary are mutually attracted. In the last scene the girl whispers to her father and looks at the preceptress. The father smiles bashfully. This is all. However, suggestion was skillfully put over; everybody understood what was sure to happen sooner or later; and the ending played upon the imagination of the spectators in a psychological way. The picture was the most popular in the evening's program of four playlets. It is a good example of the quiet, convincing story of every-day life, and it took the audience into the confidence and spirit of the play. It is the kind of story that would-be photoplaywrights should study.

The Needs of Eclair

Mrs. F. Marion Brandon, versatile editor of the Eclair Film Co., writes the following interesting communication: "The Eclair is very decidedly in the market for free-lance work, but it discourages correspondence school 'students' and unknown authors from submitting their scripts, as the Eclair standard is of the highest, and it has seldom, if ever, been able to use scripts other than those by already established photoplay-writers. I shall be glad to receive split-reel comedies of the first order. Also two and three-reel scripts of unusual dramatic value. We wish no Mexican, Western nor mining scripts. We might consider one and two-reel comedies occasionally. Only the work of recognized authors, as I said before, is desired. Scripts are to be type-written and stamps covering their return are to be enclosed. I think two-reel scripts will become the unit in photoplay releases. One can't do justice to a strong story in less than two reels. The exhibitors are not keen for three-reel stories ordinarily. The theatrical magnates are now plowing into the photoplay field with gigantic productions like 'Quo Vadis,' 'Arizona' and 'Tess of the d'Urbervilles.' I think the public will find its happiest medium of enjoyment in the two-reel films, while split-reels and one-reels will simply be used as 'fillers.' To get back to the discussion of Eclair's wants, I might say that we pay market prices for a script submitted where the action is worked out in such a way that we can turn it over to a director without the expense of revision. When, however, only his idea is acceptable to us, we make the author an offer for it which he can accept or not—as he pleases. As to crediting the authors of photoplays on screens and posters, I am strongly in favor of this movement. There seems to me to be no reason for the authors remaining in obscurity, since every other form of literary and dramatic work gives him full meed of recognition. I really think it makes for better results, since a man who knows his work will be tagged with his name is more apt to exert himself conscientiously."

We are glad to note that Eclair joins the leaders favoring credit for authors. We do not incline to the argument of some writers that film and poster credit will banish plagiarism, but we believe it will have a tendency to check it. If credit on both poster and film is granted deserving writers it will do away with the habit of some few exhibitors of falsely advertising themselves or their friends as authors of photoplays that are shown. This action has occurred in a number of instances. It does the real author an injustice, and gains money and reputation for others by false pretenses. Perhaps it is because so many correspondence school scripts are descending upon the defenseless heads of Eclair readers that the bars have been put up against the unknown author. Now, we have a warm spot in our heart for the beginner in the field. We do not wish to see him the victim of discrimination. Every writer was unknown at some day and date. Booth Tarkington was strictly unknown when he submitted the manuscript of "The Gentleman from Indiana" to McClure's Magazine years ago. We remember to this day the announcement by McClure's that "We believe we have discovered another unknown writer who is a master of plot and action." The work of every unknown writer should be carefully read and considered. Frequently a veritable nugget of gold is uncovered.

Photoplay Titles

Titles for photoplays are important. Titles have shown great improvement during the past six months, but there is room for further betterment. Avoid the long title. "The Adventures of Mortimer Fitzgerald" may sound good for a Bertha M. Clay yarn, but is not apropos for a film playlet. Try and conceive a striking title, an all-embracing title, a title that is catchy and yet tells something. Any old title will not do. Titles require thought and study. Endeavor to name your play so excellently well that the editor will not change it.

Market Growing

"There ought to be markets for all kinds of scripts for a new film concern is being launched every minute," writes in a New York author. And our best advice to the writers is to stick to the well-known and proven companies. Avoid the "wildcat" companies. Some are all right and some are not.

The Pen as a Livelihood

Making a living by means of the pen is frequently hazardous. Do not cut loose from your regular occupation, if you have one, until you are very very certain that your literary output commands a regular market. With a fanfare of trumpets a photoplaywright broke into the script game a year ago. He sold his first six scripts right off the reel. He clerked in a jewelry store. Confident that it was "easy" he resigned as clerk. That was a year ago. Since his resignation he has sold just one script. He has no job. He had better nursed the job. Even the stars among the "free lances" have other occupations to add to their incime. Of course, if you can write novels and special articles and short stories, along with your photoplays, you can keep the wolf from the door. However, depending upon photoplays alone as a means of buying coal for the family is precarious. We recently received a letter from Marc E. Jones admitting that our antagonistic attitude toward "photoplaywrights' associations" and "mutual benefit societies" was correct. It took Jones some time to see it, but he says he has seen the light and retired from "association" business. Maybe the above opinion on living by writing will reassure him of our attitude on that subject also.

A Line from Hobart

C. D. Hobart, a Florida photoplaywright, writes as follows: "I really think it is about time you heard from me, for it is such men as yourself, Mr. Sargent, Mr. Hoagland, Mr. Leeds, and all too few others that the army of beginners owe thanks, a mighty poor compensation for the good work you have done, are doing, and will continue to do. Here it was that I decided to take a 'whack' at writing a picture story. Please note that I don't dare assume to call my primary attempt a photoplay; in fact, it is a shame to call it anything but 'a mortification of crudeness.'

"An operator friend introduced me to The Motion Picture News, and I read every little thing that I could about the photoplay, writing all the while. Following the first, the comedy (?) came a serious problem (?) story. The fifth attempt, a detective drama, was accepted and the editor asks for more 'American detective stories novel in plot and full of action.' Some of the things I do in preparing a manuscript may be of interest to others in the game, and I take the liberty of mentioning a few of them.

"I never write with pen or pencil except to correct. I write the scenario first, working my characters naturally from one scene to another. When the scenario is complete, then I write the synopsis. The original or first copy, I double-space; this makes room for corrections and filling in between the lines. Every manuscript sent out is listed in a little book which I keep for this purpose. Each company is given a double page. On the left-hand page I put down the name of the photoplay and the date submitted. On the right-hand page I put down the date of its return, unless it happens to be accepted; then after the words "accepted," I state the price received.

"At last, but far from least, one of my best friends is Noah Webster's masterpiece, 'The Dictionary.' You have my heartiest support in your fight to protect beginners from correspondence schools."

Mr. Hobart's letter contains much of benefit to beginners and we recommend his system of working.

Here Is the Latest

The latest "come-on" literature is from a "literary society" in Washington, D. C. We quote some paragraphs of the circular letter being sent out: "Simultaneous with the unprecedented demand for moving picture scenarios that swept the country there arose a number of so-called experts that prey upon earnest authors by charging exorbitant prices for absolutely worthless criticism. . . . Our special critic has been writing many years. . . . One dollar for every scenario," etc., etc. Don't "fall" for this latest scheme. "Societies" can be of no benefit to photoplaywrights.

Credit Where Credit Is Due

We are pleased to notice that Mr. Arthur Leeds, editor of the Photoplay Author, is also inclined to follow suit and favor credit to writers on screen and poster. Leeds has been glancing through the leaves of an old notebook and finds this written long ago but applicable to-day in some instances:

"The sooner the manufacturers see the advisability of placing the author's name on all film titles when the technique and dramatic value of the scenario submitted justifies it at all, the sooner will the desired plots begin coming into them. Three years after the foregoing was written, we find that a few of the film companies have adopted the policy of giving the author his due on the film. It is probably only a question of time before they will all do so."

We repeat, not only should the deserving author (deserving, mind you) be credited on the screen, but his name as author should appear on posters. The Dramatic Mirror recently printed some sprightly repartee between two playwrights as to which of the collaborators should be named first position on billing. One playwright even cabled his arguments from Europe. Universal is to be commended for starting poster credit for authors. We hope that all other enterprising companies will follow this example.

SCENE FROM "MADONNA OF THE SLUMS," 101 BISON 2-REEL DRAMA

THE HALL OF FAME

Recently we guessed whom the Answers Editor of the Motion Picture Story Magazine might be. Editor Brewster informs us that our guess that appeared here was wrong. We guess no more.

Captain Peacocke and "Pop" Hoadley, both of the Universal staff, are collaborating on some comedies and dramas. Bet they are away above the average.

Harold McGrath, noted novelist, threatens to write photoplays for Selig. He may write a series of stories under the general caption of The Adventures of Kathlyn. There will be no question about his name appearing on film and poster.

Henry W. Mattoni, actor and dark-room critic, has been putting over some thespian stunts recently and his many friends will readily recognize his good acting in certain Famous Players films.

It is rumored that Director George L. Tucker will go with the London Film Co. It is said his first picture will be with Sir Herbert Beerbohm Tree in the cast. Tucker, be it recalled, gained his start as a script writer and deserves all the good things he receives.

Walter MacNamara, Universal, is a versatile chap and is adding to his sources of income by writing tabloid musical reviews. He is making a hit with the work. Mrs. MacNamara, known in the theatrical world as Annie Purcell, was for eight years prima donna at Gayety theatre, London, England.

PERTINENT POINTERS

Write photoplays in the present tense.

Manuscript covers save the script but add to postal expense.

Do not send scripts to editors with a request for criticism.

Script editors are complaining that even the experienced writers are neglecting to enclose return postage with scripts.

A good leader or sub-title is a work of art. Endeavor to have them blend as much as possible with story atmosphere. Sub-titles can be condensed and strengthened by painstaking revision.

Many envelopes enclosed with scripts sent to the studios are not large enough to accommodate the scripts when a rejection is deemed necessary. This action is pure carelessness.

The address of Editor Hopp Hadley, Reliance Company, is now 537 Riverside Avenue, Yonkers, N. Y. Scripts for Reliance should be sent there.

James Dayton is Pacific Coast editor for Universal. Western address is Universal Studios, Hollywood, Cal. He has given much encouragement to "outside" writers.

An editor writes that in his opinion there is going to be a great demand in the near future for four-reel subjects and writers with strong plots, that will bear being enlarged upon, will do well to work them out to the required length.

When one scene dissolves into another it is termed a fade. However, this fade and trick stuff frequently mitigates the sale of a story. Trick effects mean a lot of work. Visions are also annoying to handle and the writers who persist in submitting the "dream stuff" soon become unpopular in many studios. Effects will never save a weak idea or pull up the necessary threads of a story that should have been woven in at the beginning of the plot.

The plot is the foundation of the story. Without an original and unusual idea all the technique in the world will not sell your work. You must learn to evolve an original and logical plot before you can hope to succeed. Practice makes perfect.

Keep your scripts on the jump. We have abandoned our "morgue." Of course many a rejected story will bear revision but revise and keep it on its travels. You may have a good plot and if it is permitted to lay in the "morgue" too long the other fellow may think it up and beat you to market.

Many seem confused by the cut-back. When not overdone it is a detail that increases suspense by the art of strong contrast. A flash back to some action frequently tends to intensify and hold up the plot. The number of cut-backs in a story cannot be determined. It all depends on the story. Biograph is particularly strong on the cut-back and many pictures released by that company show them. Properly used they stand for realism and the art of suspense. John is about to take poison believing he has lost the packet of money with which he was intrusted. He pulls the cork from the vial and a flash back shows the money found and the messenger speeding to John.

Now a Director

George Terwilliger, formerly of the Lubin Manufacturing Company editorial staff, is now directing pictures for that concern. That George will make good goes without saying, as he is an exceptionally bright fellow.

Use Simple Names

When writing a cast of characters for a photoplay script use simple names. Jack, John and Ned are better than the Laura Jean Libbey style of cognoman. Also it makes matters easier for the producer, and the publicity man is frequently grateful.

BIOGRAPHICAL SKETCH OF ALEC B. FRANCIS

The principal of this little biographical sketch, Mr. Alec B. Francis, possesses without doubt one of the most likable and pleasing screen personalities of any artist engaged in the work of motion pictures to-day.

Finely proportioned physically, with a handsome face and most charming manner, Francis is at his best when playing the leading role in society and domestic dramas. His ability as an artist is unquestioned, as he has to his credit a long period of work in legitimate, comic opera and vaudeville, both on this side of the water and in England—the latter place being his home.

He was a huge favorite over there in leading productions for years, and it was indeed a fortunate stroke for the exhibitor and photoplay patrons that he abandoned his first love for the silent drama, as his personality and clever work have endeared him to countless thousands throughout the United States and Canada, who nightly watch anxiously for the appearance of their favorite star in an American Eclair production.

With the versatility of the true artist, Mr. Francis is equally at home in drama and comedy, and has done some exceptionally laughable characters of the light comedy type for the Eclair Company, although his forte is straight dramatic roles.

He is happily married, takes great interest and pride in his home, which is a beautiful cottage situated near the Fort Lee studios of the Eclair Company, and his chief diversions are the purchasing of clothes of the latest mode and the running of his trim roadster, with which he travels the hills and beautiful country roads of Fort Lee daily, going to and from his work.

His admirers and friends are numberless, as he possesses a most lovable disposition, and is always the man, both off and on the screen.

NICHOLAS POWER EXHIBIT AT THE ELECTRICAL SHOW

To the mind of the writer, after careful investigation, it seems a bit of bad business on the part of the manufacturers of motion picture sundries not to advertise in a more progressive manner than they do. When such a splendid chance as the electrical show offered itself, only one of the many companies bought space. Nicholas Power, with commendable forethought, put in a five-machine exhibit, and electrical experts from the world over, who have come to the city for the sole purpose of seeing the show, saw Mr. Power's production and marveled thereat, some of them being so good as to leave an order. One man in particular (name on application), who was opening a theatre in New York, had two machines. They were old ones, and when he saw the Power's exhibit he had them replace two of their new machines for his two old ones. That's business ability! The sales department has reason to be jubilant over the success of the experiment.

David Munstuk, active head of the M. & F. Feature Film Co., of Chicago, has contracted for the entire output of the Film Releases of America for Northern Illinois, operative with "The Voice of the Wild."

Adventures of a Camera Man with the Greek Army

(From the Bioscope)

MR. ROBERT, the well-known cinematographer, has just returned to Paris after having been with the Greek Army during the last part of the Balkan War. He has brought back with him 6,000 feet of battle pictures and war scenes, which, he claims, are absolutely unique. Amongst them is a graphic picture of the battle of Dshumaja. Every foot of film depicts the horror of modern warfare, and the havoc of bullets and shrapnel.

Mr. Robert, in taking the pictures, selected his subjects expressly with the object of getting in motion pictures a sermon against war. He himself admits that he is satisfied on that point. "If these pictures," he said, "do not have the effect of turning everyone who sees them against war, then I fear nothing ever will." Mr. Robert, as might be expected, has an exciting narrative to tell. From the time he left Salonika his hardships were uninterrupted.

He speaks in high praise of the bravery and kindness of the Greek soldiers, as against the diabolical brutality of the Bulgars. He came across, in the Red Cross camp, two girls —Irish and English—who were the only women in the camp. For ten months they had been gallantly working with the ambulance corps.

All the time he was with the army he never handled a firearm, and the only "weapon" he carried was a tiny silver knife, scarcely more than an inch long. The 3,000 francs he had in a purse sewed to his shirt were useless, but he could have obtained anything there was to be had in exchange for tobacco and cigarettes.

Reflecting on his adventures, Mr. Robert likens his stay in Macedonia to a weird nightmare, so strange did it seem to be in the midst of all the fighting and carnage. Much worse than the bullets and shrapnel was cholera. Worse than the scenes in the firing line was the grief of the bereaved ones at home. Many are the tales Mr. Robert has to tell of the heartrending episodes he witnessed in the towns.

I was enthralled as he read to me notes from his diary. It was on receipt of a telegram from the King of Greece that Mr. Robert left Paris for Salonika, taking with him a camera and 8,000 metres of negative. When he got to Salonika he found that the King had left for the front. He obtained the necessary papers, which included a document authorizing officers to aid him and allow him to do whatever and go wherever he liked. He and his companion were given a first-class compartment in a train bound for Demir Hissar. "The cushions of the carriage," said Mr. Robert, "were steeped in blood from the wounded that had been brought back. It was, however, impossible to find accommodations elsewhere, so we had to put up with it."

This was a grim foretaste of what Mr. Robert was about to see in the near future. The train proceeded at the rate of about three miles an hour. On each side of the track was a huge expanse of desolate, uncultivated land. On the rugged ground were strewn arms, cartridges, and the tattered remnants of uniforms. The journey took eleven hours instead of three. At Demir Hissar, Mr. Robert and his assistant were fortunate enough to come across a military motor van, in which to travel to Libounovo, headquarters of the Greek Army.

"The ordeal of that ride," said Mr. Robert, "was inconceivable; over great boulders, bumping from side to side, we rushed on. We were hurled to and fro, and many a time the cinematographic apparatus pitched on top of us. Not one of the motor fleet could stand more than a day's work; after that time the machines were in the repairing shops for five days or so."

The next morning Mr. Robert received permission from the King to proceed to the firing line. He went forward in an automobile with Dr. Anastasopoulos, who was in charge of the medical arrangements. After driving for about forty-six miles they were obliged to turn back. All the bridges had been blown up by the retreating Bulgarians, and the only road through the Struma Valley was choked with a seething mass of men, the advancing and retreating armies.

"It was a sight," exclaimed Mr. Robert, "that I shall never forget. Picture the narrow valley, the river, the road, and the mountains on each side; thousands of men were pressing forward to fight, and thousands struggling back wounded and dying."

Next morning the cinematographers made another attempt to get to the scene of action. They decided to accompany a battery of artillery which was going to the front. The new automobile, however, was so small that Mr. Robert had to decide whether he would leave his camera or himself behind. He decided to leave himself. Mr. Robert rode for eight hours. He had had nothing but a cup of tea, and had not been on horseback for twenty years, so that his suffering may well be imagined.

At Simitli he left for the frontier, accompanying the first division, under the command of General Manousojanakis. "The sounds of the cannon," he said, "grew louder and louder as we pushed forward, and as the Struma Valley was neared, shells exploded in all directions. It was war. Frankly, I admit that for the first hour under this hail of bullets I experienced fear. My whole body cringed for a time, but the sickening sensation soon wore off, and I witnessed the most horrible and revolting sights with utter indifference, possibly because I was so intent upon turning the handle.

"Shells exploded within 50, 80, and 100 yards of us, shrapnel whizzed whistling through the air, and men were dying everywhere. The heat was terrific. Then, by sheer luck, I cinematographed a shell exploding and falling amongst a Greek battery, killing six men and injuring thirteen. You can imagine how nearly impossible it was," exclaimed Mr. Robert, "to film these bursting shells when they were falling in all directions. I just had to point my camera in the air at random, hoping for the best."

One day a spy was brought into the camp, and, seeing Mr. Robert's apparatus, he instantly folded his arms and fell on his knees, thinking that he was about to be shot by a new type of gun.

When a truce was declared, the Greeks sent two officers to the enemy's camp to decide upon a neutral ground. As the canopy was returning, Mr. Robert saw the Bulgarians fire nine shells in succession on the riders bearing the white flag.

In the film you are shown the cavalry charging, the men rushing along, and the officers on horseback exposing themselves to the open fire. In a flash the fearfulness of war is brought home to the spectator. One impressive scene shows the soldiers before going to battle kissing a picture of the Holy Virgin held in the hand of an old priest. From beginning to end this true motion picture story grips. It is reality, and grim reality, all through.

MOTION PICTURES WANTED FOR EGYPT

Yannopoulos Cassaris & Co., B. P. 1220, Alexandria, Egypt, write to the Manufacturers' Record as follows:

"We take the liberty of asking you to give names of firms making 'cinematigraphe' films. We would like to come in contact only with those of the very highest standing. If satisfactory arrangements can be made we are in a position to do a very good business, for we have a large clientele throughout the Orient and in Greece."

Motion Picture Theatre Construction Department

Suggestions Invited, Questions Cheerfully Answered

Address: Construction Department, The Motion Picture News

ILLUSTRATIONS No. 1 and No. 2 show the exterior and interior of the theatre recently erected in Newark, N. J., called the "Playhouse," by Architect Nathan Myers, with offices in the Woolworth Building, New York and Cort Theatre Building of Newark, N. J.

This theatre seats 750 and occupies a lot 50 feet by 100 feet. There is a small stage with dressing rooms and alleys as required by the local Department of Buildings. The building is fireproof in its entire construction. To gain width of house, a wall construction of only a total thickness of six inches was used. Trusses span the auditorium, giving an air space, and form a large duct to roof ventilators, making a satisfactory natural system of ventilation. The trusses are carried on steel columns. The boiler and coal rooms are located under the sidewalk. The color scheme has cream and silver predominating and the indirect lighting system is provided.

The facade is odd yet attractive, and denotes that the "Playhouse" is not a common, every-day theatre. The facade is laid up in tapestry brick, the general design tending toward Spanish Renaissance.

The new uptown New York theatres are safe and are models for the future. There can be no danger of any disaster, unless the spectators insist on remaining seated, and even in this case they would suffer no harm as there is practically nothing to burn.

With all the new methods of building with steel and concrete and discarding wood and other such inflammable materials, it seems ridiculous that the law should ask for so many exits and alleys. While the legislators seem to wander once in a while on the question of "safe theatres," we cannot blame them, as experience has taught us that, in case of fire, most of the victims are not burned but tramped to death by an uncontrollable panic.

I have visited a number of new uptown theatres. Some of them, as can be seen by the accompanying illustrations, are in course of construction, and as the owners have been kind enough to show me everything and even to supply me with certain figures, I have been able to draw the plans shown on page 30.

The first illustration on the top of the page shows the side exterior of the new "Empress" theatre on 181st street and Audubon avenue, and the floor plan.

The auditorium is about 50 x 95, with 650 seats. While it is to be known as a motion picture house, a small stage is provided in front of the curtain, for either singers or a dancing act.

The theatre is surrounded on the west, south and north by ten-foot alleys, and on the east by Audubon avenue. Two wide exit doors open on the southern alley, while three exit doors open on the northern alley, with four other exit doors (two of them under the operating booth) open on Audubon avenue; in all nine exit doors.

The main entrance to the theatre is on 181st street, through a two-story office and store building. The lobby and foyer are wide and finished in marble.

One special feature of the "Empress" theatre is in the construction of the roof, in which are two large skylights provided with a number of iron shutters. All these shutters are rigged on a single rope and by a single operation the roof can be partly opened for the hot summer evenings, or closed in case of a storm.

The owner, in looking over the last copy of The Motion Picture News, was pleased to read the notice given to the Kathodian Bronze Company, as he was looking for such ornaments.

The "Empress" theatre was to open on October 1st, but on account of delays the opening will not take place before November 1st.

EXTERIOR, THE "PLAYHOUSE," NEWARK, N. J.

The second illustration on the page shows the exterior of the new "Heights" theatre on Wadsworth avenue, corner of 181st street, and floor plan.

The "Heights" theatre is devoted to high-class motion pictures exclusively. They are projected on a gold fibre screen and are accompanied by one of the Wurlitzer Unit orchestras. The auditorium is lighted with the indirect lighting system and no side lights on the walls to shine in the eyes of the audience. Six hundred of the most comfortable seats, carpets in the aisles, brass railings, etc., complete the arrangements of the auditorium. The "Heights" is an up-to-date theatre, with none of the old fads of white gingerbread decorations; of a ticket office in the center of the lobby; of an abuse of posters, etc. Mr. W. A. Landau and Mr. S. G. Bock, his partner, have what can be called, without contradiction, the refined photoplay house of the neighborhood.

There is not a stick of wood in the whole place; it is all steel, brick, concrete and marble.

The auditorium proper is 45 x 115 with a ten-foot lobby and the ticket office on the side. On both sides of the auditorium are six-foot alleys. On the south side four exit doors open on the alley, on the north side we find also four exit doors opening on the alley, with the last one, the one near the stage, connecting to a covered passage leading to 181st street. Beside these eight exit doors, we have the doors leading to the lobby.

As can be seen by the diagram, there can be no casualty, as in case of fire the whole audience could walk out in less than a couple of minutes without any pushing.

While the facade is free of gingerbread decorations, it is imposing in its simplicity, and attractive.

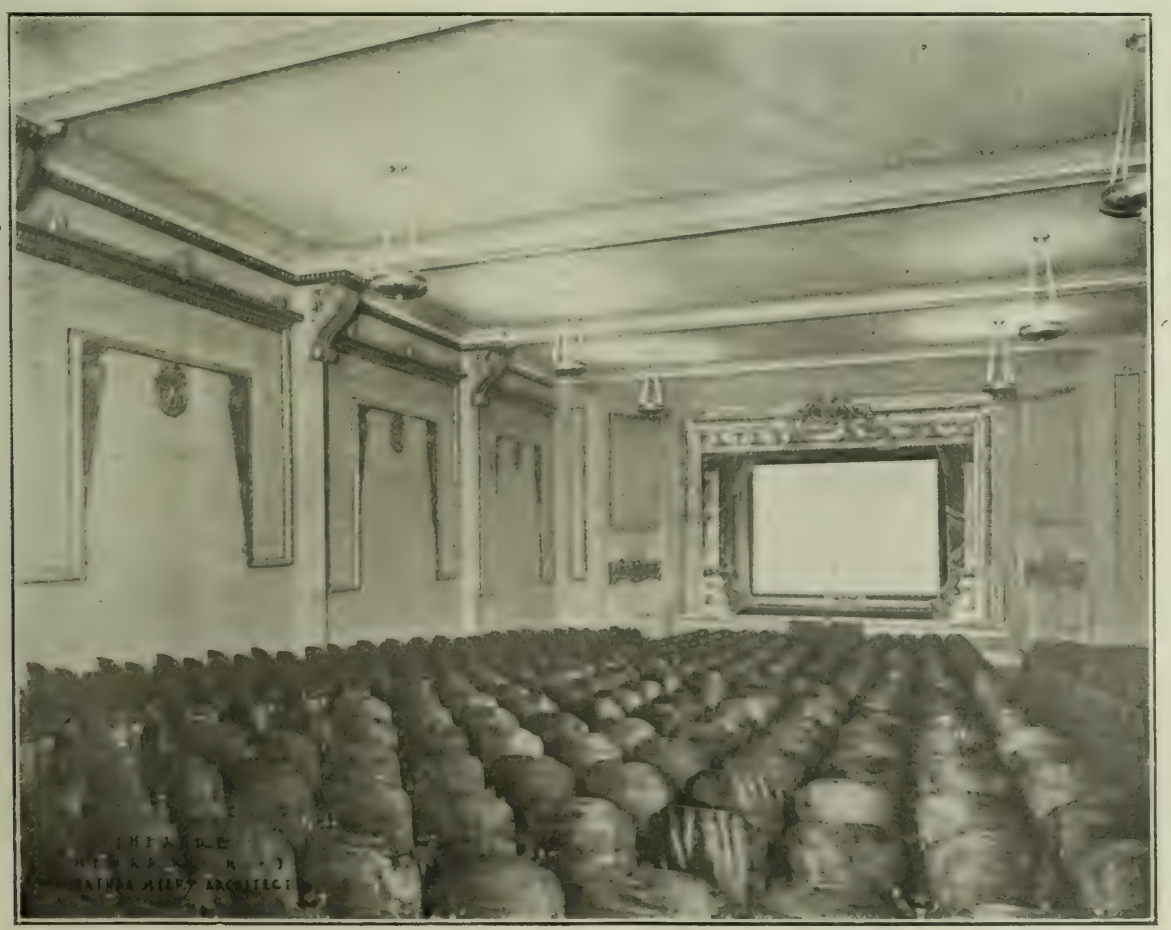
The third illustration on the page shows the floor plan of a new motion picture theatre in course of construction on Amsterdam avenue, corner of 177th street. While it will be a smaller house, it has a special feature, the one of combining a closed theatre for the Winter months with an open auditorium for the Summer. The owner has divided his lot into two theatres, yet from the outside it will appear as one building. The corner lot is to be the covered auditorium, while the lot on the north side will be the open space. The airdome is not to be fenced with boards, but enclosed in a brick wall.

In this construction most of the exit doors are through the airdome.

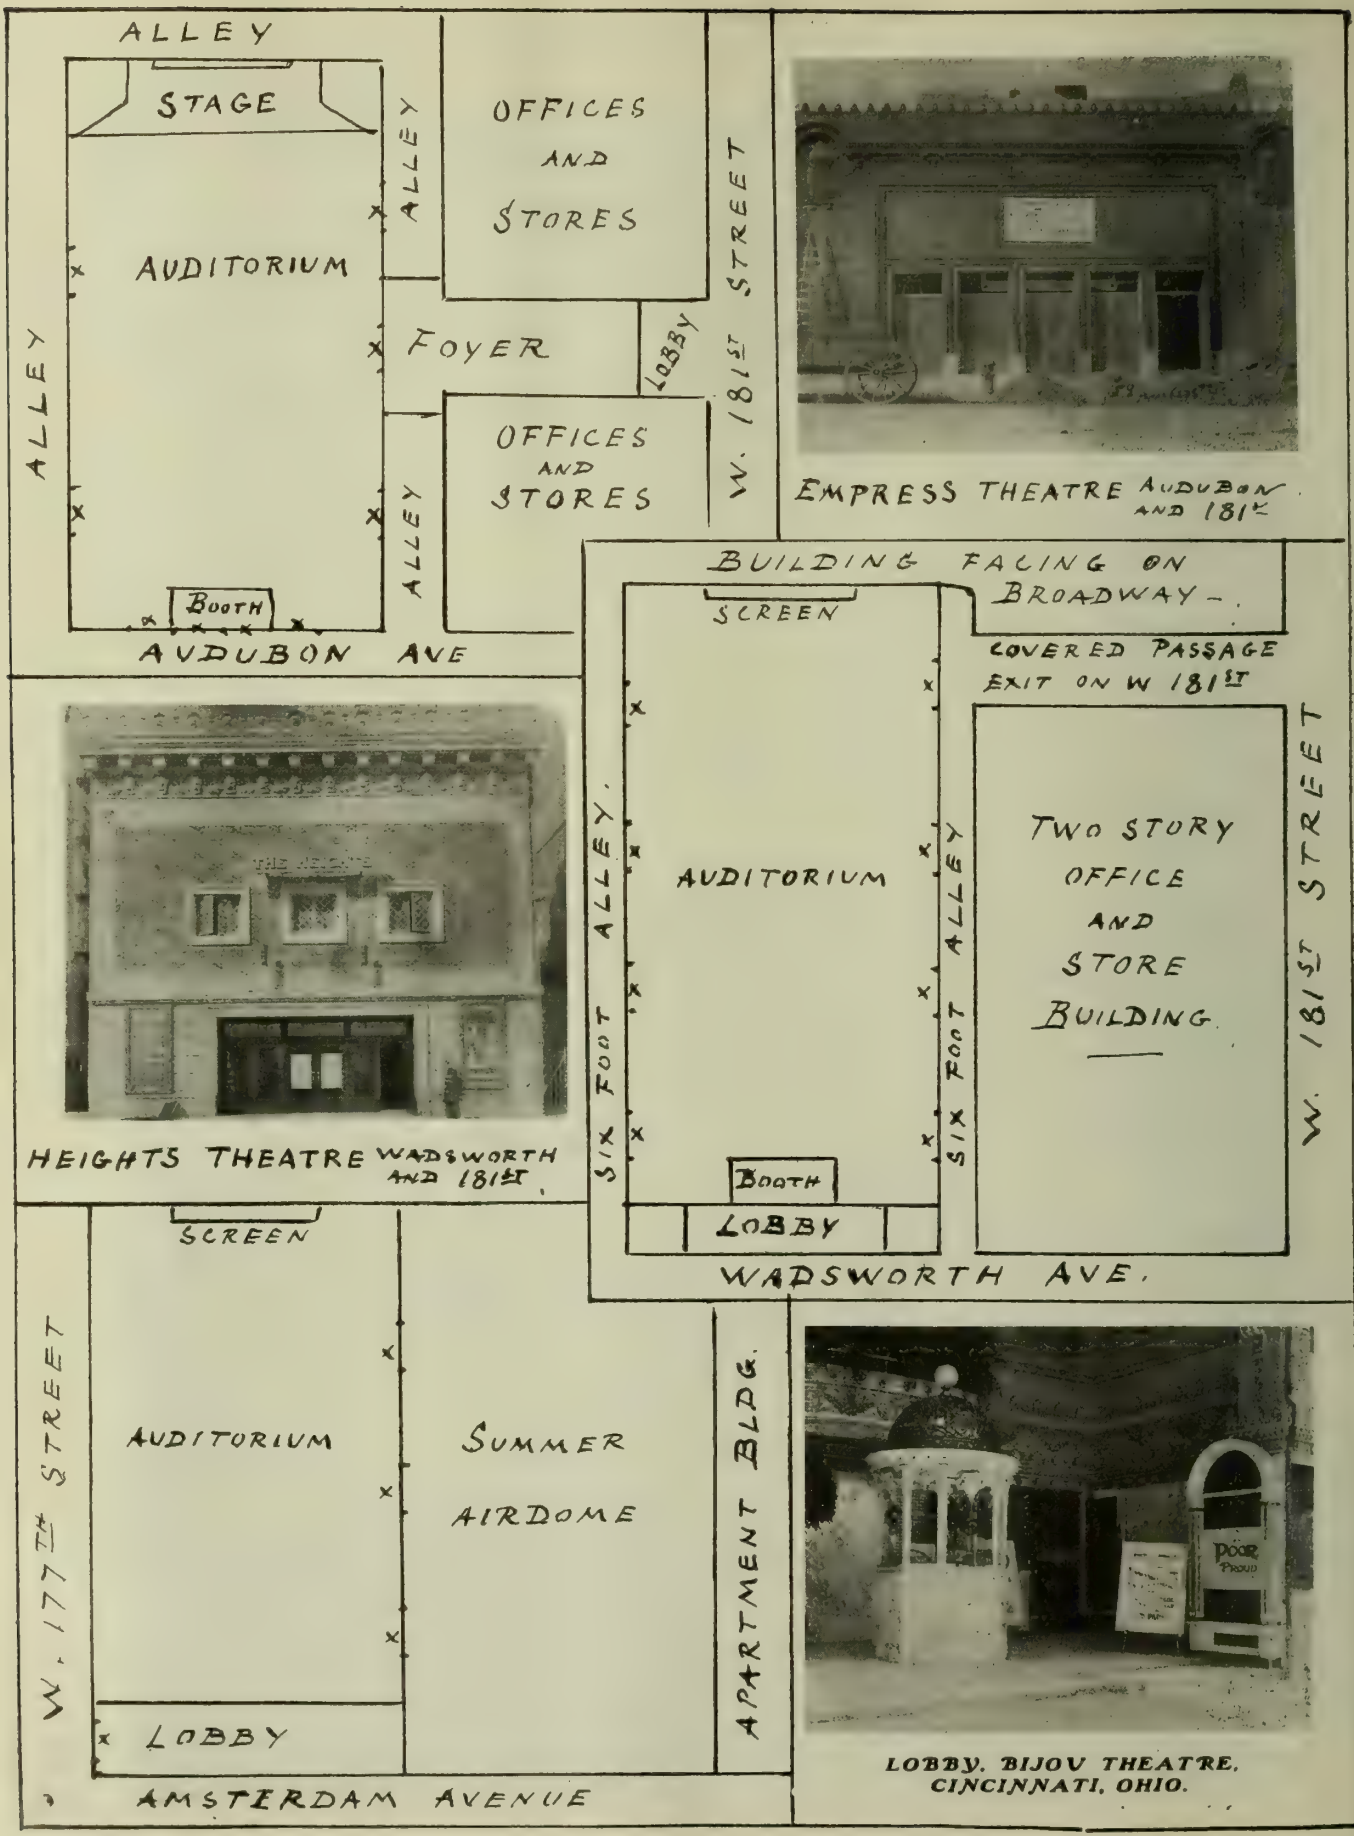
I have discovered still another new theatre in course of construction on the southwest corner of Amsterdam avenue and 160th street. I should say in course of alterations, as the building is not new. The first floor is converted into a motion picture parlor of 25x100 feet with about three hundred seats.

It is a rather cheap-looking affair, with only one redeeming feature: the operating booth is low enough to insure a nearly direct throw, but the ticket office, directly under the booth, is very low of ceiling, not over five feet in height. The ticket-seller will have to be short in stature, and she will have to remove her hat before entering her cage, if she does not want to crush her feathers.

The happy location of the booth is more of an accident than a special arrangement of the builder. The ceiling being rather low at the entrance, the height of the ticket office had to be sacrificed to accommodate the operating booth.



INTERIOR, THE "PLAYHOUSE," NEWARK, N. J.



LOBBY, BIJOU THEATRE, CINCINNATI, OHIO.

As the floor has been sunk, there is more ceiling height at the rear of the house (perhaps 18½ feet), yet not enough for the ridiculous size of the screen. The screen is eighteen feet wide, surrounded by a black frame one foot wide. While the frame of the screen touches the ceiling, there is only thirty inches between the floor and the frame, placing the screen entirely too low.

The owner of the theatre will find that his desire to show a big picture, in the hope of getting the patronage of the other houses, will act against his own theatre, as if the patrons cannot enjoy the picture in full on account of the heads of the persons sitting in the front seats, they will go somewhere else, where they can see a full picture, if even smaller in size.

CHARLES CALEHUFF'S NEW PREMISES

Philadelphia Jobber's Great Progress

In respect to motion picture apparatus Philadelphia is recognized as one of the most important trade and commercial centers of the United States in this line, affording a profitable market for the sale and exchange of the goods. The proof of the fact has been shown by the growth of so many firms engaged in the business. Much of this success and prosperity, however, is due to the foresight and intelligence on the part of the men who are at the head of these concerns.

Into this class of men, who possess an appreciation of the situation in Philadelphia, we would put Charles A. Calehuff, president and general manager of the Calehuff Supply Company, which for some time has been located at 50 North Eighth Street, and which since experiencing such an extensive increase in volume of business as to necessitate newer and more up-to-date quarters, has leased the store property at the northwest corner of Thirteenth and Race Streets, which will now enable them to carry on their business even more expeditiously and promptly than heretofore.

Mr. Calehuff is an acknowledged expert in his particular field of endeavor, and by reason of the high-class service he gives he has built up a reputation in the local motion picture world that is extraordinary. The workmen he employs on the repair work are experienced men in the business and all work is done under the supervision of Mr. Calehuff himself.

The mirror screen, Edison machine, Powers machine and motiograph are all too well known as to their respective merits to require any mention on our part.

We congratulate Mr. Calehuff and the firm which he has been instrumental in building up, and we wish him success and prosperity in his new home.

MAINE EXHIBITORS MEET

The Maine branch of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of America met in the Assembly Room of the DeWitte Hotel in Lewiston, Maine, at 2 p. m., October 21st. President M. Blumenburg, of Portland, presided. Among the exhibitors present were: E. L. Crawford, Brunswick, Me.; C. H. Seymour, Houlton, Me.; J. J. Hone, Presque Isle, Me.; C. J. Rush, Millinocket, Me.; F. E. Mortimer, Freeport, Me.; J. W. Greeley, Portland, Me.; A. A. Allen, Bangor, Me.; F. H. Hauson, Winthrop, Me.; H. W. Gillespie, Calais, Me.; Wm. Shea, Eastport, Me.; J. A. Emery, Bar Harbor, Me.; A. P. Bibber, Lewiston, Me.; Wm. Gray, Lewiston, Me.; M. Blumenburg, Portland, Me., and O. F. Fernandez, Old Town, Me. Many exchange men and Feature Film representatives were also present.

The convention was a success, harmony and good-fellowship prevailing throughout. Matters of importance directly affecting the Maine exhibitors were taken up, discussed, and acted upon. The Maine State Branch of the league now numbers over forty members in good standing. An organizer will be placed in the field, and the members of the league expect to have at least 95 per cent of the exhibitors of the State of Maine join the league before their next convention, which will be held next February at Portland.

After Mr. Neff addressed the convention, by unanimous vote the National Organization and its officers were endorsed, the Maine Branch being in thorough accord with the National Organization. The State of Maine will be represented at the National Convention to be held at Dayton, Ohio, on the first Tuesday after the Fourth of July, 1914. The convention adjourned at 6 o'clock. A dinner was served in the DeWitte Hotel, after which the members of the league were entertained at Music Hall Theatre and other picture houses in Lewiston.

Madame Orloff, of Vienna, one of the most distinguished actresses on the Continental stage, is the latest acquisition to the ranks of the Great Northern Film Company. This gifted artist has appeared in the principal theatres of Europe, and enjoys the distinction of being capable of playing a series of varied roles. Her forte is the emotional, but during her successful career on the stage she has played many parts with equal distinction.

It is with difficulty that the Great Northern Company persuaded Madame Orloff to appear in motion picture productions, but when she accepted and entered into the spirit of the advanced art of cinematography she became enthusiastic over the possibilities. Madame Orloff will be seen in the leading role in the twelve-reel production of Gerhart Hauptmann's "Atlantis," and she may be expected to appear later in a number of multiple reel productions which are in the course of preparation by the Great Northern Company.

An Open Forum Wanted

To the Editor.

Sir: The big independent associations of New York, Pittsburgh, Massachusetts, Indiana, Cleveland, Minneapolis, Los Angeles, Chicago, Milwaukee, etc., and also unattached exhibitors, who favor neither Webb, Sweeney nor Trigger, would welcome an open department as a medium of communication on matters of interest to each other.

You and others are ignoring this vast body of men whose only interest is the proper conducting of the motion picture business. At present we find only a "league" department in some papers. That is all right so far as covers the "league" with—according to National Secretary Wiley—3,000 members. What about the other 16,000 exhibitors?

Men who have sufficient brains and intelligence to get out handbills, etc., for the modern picture theatre surely have some rights to an open forum as a means of exchanging ideas upon the "big things" in connection with the industry. We are tired of reading "inspired" stuff from just one source, and that generally gross misrepresentations, as per the account sent out by Mr. Neff from the Hollenden Hotel meeting on October 13th, at Cleveland. In every paper it was a rank fabrication. Such stuff is a gross imposition upon your independent readers. The paper with the open forum for all signed articles from individuals or associations will be the one for responsible advertisers. Let us have it. Print this suggestion and watch the response. Fraternally,

SAM BULLOCK,
Cor.-Sec., C. M. P. Association

[The "inspired stuff" to which Mr. Bullock refers was not printed in these pages. And, moreover, the "open forum" of our pages is available by all who have the best interests of the motion picture art and industry at stake.—Ed. M. P. N.]

Music and the Picture

Suggestions Invited, Questions Cheerfully Answered

Address: Music Department, The Motion Picture News

IN talking of the opening of the "Empire," a new photoplay house of Portland, Me., the Portland Press says: "The first thing that strikes you as you sit down and look at the pictures being shown on the screen is the music. You would think that there was a whole orchestra there. But there is not, it is but another sample of the modernness of the place."

Then the Portland Press explains that the supposed orchestra is composed of a piano and a Dramagraph, operated by Mr. Alfred Davis. The Dramagraph, according to the description of the Press, is an arrangement by which everything shown on the screen can be imitated. All sounds ranging from the cackles of a hen and the cry of a baby to the booming of a gun or the playing of a graphophone can be reproduced on the machine.

As I described the Dramagraph in a previous issue of this publication, I have not much to add to the rather meagre description given by the Portland Press.

While the Dramagraph can reproduce faithfully all the sound effects required in a motion picture, I wish to correct a wrong impression. The Dramagraph is not a toy, nor is it a mechanical instrument to take the place of the drummer.

Some persons have an idea that all they have to do is to either turn a crank, press down a pedal or pull a string to obtain the desired sound effects. A great mistake, as the Dramagraph requires the service of a conscientious drummer.

The various sound effects enclosed in the cabinet of the Dramagraph are the same kind of traps sold individually to the drummer, consequently they require as much attention if it is desired to have the correct effects at the proper time.

The Dramagraph is an instrument to save some money to the exhibitor and help the drummer.

We know that the "souvenir craze" is strong in the United States, everyone helping himself to the property of others, just to collect souvenirs. If the traps of the drummer are loose on the floor, on some chairs or tables, there are always enough souvenir-hunters to pick up some of them. One exhibitor of Pittsburgh told me that he had to spend over $300 per year to replace the traps carried away by visitors.

As all the traps are either nailed, screwed or gummed in the cabinet of the Dramagraph, the souvenir-hunters have no chance to help themselves, and the traps saved during the year amount to more than the price of a Dramagraph.

To the drummer, the Dramagraph is of invaluable help, as all the traps are so arranged as to enable him to produce a number of effects at the same time, a feat that he cannot accomplish correctly when the loose traps are scattered all over the place. For instance, in the scene of a great storm, accompanied by destruction and fire, he can imitate the wind, the rain, the thunder, the fire-alarm bell, the fire-engine, the gallop of the horses, the falling of some buildings or trees, even the cry of the baby left in distress, or of the animal running for a shelter, etc.

To accomplish this the drummer must be experienced and have a knowledge of the Dramagraph, so as to have under his control all the pedals, strings and cranks to enable him to work them quickly and even in darkness.

The drummer who wishes to make the picture talk should welcome the Dramagraph, as he will find many possibilities in the instrument.

The Dramagraph is like the pipe-organ or the Wurlitzer Unit orchestra; it is a marvel when under the control of a man who knows his business, while it will be the most discordant noise in the hands of the man who will pull the strings, turn the cranks and press on the pedals, like the fellow who, while playing a Wurlitzer Unit orchestra, was constantly working all the keys and stops, as if he was amusing himself or trying to find the sound effect of each stop.

If a drummer has fifty or sixty traps loose on the floor, on chairs or tables, it is practically impossible for him to find the right trap at the proper moment, and if the effect is not given at the proper time, it is better to omit it.

I have been taught to look at the pipe organ as the musical instrument of the church, the same as the drum is the instrument to mark the steps of the soldiers. I then feel that it is sacrilegious to accompany a Western picture of a fight between Indians and cowboys, a saloon brawl, a gambling scene, etc., with the sweet melodious tones of the instrument so well adapted to sing the praises of God.

I am opposed to the pipe organ and full orchestra because the exhibitor in general will not and cannot always pay the wages of proficient musicians.

The exhibitor in too many cases wants to make all the money he can, his greatest ambition is to force the patronage by putting his neighbor out of business.

The exhibitor wants a long program, he wants a pipe organ and a full orchestra, not to give a good show to please the patrons but merely to brag: "I show nine reels, more than any of my competitors—I have a pipe organ against the piano of Smith—I have an orchestra of six pieces against the four pieces of my neighbor." This is the spirit, he does not seem to care about the quality, his desire is to beat his competitors. He cares so little for the quality that when he shows nine reels and wants to have three shows during the evening, he runs his reels at a speed of ten minutes per reel; in other words, he tries to show six reels in the time required to show three reels properly. He knows that reels run at such speed are unsatisfactory, the actions are so precipitate as to render them unnatural, the patrons have no time to read the sub-titles, consequently they lose the thread of the story, the strain on the eyesight is such as to keep some patrons away. How can you expect the exhibitor to be more particular on good music, when he is so careless in the projection of the picture?

THE HAPPY FINISH OF A ROMANCE OF THE SEASON

Wallace Reid, the director, and his leading lady, Dorothy Davenport, who were married in Los Angeles on October 13.

I have no doubt that the time is coming when we will have full orchestras able to play the picture, but before the exhibitors can make any money with such musicians, they will have to change their ways. They must discard the ugly posters that give such a cheap appearance to the theatre; they must give up the idea of long programs; come back to a more rational show of three reels only of the best and properly projected pictures. Musicians able to play the picture are artists, they have a certain pride, and they do not want to be known to play in a side show.

There is no doubt that in the course of time the manufacturers of films will produce pictures to fit certain music. This feature is not a dream, it is coming, but when? When the exhibitors will combine their efforts to give a refined show, when the theatres will be such as to encourage the patronage of persons able to appreciate fine pictures and good music. The manufacturers are ambitious, they are ready to lavish money on good productions and uplift the industry, but in the name of common sense, they do not feel justified to spend money, time and energy on first-class productions when the exhibitor of to-day shows, side by side, a good picture with a punk film. If a back alley manufacturer produces a negative at a cost of $500 in which he introduces some out of place sensational thrills and is clever enough to have very sensational posters, he has more chances to dispose of his prints than the manufacturer who spends $5,000 on a clean moral negative of high quality.

I do not discourage the full orchestra or pipe organ, but I advise all exhibitors who have not the best pictures, the patronage and the means to pay first-class musicians, to abandon the full orchestra and the pipe organ and to return to the piano with a drummer. J. M. B.

How Wild Animals Live

Midgar Features—Five Reels

A GREAT number of animal pictures have been attempted before with varying success, but there has never before been anything produced that is such a faithful reproduction of animal life as it actually exists far from the "madding crowd." Past animal features have for the most past introduced a few lions in some jungle scene that is run in with a drama, or perhaps a comedy. Some of the larger manufacturers have a menagerie for this sole purpose.

These pictures are not taken from a menagerie, but are "caught" right on the spot, after patient and arduous work on the part of the operator. Many were the schemes, attendant only on failure, tried, until finally success met their stubbornness and the pictures are the result.

The pictures are arranged in five series so that they may be used as lectures if so desired. The titles and sub-titles are self-explanatory, and are interesting in themselves. Caterpillars and moths are taken for the first part of the first lecture, thence shifting to dormice in their nests. It shows the difficulty of awakening them, and tells a vivid story of how they live with their young. The peacocks and Chinese geese make good subjects, particularly the latter. The ending of the first reel deals with spiders, including a diagnosis of the terrible tarantula.

The second reel introduces some snakes and insects, the latter part, however, being devoted to the study of the polar bear in various antics. A dace snake, changing his skin, and then, ravenously hungry, eating a whole fish, first turning it round in its mouth, presents many interesting problems.

The third installment depicts the lives of wild animals in Central Africa. This picture was taken at a great risk on the part of the operator, who did not have anyone to help him if needed. Lions and jackals eating their food and burying what was left are shown. Vultures are photographed so nearby that the camera was nearly touching them. The most beautiful but dangerous leopard finished up this reel.

The fourth reel consists of birds and animals we meet in our daily life. Among these might be mentioned the kinglet, cat playing with young rabbits, wild-cats and rabbits and ferret. The fight between a water-beetle and a worm is something original to the picture world.

The concluding part consists but of two subjects, namely, doves and moor hens. The latter were very well pictured indeed.

Every school in the world should have these pictures on exhibition as part of the curriculum.

VITAGRAPH'S BIG CURTAIN

A magnificent castle with turrets and parapets and towers pointing into the cloud-hung skies is the feature of one of the largest drop-curtain scenes ever attempted in motion pictures. The "drop" is eighty feet long and forty feet high. It is the work of the Vitagraph Company of America for a play entitled "Heartsease." The scene takes in not only the painted castle, but a whole forward wing of the building as well, reproduced in wood and brick. This portion catches afire in the play and is ravaged by wind-driven flames that leap from its windows and break through the crevices of its stone walls. The entire scene represents an old English castle of the medieval type, with the accompanying terraces, green lawns and box-hedge gardens. A sparkling fountain plays its leaping waters before the front entrance of the dignified and impressive old stronghold of barons and beautiful women, and a luxury of bright colors is supplied by the artistic flower-beds. The painting of the large drop-curtain was done by John Moore and the scene was planned and laid out by Director L. Rogers Lytton, both members of the Vitagraph staff.

Miss Rita Moya, of 127 Brixton Road, S. E., England, who is a well-known comedienne there and shows lantern slides in the motion picture theatres of the British Isles, desires to hear from American manufacturers of song slides with a view of obtaining lantern slides to show in her entertainment.

Advertising the Picture

I HAVE said so much against posters, especially against the large, sensational posters, that I am afraid of being called down. But instead of receiving a knock, I am gratified to know that my views are generally endorsed.

A manufacturer of films asked me to call on him, as he was anxious to thank me for my stand on the abuse of posters.

The manager of an important film exchange told me: "You cannot fight too hard this question of posters, and you have our support. Posters are not only an extra expense, but they give us more trouble than the films." This manager took me over his exchange, where I was surprised to find an entire floor devoted to the mounting and the storage of posters. He told me that they use an average of over one thousand yards of extra wide muslin to mount their posters.

A gentleman who has been conducting a sort of reform in the decorations for the lobby was pleased to meet me and assured me of his cooperation.

The exhibitors themselves take notice. One of them, who does not make an abuse of posters and shows more posters to-day than in the past, frankly admitted that the extra posters did not increase his patronage. On the other hand, he feared that the display of posters had chased some of his regular daily patrons away to make room for a less desirable patronage. He told me that on account of other work he had to appoint an assistant manager, and this young assistant, anxious to make good, had an idea that he had to copy the other places by increasing the display of posters.

While it would be too long to enumerate all the good comments, they are nevertheless so encouraging as to decide me to continue the fight, as I fought cheap vaudeville.

At one time cheap vaudeville was creeping everywhere, and the managers had come to the conclusion that no pictures could be enjoyed unless they were sandwiched between silly vaudeville acts.

Suddenly, when the fight appeared to be hopeless, cheap vaudeville disappeared from most of the motion picture theatres. At the start no one was willing to yield to good advice, but every manager was waiting to see the other man make the first jump. When a few exhibitors took courage to throw down cheap vaudeville, the reform spread like wild-fire.

While I am against an abuse of sensational posters, I am not against advertising. I believe in posters when they are good, artistic, neatly framed and used in moderation. Good posters of good composition and colors can decorate a lobby when they are displayed in neat frames.

The poster should not be a design from the imagination of the artist, as too often the title of a film is not appropriate and conveys a wrong impression.

I remember a film called "Buried Alive." This title was wrong, not to say deceiving, as no one in the story is made to go through the horrible experience of being buried alive in a regular grave, by grave-diggers, etc., as shown on the poster. The story was of a miner caught in a cave but quickly rescued by the other men. The titles, like the illustration on the poster, were merely to create a sensation and get the nickels from the ones who look for something to thrill them.

In other cases the posters are dull, stupid and keep many persons away from a real good, moral picture.

The real trouble is that the exhibitor is not willing to pay for the poster if he can help it, as he believes that the posters should be included in the film service. Next, the film exchange is not willing to pay much for this extra luxury, and as the manufacturer cannot get a fair price for good posters, he has to curtail the artist and poster-printer to have them made as cheaply as possible.

Here again we meet the competition of the printer who cannot secure the orders of the film manufacturers, and who place on the market "stock posters." These posters, generally very fantastic in composition and loud in colors, are supposed to fit all pictures.

There is no doubt that if the manufacturer could get a fair return on posters, he would be able to secure better artists and pay more for the printing of the posters.

Few exhibitors know that posters

GENE GAUNTIER PLAYERS IN IRELAND GATHERED AROUND CART OF ITINERANT PEDDLER

are often turning patrons away on account of the similarity in the titles. Years ago the manufacturers were careful not to copy each other, and when they would discover that the intended title of a new release had already been used by another manufacturer, they would change the name.

To-day the manufacturer seems to have no objection to similar titles. I know of three films of "The Two Orphans," two films of "The Thief," several films of "Quo Vadis," of "The Last Days of Pompeii," etc.

If you advertise Geo. Kleine's "Quo Vadis" you may lose many patrons who, having seen the inferior production of the same title, do not know that several "Quo Vadis" films are on the market.

One day two ladies stopped in front of a theatre in Alabama, and, looking over the posters, one said: "I have seen this picture, it is not a new one." The other lady answered: "No, it cannot be an old picture, I come here every day and they show only new pictures never seen in town before." To settle the controversy, the ladies called on the manager, who informed them that a film of the same title had been produced by another manufacturer.

This manager would have lost two admissions if the ladies had, as too many do, judged the show by the posters. The well-known reputation of the manager to show the newest films only, without repeaters, saved the day.

I have found that too many posters make the patrons more or less skeptical, while the exhibitors who have established a good reputation, continue to draw the best patronage without cheapening the appearance of their theatre with an abuse of posters. The Alhambra of Indianapolis, the Bijou Dream of Boston, the Regent of New York, the Family of Philadelphia, the Exhibit of Columbus and many other successful theatres are doing the best business with few posters. J. M. B.

The new Pathe outdoor studio in St. Augustine is distinguished by at least one unique feature. On the grounds of the property is located a spring, which tradition in the old Spanish city states is the spring visited by Ponce de Leon in his search for the fountain of perpetual youth, and which for some time he took to be the object of his search. For years the former owners of the spring charged admission to this spring because of the tradition.

Bids have been received by Stuckert and Sloan, architects, for the construction of a theatre on the south-west corner of 52nd street and Wyalusing avenue, Philadelphia. The approximated cost is $14,000.00 Building 40 x 151, brick and terra cotta. Will seat 500.

A RELIANCE STAR

Anna Laughlin's next appearance on the screen will be in "The Bracelet," a one-part modern drama, containing a play within a play, presenting a romance of Colonial days.

ANNA LAUGHLIN

Harry Spingler will be seen playing opposite Miss Laughlin, both in "The Bracelet" and in a new drama entitled "Her Father's Daughter," by M. B. Havey.

Isabel Daintry, of the London Pantomimes, whose last appearance across the "pond" was in "Cinderella," will soon be seen in Reliance pictures, as will Emelie Fulton and Mae Willard, two beauties of Ziegfeld Follies popularity.

RECRUITS AT SELIG ZOO

Notable accessions continue to arrive at the Selig Zoo near Los Angeles. Four more huge elephants and a drove of dromedaries recently came in on a special, and a police permit had to be obtained to march them through the streets from the station to the Zoo. Of course, the small boy came in large walking majority and spread the rumor that the circus had come to town.

The dromedaries, after a couple of days of rest and filling their double stomachs with spring water, started in to work for Director Huntly at the Edendale Studio in a desert picture of North America, entitled "Through the Centuries."

Superintendent Tom Persons had provided a camel caravan, but as soon as he saw the double-humped dromedaries, he made them leaders. This strange procession journeyed out to the desert locations quite a distance from Los Angeles in order to start their trip "Through the Centuries."

UNIVERSAL DIRECTOR WEDS LEADING WOMAN

The marriage of Wallace Reid, director and actor of note, and Miss Dorothy Davenport, his leading woman, both of the Pacific Coast Universal studios at Hollywood, Cal., took place at Christ Episcopal Church, Los Angeles, recently.

Mr. Reid is the son of Mr. and Mrs. J. H. Reid, his father being a noted playwright. Miss Davenport is the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Harry Davenport, well-known actors, and a niece of the late Fanny Davenport.

Mr. and Mrs. Reid were entertained by Mr. and Mrs. Isadore Bernstein and Mrs. Rose Janowitz at the Bernstein residence.

GEO. L. BARROWS, OF THE BERLIN ANILINE

Mr. George L. Barrows, the amiable representative of the Berlin Aniline Works, 213 Water Street, is well and favorably known to motion picture manufacturers all over the country. The Berlin Aniline Co., supply film, dyes, developers, etc., and are thus basically interested in the making of the picture. Moreover, and this is the point of this article, the chemical products of the Berlin Aniline Co. are pure and effective in use. We write this from practical experience as photographers and picture-makers. George Barrows, as he is popularly known, is always sure of a good welcome wherever he goes because he is honorable, straightforward and reliable in his dealings.

The Motion Picture News is happy to publish this portrait of him and to include him in its gallery of those who be approbated. He is a credit to this great business.

INTERESTING FILM REVIEWS

Educational—Industrial—Scenic—General

THE Death Song. Pathe Play. (Oct. 23.) Featuring Asta Nielson, the clever German actress, who carries the leading part with brilliancy. Walter Burke, having been injured in an accident, is out of work. His wife, Bella, who is somewhat of a musician, makes a great impression on Carl Viltzman, an impressario. He induces her to go on the stage with him, and after some trouble she secures Walter's permission. When they have been on the road but a short time Carl insults Bella and she recognizes the fact that she has to be careful of him. Walter, being cured, follows his wife from jealousy. He meets Carl, who tells him that his wife does not love him and was going away with himself (Carl). He believes this and repulses his wife the next time they meet. "The Death Song" is here introduced, it being written by Carl as his masterpiece. Bella sings it, then allows Carl to kiss her and then kills him, giving herself up to the police immediately. A story that leaves a peculiar impression on one's mind.

Hearts. Reliance. (Oct. 25.) A good addition to the Mutual program. The story is well photographed and the acting is good. A brother and sister, who are very fond of each other, are separated, the brother going to Paris to study art and the sister remaining at home. A stranger comes to the town, and, although all the other girls try to get his attention, he seems to want only "Sis," and finally marries her, taking her to his city home. She is very much out of place there, among the "swell" people, who try to make her feel cheap.

It seems that the Reliance Company is getting the habit of some of its contemporaries, viz.: the perpetual exhibition of the pictures "The Coliseum" and the "Roman Ruins."

Finally Bert, the brother, returns, and the husband, seeing him in the arms of Sis, immediately becomes terribly jealous. She returns to her home after his unfair treatment. Five years pass, and Bert, a famous painter, has made a reproduction of his sister's face, which the husband sees and buys. The meeting and immediate reconciliation follow.

The Junior Partner. Thanhouser, Two Reels. A pretty story with no moral, unless it be "Don't Marry Royalty." A girl chooses a duke, of Russion blood, against the wishes of her father, who desires to see her married to his junior partner. After the marriage they go to Russia, where she begins to lead a very unhappy life. A letter is received by the father which he knows to be forged, and when his partner reads it he sets out for Russia. On his arrival he rescues the girl by a neat trick, saving her from future life in an insane asylum. What would an escape be if there were not the proverbial tower to make sensation? On the way home they repair to an old house and defend themselves against the lackeys the duke had sent. Through a miracle they escape through an underground passage and arrive home. The duke has conveniently committed suicide in the meantime and they are together again.

The Oath of O Tsuru San. Majestic, Two Reels. A love story of Japan, involving diplomatic relations. Zips, an American inventor, while visiting in Japan, is approached by the Government of that Empire and asked to sell his invention, a submarine boat. He refuses and the Japanese depend on trickery to get it. A girl makes love to him, but in the process she falls in love herself and marries him. They return to America, where, true to her oath, she helps to steal the plans, but, this fulfilled, she retaliates by preventing their being delivered to the man-o'-war. The Japanese settings are particularly good.

From Mine to Mint. Powers. (Nov. 10.) Bought from the United States Motion Picture Company by the Universal, to be marketed under the brand of Powers. Describing gold from the mine until it is turned into actual money. The picture is very interesting, there being but one criticism: the picture might have been made by the proverbial Chinaman, who always turned things around. The metal is shown being sampled, cupelled, melted, cut in strips, punched, milled and finally stamped and counted. There are millions of dollars in sight. A good release.

The Silence of the Dead. Gaumont, Five Parts. If an American company were to produce this film it is most probable that its length would be cut considerably. In other words, the story is not of sufficient strength to warrant this amount of film. The tale is mysterious in character, and is hard to follow because of a similarity of names. It has many very commendable scenes and some excellent settings. The finale is most emotional and well acted.

The War of the Cattle Range. Bison, Two-Reel. An interesting picture, which does not, however, possess any brand new features. Introducing "The Virginian's" pet saying, "When you call me that, smile," similarly to the way Dustin Farnum said it. A girl goes West, being followed later by her brother. The latter goes wrong, but later reforms and "squeals" on his former pals, the cattle-rustlers.

Grand Opening of the Shichijio Bridge. Melies. (Oct. 23.) The great growth of the Island Empire is well demonstrated in this picture. Japan has for many years been content with wooden bridges, but this new passage is one unsurpassed in any country for ingeniousness. It is built of solid arched concrete, with steel foundations. The ceremony at its opening was most impressive. The oldest married couple were the first to cross, being followed by the first trolley-car, decorated and holding the officials, and then a long line of the citizens.

The Evil Eye. Lubin. (Oct. 23.) An allegorical tale, possessing a good punch and presenting a timely motto. The story deals with the return of Don Alva to his home, where he has a reputation among the superstitious of being a kind of mesmerist. His eye is all-powerful. The people greatly fear him, and the girl is warned against him. She, however, recognizes his wonderful mind and loves him, despite the accusations against him. He finally conquers the superstitions and marries the girl.

The settings are excellent and most realistic. Romaine Fielding plays with his accustomed care for details. Plenty of excitement throughout.

The Lady of the Lake. Juno Brand; Warner's Features. Taken from the epic by Sir Walter Scott. The subtitles consist of lines from this famous poem, then the action illustrating them. The story is told in three parts, with clever acting and good photography. The story is, however, a little hard to follow if one does not know the original, but aside from this it is a good release.

The Duke's Heiress. Gaumont. Eighteen years ago the duke had been most happy with his wife and their baby, but then the latter ran away to America. The duke at last finds trace of them and sends his emissary to bring back the girl, the mother having died. She returns with him, leaving the stage and her past life to do so. The duke and his daughter become very close friends, despite their long absence from eath other. Then a lover turns up and they are happy until a former associate from New York finds her. The rivals are barely prevented from having a duel, and the girl's brain becomes paralyzed through fear that her former lover will tell of her past life. He, however, in remorse, leaves, and the girl's mind returns through witnessing the dance she was formerly in. A fair story, well told, with a capable cast.

The Wheels of Justice. Cines-Kleine, Two Reels. Plagiarism, one of the meanest crimes one man can commit against another, is taken as the theme for this new film. The tale is clear and well told, and the settings are particularly attractive. Wilbur Holmes, a successful writer, has the manuscript of a new novel stolen by Walter Gordon, a brother writer. The latter, thinking he has killed Holmes, puts the story on the market as his own, receiving the credit for it. Just as he is giving the toast at a dinner tendered in his honor, he is arrested, and Holmes receives the credit he deserves. The picture would have been better had one of the reels been eliminated.

Surf and Sunset in the Indian Ocean. Selig. (Oct. 21.) A split-reel release of the Selig Company, this part being about 150 feet in length, and is added with the probable intention of getting the desired 1,000 feet. The picture is pretty, but its length is not sufficient to do justice to such a good subject. Just enough is shown to excite the curiosity of the audience and make it wish for more. Some very excellent moonlight effects are gained.

Aladdin and His Wonderful Lamp. Warner's Features. The one great beauty of the "Arabian Nights" is the fact that it will serve as an amusement for the grown-up as well as for the child. The stories were supposedly originally told by a "grown-up" to a "grown-up" and it is doubtful whether they were really ever meant only for children. The story as produced by the Powers Company for Warner's Features is certainly one that will interest people of all ages. The story is too well known to need retelling, and if you are fond of good acting, beautiful and truthful settings and a little magical illusion work, you should see this picture.

Animated Weekly, No. 85. At this time politics are playing a very large part in our national life, and it is interesting to see a picture of William Sulzer, the first Governor of the Empire State to be tried for offenses and impeached, especially when the picture is taken with a few feet of the person and is a good portrayal of him. The Columbus Day parade in Boston is also well photographed. From there the camera goes to West Point and takes a few feet of the football game between Colgate and the Army. They were very good. The visit of the King and Queen in Northampton are also shown. William S. Luckey, the winner of the aviation meet on Staten Island a short time ago, with his machine, both stationary and in motion, is excellent. The celebrated comedian, Harry Lauder, gracefully poses for the camera-man in Blackpool, where he was attending a carnival. President Poincaré, of the French Republic, seems to like the camera. The cartoons of Hy Mayer, usually such a good section of the "Weekly," were not up to their usual standard.

The Milk We Drink. Keystone. A split reel with a comedy. The first part of the film shows the old way of getting milk, then switches to the modern methods. The "modern," however, does not refer to the very latest. The stalls and pastures are shown, and there is the most scrupulous cleanliness throughout. Each consignment of milk is thoroughly tested in laboratories for tuberculosis germs. The method of pasteurizing milk is interesting.

Twentieth Century Farmer. Thanhouser. Although this picture should really fall under the head of "Regular Reviews," I have taken the liberty of placing it in the educational page, believing it is worth that honor. A girl becoming engaged to a "farmer," and believing him to be one of the almost extinct kind, goes to a farm of this latter class and learns how to take care of the house, cook, milk, etc. She is pleasantly surprised when her husband shows her the modern farm, with its electrical equipment, automatic milkers, butlers and maids galore, and automobiles to burn. But the best was the pigs' shower-bath. A good exploitation of modern farm life.

The White Vaquero. Bison, Two-Reels. A very good melodrama, presenting a novel idea. The troops are called out to capture the bandit known by the above epithet. While they are hunting him he steals Dolores, but fearing for her safety at the hands of his accomplices, he lets her escape. The soldiers attack them, but they escape by a tunnel. The escape is poorly directed, the bandits almost running right in front of the sentries. The Indians in the meantime attack the women in the barracks and the White Vaquero comes in and protects them, being shot and killed while doing so.

Chicago Exhibitors and Aldermen Discuss Ventilation

THE exhibitors of Chicago gathered in the council chambers of the City Hall on Friday afternoon to discuss with the aldermen on the ventilation committee the ordinance which is being enforced by the health and building commission of Chicago.

This ordinance, which was made in June, 1910, and passed in December of that year, but not put into force until July, 1913, affects the theatres in its following parts:

"The air in any room used as an auditorium in buildings of Classes IV and V, hereafter erected, shall be changed so as to provide each person for whom seating accommodation is provided in such auditorium, classroom or assembly hall with at least 1,500 cubic feet of air per hour."

"The air in any room used as an auditorium in buildings of Classes IV and V constructed prior to the passage of this ordinance shall be changed so as to provide each person for whom seating accommodation is provided in such auditorium, classroom or assembly hall with at least 1,200 cubic feet of air per hour."

"The amount of carbon dioxide in the air of any such auditorium frequented by the public shall not be permitted to rise above 12 parts of carbon dioxide per 10,000 parts of air, measurements being taken at levels from two and one-half feet to eight feet above the floor, generally distributed; and the temperature in such spaces when artificially heated shall not exceed 70 degrees Fahrenheit. The relative humidity shall not be less than 40 degrees, nor more than 85 degrees."

Dr, Young, head of the health commission, is championing the ordinance and putting forth every effort to put it into force. It is his claim that there are 605 theatres in Chicago which have an approximate seating capacity of 254,388 and an attendance of from four to five hundred thousand daily. One hundred and nine of these theatres, he states, have no ventilation whatever, while 177 have complied with the ordinance, or are installing equipment as required by the ordinance. This leaves 319 which have their theatres ventilated, but not according to the existing ordinance. These 319 are awaiting the outcome of the discussion which was held on Friday and one which will be held by a committee of motion picture theatre owners and the aldermen some day next week. By these conferences the exhibitors hope to effect a change in the ordinance which will not make it quite so drastic as it now stands.

It is the claim of many exhibitors that if this ordinance is put into force to the letter, it will mean that they will have to close their theatres, as the changes required would cost them anywhere from one to three thousand dollars, which is way beyond their means.

Victor Shafer, one of the aldermen, has cast his lot with the exhibitors, and in his argument pointed out the fact that the New York City ordinance required only 500 cubic feet of air per hour per person, and that statistics show that the death rate in New York City is less than it is in Chicago. It was the contention of Dr. Young, however, that the figures quoted were not arrived at by scientific methods, while those in the Chicago ordinance were.

A few weeks ago, on the recommendation of Dr. Young, Mr. Whelan's theatre, of Chicago, was closed because he failed to comply with the requirements of the ordinance as it related to ventilation. In referring to this, Dr. Young stated that the reason of this was that at the time Mr. Whelan applied for a license he agreed to install the proper ventilation system as set forth by the ordinance. He, however, failed to do so, as he considered that he was answering all requirements when he supplied 1,000 cubic feet per hour per person. Mr. Whelan opened his theatre again after obtaining an injunction.

Attorney Horner, in his talk as representative of the exhibitors, brought out the points at issue in Mr. Whelan's case and also other good arguments. He maintained that if the ordinance was good and was within its proper jurisdiction, and was the minimum figure for the welfare of the health of those who visited motion picture theatres, it would not be right to make concessions in any case regardless of the circumstances, as Dr. Young volunteered to do, and that all theatres should be compelled to live up to the ordinance or be closed.

While his argument was well taken, it ruffled the dignity of Dr. Young, and he said that if the injunction which was now pending was not upheld, he would close every theatre in Chicago not complying with the ordinance within twenty-four hours.

Mr. Nielson, owner of the Parkway and Stevens theatres, went into detail, explaining the construction of his theatres, telling of all the methods he used to gain fresh air for his patrons, and stating that still it did not come within the requirements of the ordinance. Dr. Young, in answer to this, said that he had visited the Stevens Theatre some time ago and found the air decidedly bad.

Mr. Choynski, Mr. Cressy, Mr. Shepard, a reformer, and Miss Harriett Vittum, another reformer, also spoke; however, no definite steps were taken to amend the ordinance. Those in favor of the ordinance, of course, maintained that the 200,000 who visited the theatres should be given more consideration than the six hundred that owned them.

Mr. Choynski, who at the present time is building a theatre, claimed that the many contractors whom he had approached could not guarantee to install a system that would work and comply with the ordinance. It being their contention that the supplying of so much air would naturally make the theatre cooler in Winter, they, however, claimed that they would install a system that would get the O-K of the city authorities, but would not guarantee it to work.

Several of the aldermen on the committee seemed to be in favor of amending the ordinance within what the exhibitors consider reasonable bounds.

THE ED-AU CLUB

The organization of the Ed-Au Club of New York editors and authors having at least ten produced photoplays, was effected at the Taverne Louis, New York City, last Saturday evening. Phil Lang, Kalem editor, was elected president, and Epes Winthrop Sargent was elected secretary. Monthly meetings will be held.

WESTON APPOINTED MANAGER OF ALMO

MR. Fred K. Weston, one of the best known of younger element in the motion picture business in Chicago and the Middle West, was appointed general manager of the Almo Feature Film Co., of Chicago, on Tuesday, October 21st, succeeding Mr. D. A. McKinney, who recently resigned.

Mr. Weston's experience in the business has been of a varied nature, including practically every branch from the conducting of a State-right feature to the management of an office. Mr. Weston has been successful in his past ventures, and it is expected that under his guidance the concern will continue to prosper and grow.

Bushman Plays Chicago Theatres

Francis X. Bushman, leading man of the Essanay Film Mfg. Co., has contracted with several of the better-class motion picture theatres in and about Chicago to give talks at these show-houses on the making of the motion picture.

Mr. Bushman has an interesting act that lasts about a half-hour. Fifteen minutes of this time is used in explaining the actual making of the motion picture and during the remainder of the act Mr. Bushman lectures on a picture in which he portrays the leading character. Both sections of his offering are interesting.

"S. & H." Buys M. & F.

Only a few weeks ago we recorded the facts in these columns that A. G. Spencer and Mr. Hirschberg had purchased the General Special Feature Film Co. for $11,250 from Joseph Hopp et al. These two enterprising young men have added another feature exchange and a large program to their business by their purchase on Monday, October 20th, of the M. & F. Feature Film Service from Mr. Munstuck.

The M. & F. has been known as one of Chicago's best and most successful exchanges booking multiple reels. Its growth and success have been remarkable in view of the great number of feature exchanges that have sprung into existence in the last twelve months. Those who are intimate with the situation in Chicago consider this a good buy. Its consolidation with the General Special, another strong feature exchange, it is expected, will rank these two young gentlemen and their concern amongst the foremost in the Middle West.

In order to accommodate their increased program it was found necessary to find larger quarters. On about November 1st the General Special Feature Film Company—as the concern will be known—will move into the Powers Building, where a number of other feature exchanges are now located. With their enlarged holdings, this company will in the future release four features each week, selected personally by either Mr. Spencer or Mr. Hirschberg.

Notes

The Photoplay Co., Inc., of Chicago, a concern handling accessories and machine supplies, as well as repair parts, is one of the recent entrants into the supply game in Chicago. Robert R. Barker, general manager of this concern, who just returned from a trip through the South in the interest of his company, claims that the sales surpassed his expectations.

A. V. Smith, brother to A. E., of the Vitagraph Company, is spending a few weeks in Chicago. Mr. Smith is traveling through the Middle West and expects to return to New York City the first part of November.

WALTER PRITCHARD

Walter Pritchard is the name of the young man whose likeness is given herewith. Mr. Pritchard, though scarcely more than a boy, is one of the most active camera-men in the business. He is a product of Bayonne, N. J. A little over four years ago he was in charge of the Centaur laboratory there. Later, soon after the birth of the Nestor Co., he was promoted to do camera work. In a few months the Nestor photography had earned a world-wide repute for excellence. "The Worth-While Film," as

WALTER PRITCHARD

Nestor was christened by Charles Simone, became partly so through the photographic efforts of Mr. Pritchard. Two years ago, when the Nestor companies (three of them) were transplanted to Hollywood, Cal., young Pritchard was both camera-man for the Fahrney Company and head of the Nestor laboratory at the coast. After having aided in making some of the Nestor successes, he photographed the big Kay-Bee productions. The Universal Co. re-engaged Mr. Pritchard and put him to work on special releases.

A new four-reel feature by L. J. Rubinstein shows ex-Governor William Sulzer in a drama bearing on recent New York political events, to be known as "The Shame of the Empire State."

"The Count of Monte Cristo," the pride of every stock company in the country, has been photographed by the Famous Players Films, with James O'Neill in the lead. Mr. O'Neill's interpretation of this character is possibly the most copied by his contemporaries.

Trade Notes

R. C. SEERY, manager of the Mutual Film Corporation Exchange, located in the Malers building, was appointed manager of the H. & H. Film Service Co., another branch of the Mutual in Chicago, located on Dearborn Street. This branch was formerly under the direction of Mr. George Hutchinson. Mr. Seery, under the new arrangement, is managing both Mutual exchanges in Chicago.

Mr. Frank Flaherty, who formerly managed the Washington Street exchange of this concern, is now managing the Des Moines office.

Daniel Webster McKinney, who has been the general manager of the Almo Feature Film Co. since its organization, resigned from that concern on Saturday, October 18th. Mr. McKinney is not announcing his plans for the future, but without a doubt he will line up with something worthy of his abilities.

Mr. G. Elmer Steele, who for the past year has been a road salesman for the American Tobacco Company, traveling out of the Chicago branch, resigned from that position October 18th to accept a position as traveling representative for Moore Feature Films, Chicago. Mr. Steele has made an enviable record as a tobacco salesman, and will no doubt make a success in the film business.

The new projection room at the Warner's Features will be one of the best in the country when alterations are completed. At the present time it is overrun with carpenters, plasterers, and general mechanics, so business is being conducted on the floor below. They are, however, using the new projection room on the eighth floor, deeming it good enough for the time being. A new mirror screen is being installed which will take a large picture. The sides of the room will be decorated with plaster statues and ornaments of various descriptions.

The National Board of Censorship, in its report on George Kleine's "Last Days of Pompeii," gives the educational value as "good," artistic value "good," entertainment value as "good" and moral effect "good." The printed blank of the National Board contents itself with the use of the mild word "good," instead of excellent, splendid, or other adjectives that might verge upon the enthusiastic. Hence Kleine's "Last Days of Pompeii" got the highest rating possible, and lest their printed form should fail of its purpose in this case, the National Board wrote across the bottom: "Beautiful, wonderful, very fine."

A man by the name of Herman J. Brown, operating under the name of the Famous Feature Film Service, in Seattle, Wash., purchased the State rights for "The Mysteries of Paris" for Washington, Oregon and Idaho. A contract between the parties was signed at the time, delineating the territory acquired. The Eclectic Film Co. now has reason to believe that the man has closed his office in Seattle and has become an itinerant peddler with the film under his arm. It is feared that Mr. Brown has crossed over the border to Canada with the film and will attempt to obtain bookings from the Western provinces. The rights for the Dominion of Canada for "The Mysteries of Paris" are owned by the Consolidated Film Co., Ltd.

Strong situations supplemented by heart interest characterize "The Colonel's Oath" (Reliance), scheduled for release on November 1st.

The Colonel, a Southerner of the old school, vows that if his son marries his Northern sweetheart none of his blood shall enter the old homestead. The marriage takes place, and the Northern girl meets the Colonel's oath with an oath of her own to the same effect.

The son dies, leaving a daughter, who, unknown to her mother, becomes acquainted with the Colonel and wins his heart completely. He is ready to recall his oath, but his daughter-in-law stands firm.

Rosemary Theby and little Runa Hodges are seen in this offering.

SURGICAL TECHNIQUE ON FILMS

Kinemacolor Photographs by Noted Doctor

Motion pictures as an aid to practical surgery are rapidly becoming more and more important. One of the first companies to enter this field was the Kinemacolor Company of America, which more than a year ago made two reels of pictures suitable and intended for showing only in medical schools and colleges and before specially selected audiences.

The educational value of this film to the lay mind was undeniable. It showed graphically the ravages which disease, unchecked, may make.

Now the Kinemacolor Company of America has gone a step further and has taken motion pictures of great technical value to the medical profession, pictures which will reproduce the art of a great surgeon as minutely and as faithfully as a phonograph does the voice of a singer, or a portrait one's features. Owing to the intimate nature of the film it has not been publicized.

The pictures were taken recently at the Metropolitan Hospital on Blackwell's Island. They show Dr. Sprague Carlton, the famous surgeon and lecturer, performing various operations. Dr. Carlton will use the films to illustrate his lectures throughout the country before medical societies.

"Close camera work" was used very freely. That is to say, the pictures were photographed with the lens of the camera but two or three feet from the surgeon's knife. In this way every movement of the hand may be seen, and the technique of the operation closely observed. The pictures were taken of carefully selected subjects. In many cases the "specimens," as doctors call patients at clinics, were in the last stages of disease.

Several days ago Dr. Carlton delivered his first lecture, illustrated by the Kinemacolor pictures, at Syracuse, N. Y. That was only the forerunner of others.

But Dr. Carlton cannot lecture forever. Here comes the value of the motion pictures. His technique will not be lost to the world when he is. The method of the great surgeon will be preserved on the celluloid, and the medical profession and sufferers will be the richer thereby.

A national holiday for all the school children of Italy has been declared by the king in order that school children may have an opportunity to witness "The Last Days of Pompeii." Special equipment has been provided by the Italian government for its many schools which are not now equipped even with stereopticon. This is probably the highest tribute ever paid a motion picture.

FLORENCE Lawrence, who is being featured in Universal-Victor plays, has departed from her usual roles and promises a surprise in "The Third Generation," written by Walter MacNamara. She plays the part of a modern New York Jewish girl. There is the eternal clash of creed and race.

Maibelle Heikes Justice, whose name is well known in the literary world and who has furnished many admirable stories for the Selig Polyscope Company, has prepared a novelty play of the North country that promises to be most interesting, picturesque and dramatic. It deals with the lives and rugged romance of the woods-people. She has spent a good part of the Summer in the Canadian woods, and for a month past at Camp Point, in Minnesota, living in the open.

"Venomous Tongues" is the title of the first Celio release, in two parts, to be marketed by George Kleine in this country. That famous beauty, Francesca Bertini, is again seen under the Kleine banner and in a subject that should prove a fitting vehicle for her reappearance in America. Advance reports claim that the new Celio brand will prove a big surprise to the trade. Featuring Miss Bertini and the well-known actor, Mr. Ghione, in multiple-reel subjects only, picture fans will find delight in the work of two players who have been called the "most Anglicized players in Europe."

With the completion of the new mammoth stage, which is in the course of construction, the Universal studios at Hollywood, Cal., will have the largest stage in the world. Seven carloads of lumber have already been utilized in the construction of this stage. It is sixty feet wide and four hundred feet long, containing 24,000 square feet of floor space and adjustable light diffusers. This stage, when completed, will accommodate 3,000 persons at once.

"For the Love of a Toreador" is the Kleine-Cines release for November 18th. It is the first of a series of distinctly Spanish plays to make which the Cines Company sent Director Guazzoni to Seville, Spain, some time ago. "For the Love of a Toreador" will make a sensation throughout America, it is predicted, because of the great bull-fight scene and the fact that the local color is refreshing and new.

The picture was staged at the time one of Seville's fête days was in progress, the chief feature of the occasion being the bull-fight in the afternoon. There are fully 35,000 persons in the scenes taken about the bull-ring, and the contests between the matadors and bulls are extremely thrilling and exciting.

Harry C. Myers, one of the Lubin directors, is the maker of a film in which he and Earl Metcalfe have a fight on the brink of a roof.

Edwin Barbour, of the Lubin Scenario Department, has just recovered from a serious spell of sickness. On his return to the office he found his desk covered with American beauties from the Lubin admirers.

Earl Metcalfe, of the Lubin Stock Company, was the winner of a motorcycle race, which was held in Philadelphia on Saturday, October 18th. The course was two miles around and sixteen miles to cover the win. Earl carried away with him the silver trophy, making the second prize he has captured since he became a motorcyclist. A picture of the race was taken, and L. S. McCloskey, the scenario editor, is writing a photoplay of it.

After months of wire-pulling and quarrels with the Mexican authorities, the Itala Film Company has effected the return of the shipment of "A Leap of Despair," which in error was reconsigned to Mexico. In consequence of this mistake, the Itala shipments have been interrupted. All delays will now be adjusted. "A Leap of Despair" is a four-reel subject which has had success on the Continent. It will be shipped after or before "The Queen's Jewel," another four-reel subject.

The Ambrosio version of "The Last Days of Pompeii" is now being presented at the Bijou Theatre in New York City, with twenty-two more companies covering all of the United States and Canada.

Mr. George Kleine has fifteen companies touring the United States and Canada with his photo-drama, "Quo Vadis," and twenty-two with the Ambrosio version of "The Last Days of Pompeii."

Owing to the increasing demand for one-reel Kay-Bees, the New York Motion Picture Corporation has decided, beginning the week of November 10th, to release two Kay-Bees a week, Tuesday and Friday.

$500,000 THEATRE FOR CLEVELAND

Pretentious New Motion Picture House Uses Warner's Features

Cleveland's newest and most beautiful playhouse, the Miles Theatre, which cost $500,000 to build, has contracted with H. Charnas, manager of the Cleveland office of Warner's Features, Inc., for the exclusive program of Warner's Features.

The theatre seats 2,100 persons, and there are three floors. There are two divisions of the upper floor—a balcony and gallery. Off the main foyer there are attractive parlors for the women patrons and smoking rooms for the men. Adequate service rooms are accessible from each of the floors, and especially complete and modern is the equipment of the house, both in front and back of the curtain.

The decorations of the auditorium are ivory gray, old rose and gold, and there is a novel and attractive treatment of the proscenium and boxes. The ground-work is a gray lattice, with the background in old rose, the shade deepening from the arch to the last tier of boxes.

All stairways are in gold leaf, and the upholstering of the roomy seats is in old rose. The builders have set a new example in giving unusually wide spaces between the rows of seats and corresponding wide aisles.

When C. H. Miles elected to open his "theatre beautiful" with the program of Warner's Features, he was merely carrying out his policy of providing the finest attractions obtainable for the photoplay-lovers of Cleveland and vicinity.

"THE BOY AND THE LAW"

The first presentation of "The Boy and the Law" at the New York Theatre Monday evening proves well the claims of its producers, the Youth Photoplay Company, that it is a "different" kind of a picture.

It is a picture of excellent action and human interest, with a very solemn appeal. The story of the development of a lawless boy, who, through the offices of Judge Brown's scheme of treatment, is made into a useful, law-abiding citizen, is graphically told. The acting, particularly that of the boys on "Boytown Farm," is unusually good. The picture leaves an impression of naturalness and reality, and a forceful lesson of uplift.

The story of "The Boy and the Law," together with the narrative of its inception, has been interestingly told in these columns by W. W. Young, general manager of the company. Perhaps the strongest argument for the success of the picture is that its five parts held the constant and deep interest of a very varied audience facing a long vaudeville program. W. A. J.

SPECIAL MUSIC FOR KLEINE "POMPEII"

A decided innovation in presenting pictures is George Kleine's idea in writing music especially for his big subjects. The well-known Chicago music composer, Palmer Clark, has prepared a fifty-page score, written especially for "The Last Days of Pompeii," portraying the sentiment and emotions of that time.

The music has been bound in neat volumes and is sent in advance to the theatre musicians where "Pompeii" will be shown. This is probably the first case on record where a composer has been hired to write his score from the motion picture. Mr. Kleine expects to adopt this as a regular custom for all future big subjects.

FAMOUS BUSCH GARDENS AS A BACKGROUND

Through special permission, a company of Selig players in California was allowed access for working purposes in the world-famous sunken garden of the late Adolphus Busch, located near Pasadena. This park, which ranks with any botanical garden of the world, was recently closed to the general public on account of the death of the owner, who recently passed away in Europe, but the reverent character of the picture, which Colin Campbell is producing, made it possible for him to get access to the garden without offence to the memory of the late owner.

The story dramatized entitled, "The Master of the Garden," was written by Lanier Bartlett as a two-part drama of an allegorical type in which the purity of a young girl who has been wronged brings her back from the depths of social degradation into which she has been unwittingly drawn. That the Busch Gardens are so superbly beautiful that they could be used as environment for such a situation, is sufficiently descriptive of their character.

Bessie Eyton plays the wonderfully vivid and beautiful part of the modern Magdalen. Wheeler Oakman appears in the leading role.

ERRATA

In last week's News we were made, on page 43, to use the word "movie." As we detest this vulgarism, we are sorry to have afflicted our readers with it, especially after our repeated announcement that "motion pictures" is the correct term. In the little reference to Stan Twist's love feast, we are made, in the title, to say "Movie Scribblers Move." For the word "move" there should have been printed "meet." It was a printer's error. But as to the term "Movie Scribblers," we assume no responsibility. This belongs to Mr. Twist and Mr. Twist must cash his own paper.

Motion pictures whenever possible, everybody, please.

EASTERN FEATURE HERE

The Eastern Feature Film Company, now located at 835 Broadway, is now releasing new features every week in New York and New England.

Miss M. B. Havey and Rosemary Theby, formerly of the Reliance, have joined the Lubin forces. Miss Theby should add much charm to the Lubin films. Miss Havey occupies a seat in the editorial department.

KLEINE "POMPEII" CREATES RIOT

The great De Luxe Theatre on Wilson Avenue, Chicago, billed George Kleine's "Last Days of Pompeii" for one night recently. Despite the fact that the evening was cold and rainy, a mob swarmed into the De Luxe, almost wrecking the box-office, and requiring special police to keep order. Three shows were originally planned, but the crowds demanded a fourth performance, which was given after midnight.

One significant fact was the appearance of hundreds of automobile parties, whose cars lined the streets for blocks on either side. About 10 o'clock it was found necessary to carry water to the fainting women who had become wedged in the lobby and could not be extricated. Undoubtedly George Kleine's "Last Days of Pompeii" crammed the big De Luxe as it has never been jammed before.

TURNING WORDS INTO DIMES

Sane and Sensible Advertising by the Exhibitors as a Stimulant to Box Office Legerdemain

By E. J. HUDSON

"OH DEAR, I've been in the house all day, without a bit of outdoor exercise," complained Mrs. Oneof A. Million.

"Where do you want to go?" asked Mr. Oneof A. Million, pausing in his perusal of the evening paper to gaze at his wife.

"Let's walk downtown and go to a motion picture show, and then walk back."

"All right, but which theatre do you want to go to?"

"Read the advertisements, and see which looks the best."

Turning to one of the inside pages, the husband scrutinized several columns of closely written advertising. "Here's one, the Hippodrome," he said at length. "How does this sound?"

"'Hippodrome To-night'"

"'A Marvelous Sensation in Three Tremendous Reels, "The Mountain Girl at Bay." Another Big Surprise Comedy, "Helping the Rich." Don't Fail to See "Donald, the Desperate," To-night Only. See the Hair-raising, Death-defying Race Between the Locomotive and the Automobile! See the Terrible Blood-curdling Third Degree! See the Breath-suspending Struggle on the Brink of the Precipice, and a Hundred Other Big Thrills—One of the Most Elaborate and Stupendous Productions of the Year. To-night Only. Prices Ten, Fifteen and Twenty.'"

"Aren't there any others?" asked Mrs. Oneof A. Million.

"Yes, here's the Lyric's ad," continued her husband. It says:

"'We Have Eliminated Eye Strain from Our Pictures.

"'We Have Made an Exhaustive Study of Projection, and as a Result Our Pictures Are Clear, Steady and Easily Watched, without any of the Usual Strain upon the Eyes.

"'The Chairs in the Lyric Are Big, Roomy and Comfortable. You Won't Tire of Sitting in Them.

"'We Aim to Please You. Our Ushers are Courteous and Attentive and Look after Your Every Want While in the Lyric.

"'Our Theatre is Never Entirely Dark—Hence No Stumbling over Seats or Other People's Feet When You Enter.

"'The Lyric Is Easily Accessible to All Principal Points in the Business Section.

"'We Try to Please Our Patrons. Your Presence Will Give Us an Opportunity to Prove It.

"'To-day's Program: A Laughable Comedy, "Helping the Rich," "The Mountain Girl at Bay," a Three-reel Drama of the Early Pioneer Days. "Donald, the Desperate," a Two-reel Drama of Unusual Interest.

"'Our Prices Are Ten, Fifteen and Twenty Cents.'"

"Oh, let's go to the Lyric," requested Mrs. Oneof A. Million when her husband concluded reading the advertisement. "I always get a headache from watching pictures at the Hippodrome, and besides, the backs of their chairs are too straight."

The foregoing incident, while purely fictitious, illustrates the attitude of millions of thinking men and women upon the question of "which theatre to go to." Advertisements, or, in the language of advertising experts, "ad copy," is a big and vital factor in the welfare and success of every motion picture theatre in the United States. It can mould opinion, bring esteem and respect, and it can turn many nickles and dimes from the box office, or cause them to flow in greater numbers into the bank accounts of the exhibitors. It all depends upon the exhibitor and his manager.

Men and women in cities of practically every size, from the little town of three to five thousand population, to the cities reaching into one hundred to two hundred thousand, look to the local daily newspapers as their buying guides. Their confidence in their own particular daily paper is unlimited. This may seem far fetched, but it has been proven in thousands of instances. What they read in it they nearly always believe without question or doubt. It is the exhibitor's best market in which to list and display his wares.

A window trimmer, employed by the owners of a big department store, does not work simply with the idea of filling the window space with various articles. He strives for unique effects, arrangement of goods that will attract particular attention to them, and for artistic decorations, giving to passers-by an idea of dignity and refinement, and last, but far from least, quality.

So it should be with the exhibitor. Joining together of words requires thought, time and study. Like articles selected for display in any window, they must be arranged in the best conceivable manner, so that no offense will be given to the refined, and so that after the first superficial glance by the reader, there will be sufficient verbiage of a good substantial nature to hold his attention and, eventually, sell him.

One Big Argument Continually Featured Essential

The advertising history of any manufacturer of a nationally advertised product will show that his success has been built chiefly upon the selection of one great big vital selling point in his ad copy. That is hammered incessantly into the minds and visions of the readers of magazines and newspapers, and weaving other points of interest around it, so that the combination leaves a lasting memory. Then when the actual product itself is seen in the store, the idea of quality is so spontaneous with the appearance of the product that a sale, in nine cases out of ten, seems inevitable.

Men who have made a lifelong study of advertising strive to achieve that very result, and millions upon millions of dollars are being spent annually to accomplish it. That fact in itself convinces one of the need of one salient point concerning any product featured day after day, and week after week, in all advertising copy.

To insert daily, or tri-weekly advertisements in a local newspaper, with nothing but the name of the theatre as a heading, the words, "To-day's Program," and then a list of the pictures under it with the admission prices as a close, borders close upon the extravagant; and dimes and nickels are almost too wary to permit of business extravagances.

A definite purpose should be kept in mind when advertising copy concerning a motion picture theatre is being written. Perhaps there is some especial feature in the theatre which belongs to no other house in the city; perhaps it is particularly well located in respect to stores, or car lines; maybe it has an unusually large number of exits, or any one of a thousand other distinctive features. It is safe to assume that there is not more than two out of every ten motion picture theatres in the United States and Canada that do not possess distinctive features, which, if properly emphasized in ad copy, would bring increased business.

Competitors' Patrons Are Your "Prospects"

Every man, woman and child in any city can be considered a prospective patron of some motion picture theatre. Why not yours? If your theatre is handy to street car lines, tell them, in your advertising copy, that rainy weather does not need to hinder them from enjoying an evening at the theatre. Tell the women that no long walk is necessary from your theatre to a car line after a matinee, when they turn homeward with an armload of packages. If the city is sufficiently large to boost of traffic policemen in the business district, mention the added safety to children in crossing streets on their way to the theatre. Many mothers, given a well-worded and dignified suggestion of that kind, probably would disregard their fears for the safety of their children who cry to be permitted to attend matinees.

If your projection is exceptionally good, feature that fact in your advertising copy. Go to some local eye specialist who is well known, or an optician in any jewelry store, and convince him that clear, steady pictures are exceptionally good exercise for the eyes, and that they increase a person's powers of observation and rapid discernment. Then get him to make a statement to that effect, and use it in your ad copy, with his signature below it. Showing a slide each night for two or three weeks featuring the optician's place of business might prove an incentive.

There is one invariable rule in advertising. Never make your ad copy say anything but what is absolutely true. Otherwise, your money is wasted and you jeopardize your business. If you haven't good projection, make it good before you advertise it, and feature some other selling argument.

People are more quickly attracted by a familiar catch line or phrase in advertising copy than they are by constantly changed expressions. Select one, two or three really distinctive features of your theatre and emphasize them in every piece of copy you write. Place them in the same relative positions, changing the wording but seldom. But make those features relate directly to your theatre. Establish the connection between good projection, spacious exits, a choice location, comfortable chairs, good ventilation or the courtesy and attention of your ushers, and your theatre.

After all, the people must have impressed upon them the fact that the chairs are easy and comfortable in the Lyric Theatre, not simply that the chairs are easy and comfortable.

Giving the Theatre a Little Prominence

In theatre ad copy in which mention is made of nothing but "to-day's program" and the price of admission, there is no direct incentive given for patronage. It is necessary to genuine success in advertising to give some definite reason why your theatre should be patronized above all others in the city. The ever changing picture titles mean nothing to the average reader. It is difficult for them to judge a good picture by the title. They have been fooled too often. In some instances it has not been the fault of the exhibitors. But those days are fast disappearing.

"The Pride of the Regiment" has no advertising value. It may mean any one of fifty things. But to say in your ad copy, "Our Screen Is Tilted Slightly Forward So That the Picture Upon It Is Always Square and Permanently Centered, Eliminating Jumps and Blurring," arouses a train of thought in the mind of the reader. He probably won't know why the screen is tilted forward, nor care to find out, but the fact that the picture is "permanently centered, eliminating jumps and blurring," starts him thinking something like this:

"Gee, that's a good stunt. Kittie said it made her head ache the way those pictures jumped the other night. Next time we'll go to this theatre. Then she won't blame me if she don't enjoy herself."

While it is unquestionably necessary to advertise your daily program, the exhibitor who gives that preference over his theatre is spending his money wantonly, and what little benefit does accrue goes to the manufacturer. Perhaps, some day, some competitor may pay a higher price and get that program of releases which has been so well advertised, and what little benefit there is to be had, he will get. The exhibitor who can't afford to meet the increased rental loses his service, and is obliged to use different service.

Then what is left him to trade upon?

Nothing!

He has spent his good money advertising brands of film, and people know nothing of the really attractive features of his house. Then, when he changes program, it is ofttimes similar to opening a new theatre. All the shouting and praising he has done has to be counteracted, and after weeks of advertising "the world's greatest galaxy of stars" under one program, he can't very well convince readers that those on an opposing program are just as good.

A Nickel Can Be Made to Earn a Dime

That is but one point out of a hundred in favor of advertising the theatre in preference to the daily program. By impressing prospective patrons with some feature of interest about your house, you set them thinking, and no amount of program changing can hurt the good your advertising has done, because you need not change the general style and appeal of your copy with the change in brand names.

Every nickel invested in advertising should bring its equivalent to the box-office in additional patronage. It is far from an impossible task. Have the copy written with the purpose of making it pay. It is a splendid experiment for an exhibitor theoretically to change places with a prospective patron who, perhaps, has never attended his theatre, but gives his dimes to some competitor, and imagine just what form of advertising appeal would attract him.

Turning words into dollars is an important part of the daily life of every exhibitor and theatre manager. The advertising manager of any local newspaper is always willing to lend his assistance in writing ad copy with a direct appeal.

Pathe Weekly No. 62. (Oct. 27.) The news is all local. There is only one foreign item. San Francisco is mentioned three times. First in a swimming affair with Mrs. Wright and her daughter. Second, a game of English football and, thirdly, showing Fred Thompson advertising the coming fair. Brooklyn is also well represented with photographs of the Irish-American athletic games. Governor Fielder, in Jersey City, unveiling a monument is next The swim between the French and English in Paris was interesting. Present Democratic candidates are given a boost, but nary a Republican in sight. Miners rescuing their mates in the coal mines and "Bud" Fisher's clever sketches conclude the picture.

Across Swiftcurrent Pass on Horseback. Edison. (Oct. 27.) Swiftcurrent Pass, in the Northwestern part of Montana, is but little known to the remaining inhabitants of this globe. It is one of the wildest and most inspiring places in the world. The Edison Company has filmed a party of campers starting with packing at sunup to fording the pass in the evening. Flapjack cooking and a wrestling match complete the four hundred feet.

Sports in Merrie England. Kalem. (Oct. 27.) There is perhaps a subtle touch of irony in this. The finale is a suffrage parade. Hunting the otter and the Goodwood races were very well pictured.

A Hornets' Nest. Edison. (Oct. 27.) If the old saying, "Laugh and grow fat," is to be literally taken, this picture might be sold to thin people the world over. A sort of a "Dingbat and the Family Upstairs" tale, in which noisome neighbors are removed by hornets. Barry O'Moore, as Dick Morris, is very good.

Pendulum of Fate. Selig. (Oct. 27.) Two Reels. This drama holds the attention of the audience. A story of a hidden marriage, and the hardships of the wife and her children to recover their own at the death of the husband and father. The mother is a little too young for the part.

KINEMACOLOR MACHINES

In connection with the new film service proposition offered to exhibitors by the Kinemacolor Company of America, it was stated last week that the company is offering for sale the Kinemacolor machine. At their offices it was learned that several machines have been sold in the ten days since the advertisement first appeared announcing the new service scheme.

Up to this time these machines have always been leased, remaining the property of the Kinemacolor Company. This has made it impossible for the exhibitor in the smaller towns to secure the special Kinemacolor productions, such as "The Durbar," "Balkan War," "Panama Canal," "Weber & Fields Series," etc.

Under the new system, any theatre having a Kinemacolor machine installed will be in the market to rent special features from the company immediately they are released.

Leonora von Ottinger is a recent addition to the Universal Company. She is to appear in second leads and heavies in the Lawrence-Victor releases.

Miss von Ottinger is a finished actress, having appeared in, besides many other notable roles, the role of Baroness Revandel in Zangwill's "The Melting Pot."

"The Sea Wolf," by Bosworth, Inc., has been sold to the following States and cities: San Francisco, Cal.; Washington, Utah, Nevada, Wyoming, Idaho, Montana, Colorado, New Mexico and Arizona. William L. Roubert predicts getting the remaining States in a short time.

A Common Sense Argument

Mirroroide advertisements have been read the world over. We do not depend absolutely on advertisements to accomplish the results we have attained. We may quote to you from page 1060 of the Moving Picture World, issued last week, in which Mr. R. W. Buzzell, of the Plaza Theater, Northampton, Mass., writes: "I have a good union operator and a Mirroroide screen, and will back my picture against any other exhibitor." This is partly an abstract. Read it for yourself. This was contained in the Moving Picture World, Sept. 6th issue.

The common sense of the argument is this: that we will cheerfully back Mirroroide up against any screen or projection surface in the world today. Backed up with any amount of cash that any other of our competitors care to designate, as to the merits of a true projection surface and the resulting accomplishments. These tests are to include angle views, close up views, and the practical perspective of the said projection. We have read a number of advertisements from our competitors. Can they do as they claim? We claim they cannot. Then again, Mirroroide is put on the market at a price within the reach of every exhibitor, because we are equipped to turn out, if necessary, two hundred screens weekly, which ensures no delays. We have the proper factory facilities, cash capital, and the proper machinery to do as we claim. If you doubt, our large free samples are convincing.

If you desire recommendations from any portion of the entire universe write us, and we will gladly inform you who has one of our Mirroroide screens in use. There are 4700 Mirroroide screens in use today, which warrants the assertion that Mirroroide is the best by test, and has proven to be superior to any other screen now on the maket, barring none. Get our large free samples. Postage prepaid. Test any way you desire against any other curtain or screen in your town. This is a common-sense argument, and what your eyes see you can't help but believe.

RALPH DELMORE

Few actors connected with the American stage in the past decade have achieved more distinction in character rôles in the modern drama than Ralph Delmore. He is a quiet, studious gentleman, who has made a lifelong study of stage types, and frequently illustrated them through his own histrionism most palpably; but, like many character actors, he has portrayed rôles the exact opposite of himself—the blustering malcontent, the ward heeler, the grafter, and all the potential sinners that figure in the drama of modern business life—and has done them so ably and so well that the public had begun to think that he was a true terror. Few men have made a keener, closer study of the drift of modern drama than Mr. Delmore, who recently became associated with the Selig Polyscope Company in Chicago as a producer; nor is he inexperienced in this line of work, for he was associated eight months with the Lubin establishment in Philadelphia, working in a particular line of modern plays that had a large call for types. He has the greatest faith in motography as a means of dramatic expression, and declares that the art is now upon the threshold rather than attained anything like full flower in its achievements, wonderful as they are.

CLIFFORD BRUCE ILL

Owing to the severe illness of Clifford Bruce, of the Selig Company, Director Oscar Eagle has been forced to discontinue work on a number of important scenes on "The Royal Box." On account of the same reason work has been delayed on the great detective play, "The Circular Staircase."

The settings are splendid, and the cast strong. Violet Barry, the only woman, is blessed with a clear field and makes the most of it.

The production was shown at the Winter Garden on October 22nd before a representative audience, composed mainly of persons interested in dramatics in various capacities, to the number of about four hundred. The dramatic scenes were very well received.

EFFICIENCY; The Slogan of Modern Business is more truly applicable to the motion picture industry than almost any other field; and most particularly so to the photoplayhouse. Therefore, the very best equipment is none too good.

Simplex THE PEERLESS MOTION PICTURE PROJECTOR

produces clear, steady, flickerless pictures that cannot be excelled by any other projector now on the market.

As evidence of its supremacy in the projection field it is now specified as standard in almost every first-class new theatre in and about Chicago where it was first introduced less than two years ago.

THE MARTIN ROTARY CONVERTER (3 phase—automatically synchronized) is the highest type of Alternating Current rectifier yet produced for the transforming of 25-30-60 cycle current and either 110-220 or 440 volts into direct current giving pure white light economically (80% efficient—guaranteed).

Let us tell you about these wonderfully efficient machines.

Ambition!

The Question

"Billy," said the Usher to the Operator, "the boss is working us too hard. I'm going to kick."

"Gee, I'm getting tired of this every-day grind myself," answered the Operator.

"Here, look at this," laughed the Usher, pointing to an advertisement in a magazine he held. "Telling about earning money in spare time. That's a joke. What does a fellow want to work for in his spare time? I get enough, and then some, without that."

"Me, too," echoed the Operator, and they started for a poolroom to pass the hour remaining before opening time. Their employer noted the departure of the Usher and Operator; the direction they took; the unhung posters; the uncleaned projector, and said nothing.

The theatre burned down. The Operator and Usher idled until necessity drove them to waiting on table and "doubling in the sink" for their meals.

Soon their employer opened a new and larger theatre, but he did not re-employ the Operator and Usher. That didn't bother them, but the fact that they now had to work did.

That's Not Ambition

The Answer

"Jim," said the Usher to the Operator, "it strikes me that we've got a lot of spare time going to waste every day. Can't we do something to earn a little money outside?"

"Sure, here's an advertisement about representing The Motion Picture News in our spare time. Let's answer it."

They did; received an appointment by return mail as local representatives, and went to work. At first they devoted all of their spare time to the proposition. Their friends guyed them for being dubs. "You only live once. Have a good time while you're at it," they advised. But the Operator and the Usher kept right on working. They knew that "they only lived once." Soon their combined weekly earnings totalled $20 above their regular salaries.

"How do you get it so easily?" inquired their less energetic friends. "Work for us, and we'll show you."

Two of them did on a commission basis. Soon others followed. And their employer secretly noted the activities of the Usher and the Operator.

One day the theatre manager quit. The Usher succeeded him. Their employer opened a new theatre. The Operator became manager. Still their "friends" continued working for them on a commission basis, and these friends, in time, earned enough money for the Operator and the Usher to enable each to open a theatre of his own.

That's Ambition

We would like to hear from any theatre employee who possesses enough ambition to want to convert a part of his or her spare time into actual money. Two hundred representatives will be appointed in the next thirty days. Forty of these will be district representatives, with authority to appoint sub-agents. Be one of the two hundred who are going to divide thousands of dollars in commissions. In writing, please address:

FEATURES OF MERIT AND THEIR DRAWING POWER

"THE GREAT LURE OF PARIS"

A Drama of Mysterious Power in 3 Parts

A mystery of Parisian cosmopolitan life—where a great Russian scientist, Leonid Protasoff, exerts his superhuman powers on a poor girl, whom he raises to the heights of fame, where she is admired by the multitudes, only later to be dashed into the Abyss.

"SALVATION"

A Life Drama in 4 Parts

Can there be a greater tragedy in the life of man or woman than when you build and build all your life a family, and when you see that you have almost reached the Goal, and then, as if by a gust of wind, the family, the mainstay of civilization, crumbles away before your eyes? Can there be a greater tragedy? True, in our story the family is partially saved, but the price of Salvation is—a human life.

A Psychological Drama in 3 Parts

"JUSTICE OR LOVE?"

was the problem to decide for the coquette Ruth. At the critical moment, when the innocent Kirk defending a woman's honor silently accepts a prison sentence, Justice, which until then was lying dormant at the bottom of the heart of the coquette, announced itself and decided the question.

We want to emphasize the fact that the Acting and Photography are of the highest Quality. We have spared no expense in making our display of posters in all sizes, heralds, photos and slides, a Feature in itself.

MAKING A MAYOR

ELECTION NIGHT IN NEW YORK!

Of Extraordinary Interest to Everyone Everywhere

This film, taken under special privilege, shows for the first time the interesting career of a vote in New York's most exciting election—from the time it is cast, till it is counted in the big, busy room at Police Headquarters. Notable men—Sulzer, Whitman, McCall are shown; also the activities of women campaigners and voters.

Educational and Thrilling

The liveliest night in the Metropolis. Broadway jam—packed with its struggling, excited mob—the great crowds before the bulletin boards—the gay dazzling cabarets with their revellers and tango dancers.

Will Delight Any Audience

Length approximately 1000 feet. Exchanges should wire or write at once for reservations.

WHAT IS AN ADVERTISEMENT?

THIS query is even broader than "Why is an advertisement?" which was discussed last week.

* * *

PROBABLY the only person who can tell us just what an advertisement is is the recent graduate of a correspondence school. He knows all about it. Later, with experience, he finds he knows very little. And then he begins to learn.

ADVERTISING is very much like women. The less you know the more you think you know.

ADVERTISING sense is largely instinctive. It doesn't admit of many set rules. Good advertising men, just like salesmen, are born, not made. The very best advertising men are often manufacturers who don't know they are advertising men, or who at least don't claim to be. They give an idea to a copy man who thereupon evolves a campaign, and claims the success as his own. As a matter of fact, he deserves little credit.

* * *

THE idea is the thing. Phrases don't count.

BACK of every successful campaign there's a big idea. And that idea is peculiar to that campaign. It can rarely be used with success for another kind of product.

* * *

A FEW years ago three high-salaried advertising men in New England—one representing a great publishing house, and two representing leading advertising agencies—met in earnest conclave.

* * *

"WHAT fools we are!" said they. "Here we are—making millions for other men by telling them how to advertise! Why not do it ourselves?"

* * *

SO they selected a product, made up an appropriation and launched a campaign. At the end of a year they pocketed a big loss, swallowed their surprise, and closed their offices. It was costly, but they learned one valuable point—that the same advertising rules don't apply to every product.

They had sold other products for other people by the self-same methods they applied to their own.

BUT they were not original enough, clever enough to put the right selling idea back of their own article.

HOW does one arrive at this right selling idea?

SIMPLY by knowing your product and knowing its field.

KNOWING the field means knowing the purchaser and the best channels of reaching him.

I WONDER how many advertisers really know the exhibitor—I mean the American exhibitor of today, not the one of yesterday; I mean the North, East, South, West exhibitor, not just the New York or Chicago exhibitor; I mean the new kind of exhibitor who is a representative, often a leading, citizen, a property holder, a man of good business sense, intelligence and often imagination.

SOMEHOW the idea has been established that there is only one kind of exhibitor and only one way to talk to him. There seems to be a dread fear of "shooting over his head."

* * *

AS a matter of fact this "shooting over the head" idea is the most arrant, costly sophistry ever upheld in the advertising business.

* * *

I DON'T believe there is any danger of going over the exhibitor's head with advertising copy; but even so, isn't it true that when you put something good over a man's head he is quite apt to reach up to it.

* * *

ANYWAY I should say that the best advertising maxim is to study carefully what the other fellow is doing—and then do entirely different.

WILLIAM ALLEN JOHNSTON.

STEREOSCOPIC PICTURES ON THE SCREEN

Why They Cannot Be Successful

By THOMAS BEDDING

THE patent records of the motion picture supply amusing reading to those who are aware of the actual possibilities of invention in the field. We use the word "invention" as a figure of speech. It is a term of convenience. An invention implies that the mind of the inventor has evolved something new.

But real inventions are scarce. Those things that are dignified by the name of inventions are more or less adaptations of old ideas or variations of established principles—the principles of the motion picture are as old as the earth, if not the universe, light being the fundamental basis of all the principles availed of.

The records to which we refer in the previous paragraph are largely of a repetitional and redundant nature. It is the same thing over and over again, with such mechanical regularity that we are driven to conclude that most of the patentees are wholly ignorant of the subject; or that they or their patent agents or attorneys do not search the records with sufficient diligence to see what has been done before, ere they draw up their patent specifications and submit them to the patent offices.

One of the commonest patents taken out in connection with the subject is that for making stereoscopic motion pictures. A stereoscopic motion picture if you could make it would have all the depth, roundness and distance of nature itself. But you cannot make a stereoscopic motion picture. That is, you cannot make it and see it properly. Or, at any rate, you see it so indistinctly that it is practically equivalent to not seeing it at all.

A little acquaintance with the theory of binocular vision will demonstrate the difficulty if not the impossibility of making these motion pictures.

In the first place, you require two cameras working side by side, or one camera embodying the same idea. When you project your positives on the screen, you must have them slightly out of register, just nearly superposed or overlapping. When you look at the picture so made and so projected with the unaided eyes, you are conscious of nothing but a blur. In order to see it in relief, you require a pair of special oculars.

In other words, you have to put a stereoscope to your eyes. This instrument will enable the left eye to see the left picture on the screen and the right eye to see the right picture, and thus seeing them, the brain will combine the two pictures and so you will get the effect of relief. The ocular, however, cuts off so much light that you can hardly see the picture.

It all comes to this: that you cannot see stereoscopic motion pictures without a stereoscope, and people in a motion picture theatre if even they had a stereoscope cannot see the pictures distinctly enough, so—cui bono?

It must not be overlooked that ordinary motion pictures are in themselves partly stereoscopic by reason of the fact that in a picture showing an original subject on different plans objects in the foreground create a greater effect upon the mind through the eye than objects at a distance and so the mind gets the impression that the picture has relief.

When you next look at a motion picture of a scenic, where a train is speeding through the country, you will notice the trees, etc., in the foreground of the picture look solid, i. e., are stereoscopic.

This is because, as we have just explained, persistence of vision takes greater cognizance of objects in the foreground than of those in the middle and distant planes. It is all a question of sensuous impression.

At a later date, we will go more fully into the optics of this matter. Our object in writing the present article is to discount any further patent efforts in this direction. Motion pictures and stereoscopic relief on the screen are physically impossible—at present.

MARC KLAW

The "K." of K. & E.

"ARE you going to make pictures?" I asked Mr. Klaw when we met in his office in the New Amsterdam Theatre Building a few months ago. Mr. Klaw smiled a deprecatory smile. He also said something indicative of none too great a faith in what is printed in the newspapers. Yet, I knew before Mr. Klaw himself that he would make motion picture because I have been studying Marc Klaw's mind for several years. I watched him on his trips to and from Europe and I made it my business to know whom he has called on when he has gone to London, Paris and other European centers. Mr. Klaw on these journeys showed the photographic bend of his mind.

Mr. Klaw is a practical photographer, so is his son Joseph. Mr. Klaw has a knowledge of the motion picture business not commonly suspected.

Moreover, Mr. Klaw is thoroughly in touch with the scientific principles of the motion picture. He and his, that is, he and his technical associates, are thoroughly competent and qualified to make motion pictures.

IN the nature of things, it is impossible for the theatre to absorb the picture. This may seem a startling statement to make, but let us reason things out. When in the years 1839 and 1840 the foundations of modern photography were well and truly made, miniature painters, painters and sculptors were alarmed. They feared that photography would put them out of business. It did and it did not. It absorbed those who were not powerful enough in virtue of their own abilities to hold out.

The same thing is going on with regard to animated photography or motion pictures. It is absorbing dramatists, theatrical producers, painters, actors and actresses and the like. Instead of the stage annexing or absorbing the motion picture, it is the other way.

If I read Mr. Klaw right, he is of that way of thinking. He has a cleanly analytical business mind. He respects the man who knows. On the face of it, the action of Klaw & Erlanger in taking over the Biograph evinced a firm grasp of the motion picture situation. There need not be any fear that the Biograph Company, under the new dispensation of things, will not release PICTURES. They have probably the finest studio in the world and ten directors at work. They have all the resources of money, brains and a market.

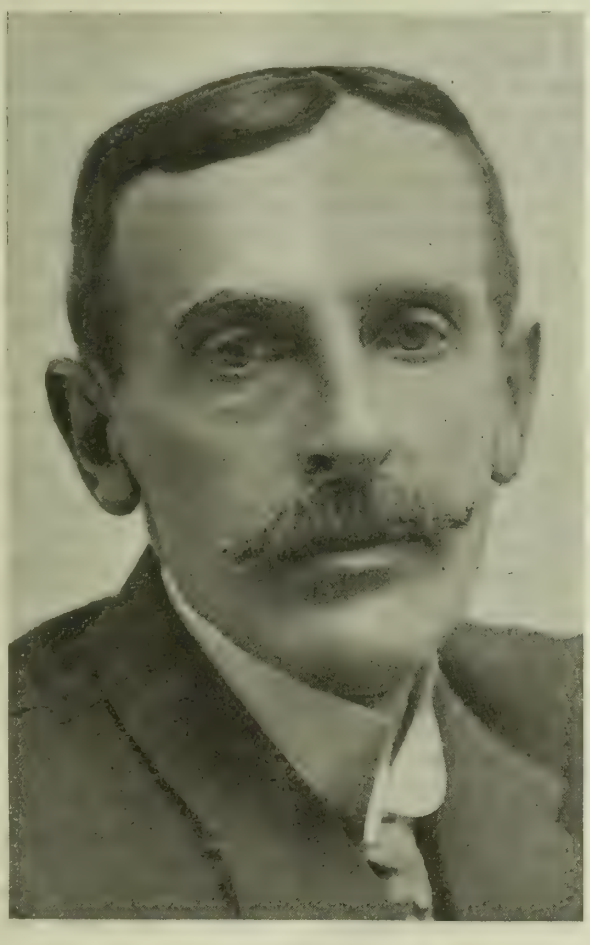
PERSONALLY, I regard the entry of Klaw & Erlanger into the picture field as a welcome one. Three or four years ago when I ventured to forecast the possibility of such a thing I was laughed at. Again: With photo drama houses being erected in the center of New York and big theatres passing under film control, it surely seems to be up to Klaw & Erlanger to convert some of their theatres into specially adapted motion picture houses.



MARC KLAW

According to information, the Biograph Company, as it is at present working, is accumulating negatives. It is supposed that at the beginning of next year this company will be in a position to release, if necessary, considerably more than two pictures a week. Biograph quality has for years passed into proverb. Every new entrant into the field since 1908 has taken the Biograph pictures as a standard. There is no reason to suppose that under Klaw & Erlanger control the Biograph quality will suffer the least diminution.

My object in giving special prominence to the personality of Mr. Marc Klaw in this connection is for the purpose of testifying that he and his are photographers. Photography is the root base of the motion picture. If you get good photographers at the head of affairs, there is a greater chance of getting good pictures than if they don't understand this branch of the subject. Hitherto there have not been photographers enough in the business.

Marc Klaw and his son and their entourage have the photographic, productional and artistic ends at their finger tips. That's where ends should be: at the tips of things. But this is a joak.

It is the exhibitor who will benefit by the incursion of Klaw & Erlanger into the picture making field, and after the exhibitor the public.

T. B.

By J.B.

ONE of the regrets of a life fairly full of regrets is that I never met the late Edward H. Harriman. This reflection was sprung upon me the other day when I was looking at the picture of his son. This young fellow is a Yale boy interested in rowing. He has scores of millions of dollars in his absolute right. He is one of the two most powerful young men in the United States, if not the world. The other is Vincent Astor, who also is powerful in right of the possession of money—the only human power that counts after all, and after all is said and done. Money, the Blessed Trinity, L. S. D., Libra Ecudi, Denari, I.s.d., Dollars and Cents. (Dimes and dollars, dollars and dimes, an empty pocket is the worst of crimes.)

I LEARNED the couplet which concludes the first paragraph when I was very young, and have never lost sight of its moral. Edward Harriman was a power in virtue of the money he owned. I was sorry that he died at the early age of sixty-one. I wish he had lived to carry out his scheme of controlling the whole of the railroad system of the United States. His power so exercised was bound ultimately to have reacted for the common good, because he would have become so powerful that the state would have broken his power and taken the fruits of it. In other words, Mr. Harriman's imperial work would have led to the nationalization of the railroad. You can reason and argue this out to a dead certainty.

VINCENT ASTOR and Averill Harriman seem to have inherited the minds as well as the money of their fathers. It is such minds that we want on the side of the motion picture. I would like to see their names and some of their money in some of the motion picture concerns which are shortly to be sprung upon the public. Those names would inspire confidence, and the business ability at the disposal of Mr. Astor and Mr. Harriman would make for commercial success. The promoter is abroad. Undeterred by the fate of the Associated Motion Picture Patents Co., the National, the Film Import, the Film Company of America, and many other stock-selling propositions pure and simple which wasted money and ruined men, are to appear in the motion picture field once more. It is such a delightfully accessible "Tom Tiddler's" ground where you can pick up gold and silver by simply stretching out your hand, is this picture field. Ah!

* * *

THE American public has not yet firmly caught on, or has been induced to catch on, to the motion picture as a gambling instrument. But when it does, and I think it is doing so, it will gamble and gamble and gamble. For the gambling instinct is probably more strongly developed in this part of the world than in any other. We take chances. I know something about these gambling propositions. In my ignorance I was identified with some of them—but now, nixy nix! The Film Company of America was the last. Exactly twenty-two months ago this concern gave me a $22,000 a year position and other pickings. All on paper. The idea at the back of the scheme was this: Buy up a number of plants, invent a number of exchanges, incorporate and scatter a corps of about sixty stock sellers throughout the country. These stock sellers were to tackle the butcher, the baker, the candlestick-maker. The scheme collapsed, of course. I heard incidentally afterwards that stock sellers were long busy amongst the Kansas farmers. And that money actually passed. It passed entirely by me, I am sorry to say. It is a habit that money has—it passes by.

SOME of these stock selling propositions have been without assets, although to be fair, most of them had something to sell. That is to say, they had business premises and a demand for films. Unfortunately, however, they were not equal to the occasion on the executive and business sides. They wanted to make money and get out quickly. They were not in the business for the good of the business. They were just promoters and gamblers. It is this element which is manifesting itself in the stock jobbing schemes now being hatched. You have a mixture of the meretricious and the insincere. The good is mixed with the bad. Some names of account in the film world are mixed with others that are of no account. The hawk and the pigeon are cavorting one with the other. Same old game.

THIS paper so far has taken, and will continue to take, a stand for that which is the best for the art and industry. It stands for good—good pictures, good men, good methods. It stands for conservative principles in business. Clearly, therefore, it is against the fly-by-night schemes which are being hatched for the fool. For it is the fool that these people are after. Legitimate means of entering the motion picture business are more numerous to-day than they ever were. Good pictures are in better demand than ever. It is not necessary for anybody to enter these picturesquely financed schemes in order to make money. All you have to do is to put down your money in sufficient quantity, apply artistic and business principles, and then you will make money.

* * *

IN course of time when these stock-selling schemes have passed away, as they are bound to pass away, we shall, I hope, see some reputable names such as those of Astor and Harriman on prospectuses. Then the public will be enabled to have confidence in them. You see the train of thought I was led to when contemplating the picture of Young Averill Harriman the other day? The picture field is so vast, its limits are so remote, that no man is too big for that field. Were he thirty years younger, it certainly would be worth the attention of Mr. Rockefeller. George Eastman, down at Rochester, is making 750,000,000 feet of film a year and he is a big man, bigger than any man in the motion picture making and distributing end. This end of the business is weak in big men. The photographic field of this and other countries has settled down to a condition of business reputability—but it had to endure the polite attentions of the stock-selling person, just as the motion picture field is doing now. When the stock-selling person has got out of the motion picture field, then this business of ours will stand an imminent chance of being put on a solid basis, or rather a more solid basis than it at present occupies.

VITAGRAPH LEASES BROADWAY THEATRE

A MOVE which, on the face of it, appears to have considerable importance has been made by the Vitagraph Company of America. That concern has leased the Criterion Theatre, one of the leading playhouses of New York and right in the heart of the theatrical district, and will make it the home of pretentious photoplays, with the admission price running as high as one dollar.

Both the Biograph and the Vitagraph companies have been reported to have been dickering with Charles Frohman for the theatre for some time. The rental which the Vitagraph Company will pay is said to be $50,000 a year.

The plan is to present feature films of sufficient merit to warrant the price charged, and to use the house as a sort of an advertising venture for the films of the producing company.

The probable importance of this move should not be underestimated It parallels, as far as the New York theatrical district is concerned, the expected move of the Klaw and Erlanger-Biograph combination. This company has announced several times that the pictures which it is producing will be shown all over the country in theatres which have heretofore been devoted to attractions of the speaking stage.

Many pictures have been produced and laid away on the shelf in anticipation of the opening of the campaign. Now along comes the Vitagraph Company and secures the entrée into the heart of New York.

The Vitagraph Company some time ago formed an affiliation with the Lieblers. Many big productions are planned. "Mr. Barnes of New York," in six acts, is even now being produced at the Flatbush studio. It seems extremely probable that these pictures will be shown at the Criterion.

Just how soon the Criterion will pass into the hands of the Vitagraph Company depends entirely upon the success of David Belasco's new play, a vice drama, written by Roland B. Molineaux, who once stood within the shadow of the death-dealing electric chair.

This is "The Man Inside," which will come to the Criterion, succeeding John Mason in "Indian Summer," which is to be moved to the Fulton Theatre.

Mr. Belasco expects great things of his first crime play, and does not expect to relinquish his rights to the Criterion before Spring, but the pictures will move in whenever he moves out.

FIGHT INDIAN BATTLE AGAIN

"Buffalo Bill" and General Miles Take Part for Essanay

A PART of the historical battle of Wounded Knee, which was fought December 28, 1890, was reproduced recently for motion pictures, near the agency at Pine Ridge, S. D., at the instigation of Col. W. F. Cody for the Essanay Film Manufacturing Company.

The battle was staged and pictured on the same ground where it was originally fought, several temporary houses and Indian tepees having been constructed to add to the originality of the battle. These were burned, with the train of wagons, in strict accordance with history, and the country contiguous to the agency was a seething mass of activity.

People from a radius of fifty miles had congregated to witness what is recorded in history as one of the fiercest and the last Indian war in the United States. The assistance of some of the same Indians who participated in the battle was secured and they played the same part to-day that they took in the battle twenty-three years ago.

Two troops from Fort Robinson took part. The battle was reproduced with the same accuracy in every detail, and General Nelson A. Miles, Brigadier General Marion P. Maus, General Frank P. Baldwin, Major General Charles A. King and Major Jesse M. Lee, who had not met each other for twenty-three years, served in the same capacity as when the principal battle was fought. The government was interested in the reproduction of the battle to the extent that copies of the Essanay films made will be filed among the archives of the war department as a permanent historical record.

CHANGING TRADE CONDITIONS

By GEORGE D. PROCTOR

THIS motion picture industry is the swiftest moving industry in the world. It is practically the only remaining field where fortunes are made over night. For instance, right after Harry Thaw made his dash to liberty, some motion pictures were taken of him in his cell in Canada. The total expense, including railroad fares and all incidentals, was $486. The first week's rental of about fifty prints brought in $20,000. Now gasp.

Changes come quicker in the motion picture business than in any other legitimate occupation. What is apparently a happy family of producing firms now may be a split into units, each operating independently of the rest soon. "The answer" of to-day is the discard of to-morrow.

WHO are the men who have become rich in the motion picture business? They are the ones who, a few years ago, were more accurate prognosticators than their fellows. They are the ones who best foresaw the coming changes and were prepared when the new conditions arrived or helped to create the same new conditions. The man who, at the present time, has an accurate forecast in his mind of what the conditions will be in the motion picture business two years from now possesses an asset of great value.

Many factors must be reckoned with when trying to peep into the future.

Feature films, subjects of three or more acts, seem to have arrived. At least most manufacturers are producing them and are devoting their advertising to the longer subjects, leaving the single reel subjects to be carried along by the impetus of the program through which they are distributed. The "big pictures," so called, the six to nine-act subjects are coming in. "Quo Vadis" was first and is estimated to have made a quarter of a million dollars for George Kleine. Newspaper interviews with Mr. Kleine furnish those figures. Now many more are coming. Will they all succeed is the question. Many think they will and there certainly is a scramble to get hold of long films. In New York George Kleine is building a theatre a stone's throw west of Broadway in Forty-second street to house the big films he will import. Meanwhile two versions of "The Last Days of Pompeii" are being shown at the Bijou and the Park, two Broadway theatres. The Vitagraph Company is said to have rented the Criterion Theatre to show motion pictures with the admission prices ranging up to one dollar.

Granted that the six to nine-part pictures will "get by," what of the many four to six-part pictures? They seem surer of success, for often they are more meritorious, less "padded." But they are playing with the admission ranging from five to twenty-five cents. So, in fact, are some bigger pictures. Then comes the question, "Will a man pay a dollar to see ANY picture when he can see a spectacular six-part film for twenty-five cents?" Right now the answer seems to be that there is plenty of room for all, and merit will ultimately win out.

THIS leads naturally to the prediction made by many that the day of buying films by footage must end. Several of the thinking minds of the industry feel this way. They contend that the time must come when films are purchased for their artistic worth and merit, not for the number of feet they run. This seems highly reasonable. Some producers will welcome this day. Others will not.

Circuits are another moot question. More and more motion picture theatres are combining into circuits and the results are very agreeable financially. One forecast, which is not without reason, is that a year hence will see films handled the way vaudeville acts are now handled. That is, that there will be "big time" circuits; "big small time" circuits, "small time" circuits and "small time time" circuits. By this plan a circuit or booking agency will buy a film and route it weeks ahead. The five and ten cent theatres will still exist. After all this is not entirely visionary. "In union there is strength." The circuits now in operation are showing the way. More and more exhibitors must see the advantages to be gained by joining hands. Then there is always the Alexander of business, the man who sighs for fresh fields to conquer. If he finds one picture house profitable he will go after another until he has what amounts to a circuit. For further information look over some Southern and Western states and New England.

The ideal arrangement and one which several firms have in view is for one company to control both the theatre and production end. This is the line along which the K and E-Biograph Amalgamation is working. Consider the exceeding beauty and simplicity of the plan.

The producing firm meets its expenses at least by selling its films to the affiliated theatres. Then whatever it sells in territory which does not conflict across the pond is added gravy. The theatrical circuit gets the pictures cheaper than it otherwise could through its affiliation. As soon as the purchase price is gotten back which should not take long with a chain of say, thirty theatres, charging good admission, all further receipts are clean profit and the pretentious pictures will be good for several months at least. Thus the right hand washes the left. Ideas are not patentable. If K and E succeed, as they seem likely to, others will follow. The only question is getting hold of the theatres and the pictures, and both can always be purchased. The Vitagraph Company for one has leased the Criterion Theatre in New York, according to reports.

What about the state rights buyer? Right now several big buyers have affiliations, some open, some supposedly secret, with circuits of theatres. They feed the films they buy to the interested theatres first, then to the others. Some see in this the day when circuits will buy their own pictures.

The state rights buyer is an important factor, especially now that the "open market" from the exhibitors' point of view is here, although there has been no change for several months in the alignment of the firms from the selling end. State rights buyers aren't very numerous. There are only about twenty-five heavy purchasers. They mostly buy for blocks of states. They have become tired of being forced to scramble for films every week, and have been rapidly tying themselves up by contract with the firms who can supply them with a definite number of releases in a given time.

WHEN they have contracted for all the films they need their buying activities will take a tumble. They will be satiated. Then the man with only a single feature to sell will have a hard time. He will have to sell it by virtue of a low price, not by merit. The phrase "the passing of the state rights buyer" is not an idle one. It may not be correct, but it is not far enough wrong to be foolish.

Who will write the scenarios for the motion pictures of the future? Will it be the fifteen-dollar boys or will it be men and women who are now turning out speaking plays, books and magazine articles. The authors who rely upon richness of verbiage and delicacy of phrasing will never be successful scenario writers for the fundamental part of the scenario is action not words, but the day of feeling that "a script is a script" is going fast. All the successes of the stage for the past ten years which are suitable for production in motion picture form are being filmed. The field is rich but not limitless. It will be exhausted, but before it is exhausted, the public will be educated up to demanding that a good story be shown on the screen. Then farewell to cheap scenarios, for prices must be paid which will attract the best authors of the day.

OH, IT'S AN INTERESTING LIFE!

Punctuated by GEORGE D. PROCTOR

ENTER the national advertising campaign, so-called. With mixed emotions and considerable interest, I learn that the Mutual Film Corporation has turned over $100,000 to be spent carte blanche, that the Universal Film Manufacturing Company has raised the ante with a $250,000 appropriation, and that the General Film Company is girding up its loins and may enter the merry fray. The gentlemen handling the Mutual campaign can't see the trade papers with the naked eye, while the Universal appropriation is to be over and above the trade-paper advertising.

How inexpensive national advertising campaigns are becoming! I always thought that a million-dollar appropriation was necessary and that the campaign should run for a year, anyway. For a national campaign is not advertising. It is publicity. The line of demarcation is sharply drawn. Advertising should be productive of direct results. Publicity is missionary work. A few pages in big publications can eat up $10,000 a week easily. At that rate $100,000 would last for ten weeks and $250,000 for twenty-five weeks.

This idea is new in this business. So I have been studying it from several angles. If a man goes duck hunting he doesn't pile all his ammunition out behind the barn and then explode it and say, "I guess they all heard that." He goes where the ducks are and then takes aim. Right now the business is partially up to the exchange man as far as program pictures are concerned. But when the exhibitor kicks, he gets what he wants. So it is really the exhibitor who has the ultimate say in the buying end. He is the duck in the story. When the man with the gun hits him he gets tangible results.

As missionary work a real national advertising campaign, one which would run for a year, would benefit the business. It would educate the public. It would bring into the motion picture theatres those who feel that pictures are for hoi polloi, those who think that "chase pictures" are still being shown. For such persons exist and they are the ones who will be mighty valuable customers, once they are converted. But it seems foolish to me to believe that an inadequate campaign of this order is going to bring tangible results.

One thing is certain. From the exhibitor's point of view the proposed campaigns are very fine. They are bound to help him. Now is the time for the man who has been lingering on the brink to embark as an exhibitor. The man with a motion picture theatre when these campaigns get under way will be the beneficiary.

THEY CALL HIM "LIGHTNING" HOPPER

But will he be so grateful that he will change to an opposition program because its advertising has helped the business in general and him in particular, and will he thus bring business to the national advertiser? Emphatically he will not.

What is the answer, anyway, when two big firms decide upon a national advertising campaign and a third is debating the question? Can it be that business needs stimulation? Is it missionary work? Is it a case of sheep following the leader? Is the idea to sell films or what? Figure it out for yourself.

E. Mason Hopper, comedy director with Essanay for three years, is in New York looking things over through a haze of cigar smoke preparatory to settling down. He has been quite the busy little boy these past few days, what with writing scenarios and making pictures.

Hopper is a versatile person. He has done everything on the stage from the lecture tour to "single" acts and comedies in vaudeville. Once he was "Lightning Hopper," the cartoonist. The name stuck when he took to making pictures, as he always speeds things up. By the way, two of the three comedies on the exclusive service of the General Film Company this past week were his. And three years as director with one company is quite a record.

C. A. (Doc) Willat, late superintendent of the factories of the New York Motion Picture Corporation, probably the country's best technical expert, is going after his announced policy of producing feature pictures himself in earnest. He is building a studio and factory over in Fort Lee, N. J. He places the cost of the buildings, exclusive of the cost of the land, at $60,000. I know Doc, and I know that his $60,000 is cash money.

Speaking of publicity men, let's take time to press a laurel wreath on the reluctant brow of Elmer J. McGovern of the New York Motion Picture Corporation. Elmer has only been with Kessel & Baumann a few weeks, but he is showing himself able to deliver the goods. Good publicity men are scarce in this business. That's why waste baskets are so large.

How the unwary publications fall for "yarns." An article on scenario writing in a contemporary advises the writer against night scenes, as "the only way to make an exterior picture at night would be by means of a continuous flash-light. Then it would look like a daylight picture." Then another publication, although forewarned, trots out that old fake about the motion picture press agents being about to form a league.

The Ohio censors have ordered from the Commercial Motion Pictures Company 60,000 feet of trailers, each four feet long, reading "Passed by the Ohio Board of Censors."

Taking of testimony for the defense in the Federal suit against the Motion Picture Patents Company under the Sherman anti-trust law will be resumed Monday. President Marvin, of the Patents Company, is expected to be the first witness.

An important innovation is made by the Edison Company in engaging Acton Davies, dramatic critic of the New York Sun, to review all scenarios before they are turned over to the directors for production. The Edison Company is recognized as one of the most liberal and fairest in the matter of the scenario. Mr. Davies is a recognized authority on things theatrical. His province will not conflict with that of the director. Edison's move will be watched with interest by other producers.

The Screen Club will formally open its new quarters at 165 West Forty-seventh Street, New York City, on Saturday, November 22.

W. H. Scofield, who went abroad some months ago for the purpose of securing the agency for the United States and Canada of the New Gloria Company, arrived on the Lusitania, Friday, accompanied by his wife. He had also with him the first copies of the Gloria's first six-reel production, "The Ghost Club," with Mario Bonnard, universally known as "Satan," having made his great success in the Ambrosio production of a feature by the same name.

Sans Effusiveness

John Bohemia Clymer gave a Hallowe'en party at his rooms. Bobbing for cherries was reported to be the principal sport.

Frank McGlynn, the Edison actor, left Monday with Jack Gleason, the sport promoter, who has the motion picture rights to the world's tour of the Giants and White Sox. They will join the teams at Los Angeles and continue round the world with them. McGlynn will direct the job of taking the pictures.

Charles L. Fuller, who formerly headed his own distributing company, handling the Helen Gardner pictures, is now with the World Special Films Corporation.

Howard Crampton is now a full-fledged member of the Imp Stock Company.

William J. Welsh left the Imp Stock Company a few days ago and will start with the Biograph.

C. A. Kelsey is very busy as the manager of the Victor studio at 643 West Forty-third Street, New York City, where the Florence Lawrence pictures are being produced for the Universal by Harry Salter.

Several of the Famous Players actors and actresses are glad to be alive after what they went through while taking some water scenes off the coast of Massachusetts. A company was sent up, consisting of Harris Gordon, M. J. Faust, Hal Clarendon, David Wall, Alexander Gaden, Laura Sawyer, Hattie Forsythe and others, to board a boat at Woods Hole and put out to Martha's Vineyard. So rough was the sea that a trip which usually takes an hour occupied two hours and a half. The players spent the time with cork belts girded round themselves. And, take it from them, they were very, very ill.

Thomas Greene, the Cleveland film man, sailed for Europe on the Imperator. He will buy features while abroad.

A Pathe company has left for St. Augustine, Fla., with Lillian Wiggins and Dorothy Kingdon as leading women. Wright goes as director.

Three Edison players are on the sick list. They are Richard Tucker, Edward Boulden and Julian Reed.

Received a postal from Silent Bill Haddock, down in Cuba with Augustus Thomas, Richard Harding Davis and the company of the All-Star Feature Corporation producing "Soldiers of Fortune." Also one from Jack Byrne, scenario expert of the Tampa Film Company in Tampa, Fla.

Stanley Twist, of the World Special Films Corporation and the Pompeii Film Company, is getting several companies of the Pasquali version of "The Last Days of Pompeii" ready for the road. This film is owned by the Pompeii Film Company.

A daughter was born recently to J. Stuart Blackton, of the Vitagraph Company of America.

Billy Quirk, who has been a successful screen comedian with Pathe and the Universal for a long, long time, starts out in his vaudeville act soon.

James Kirkwood, the Biograph director, took a camera-man to the Harvard-Cornell football game in the big stadium at Cambridge and photographed the crowd during the exciting moments of the game. The pictures will be used as "flashes" in the coming K. and E. production of "Strongheart."

Arthur Johnson, Lubin's popular leading man, is reported as ill.

Edward O'Connor, the Irish comedian of the Edison Stock Company, is a father for the third time. This time it is a boy. The latest addition makes two boys to one girl.

Edwin Barbour, the veteran dramatist, now of the Lubin scenario staff, is spending a short vacation in Bermuda. He is recovering from his recent illness and expects to write some scenarios for features during his absence.

R. D. Armstrong, for the past two years scenario editor with the American Film Manufacturing Company, has joined the Ammex Company at San Diego, Cal.

Winifred Greenwood, leading woman with the American Film Manufacturing Company, has been ill for a week or so. Charlotte Burton has been playing leads during her absence.

T. Vincent Smyth, the scenic artist at the Imp studio, painted a back drop recently, showing a conservatory which can hardly be distinguished from the real thing. The perspective is remarkable.

Witt K. Cochrane, head of the Chicago advertising agency which bears his name and which will handle the $250,000 the Universal will spend on its national advertising campaign, spent several days in town laying out the campaign with his brother, R. H. Cochrane, secretary and treasurer of the Universal.

E. T. Peters, who owns an exchange in Dallas, Tex., is spending a few days in New York on business bent.

C. J. Williams and Richard Ridgely, Edison directors, are taking their companies to Florida for the Winter. Williams will produce comedies and Ridgely dramas. Among the players who will go along are Mabel Trunelle, Herbert Prior, Elsie McLeod and William Wadsworth.

Ethel Davis, Edwin August's leading woman at the Universal Pacific Coast studio, is nursing injuries received by a fall into a thirteen-foot pit when a platform collapsed while taking a Roman costume picture. At one time her life was seriously threatened, but she is recovering now.

Bert Diener, late of the Mutual Films Corporation, Buffalo, has been engaged by the World Special Films Corporation as general manager of their Buffalo branch, with H. G. Segal as assistant manager.

Jule Burnstein, of the World Special Films Corporation, has arranged with William Fox to play their "Sapho" in his houses.

J. G. Conner has been engaged as manager for the St. Louis branch of the World Special Films Corporation, located at 804 Pine street.

FOR THOSE WHO WORRY O'ER PLOTS AND PLAYS

WILLIAM LORD WRIGHT

Likes Detailed Scripts

CALDER JOHNSTONE, editor-in-chief of the Universal Film Company manuscript department, was a newspaper man and a writer of stirring fiction before he assumed his present responsible position. Mr. Johnstone has brought the Universal script department to an enviable standard, and, together with his assistants, C. B. Hoadley and Captain L. T. Peacocke, has accomplished much for the struggling writers. Mr. Johnstone's advice to writers is to leave "correspondence schools" alone. He writes us as follows: "The Universal Film Manufacturing Company is the first firm to take the initiative in giving the photoplay author credit for his work on all poster advertisements as well as upon the film itself. This suggestion was originally made by Captain Peacocke, it being his opinion that once an author has established a reputation for doing good work, like an actor, he has a certain drawing power with the public. This, when his name appears in front of the theatre as the author of any good play, should have a tendency to help increase the patronage. It has long since proven so in connection with the legitimate stage, and there is no reason why it should not prove equally valuable to the motion picture art. It will also stimulate the ambition of the amateur author.

"The question has been asked as to whether the present form of script will ultimately be changed in order to give the writer a wider scope for detailed characterization, action, suggestion as to atmosphere, etc. The Universal desires all such suggestions, and the more detailed the script, providing it is not verbose nor inconsistent, the more chance the script has of being accepted. As an instance, a script was recently purchased from a Mr. Lewis A. Blodgett, of Schoharie, N. Y., mainly because he took the trouble to enclose photographs showing desired scenery in his locality where the picture could be taken. He also took the trouble to go into minute details not only as to the development of the story, but also as to local conditions, thereby aiding the director when the picture was made.

"It is difficult to give an honest opinion as to whether the average script is better to-day than a year ago, for the simple reason that so many thousands of new amateur writers are entering the field day by day. Considerably less than one per cent of scripts received are worth anything. The so-called schools for the instruction of photoplaywriters unquestionably do more harm than good. They stimulate an ambition not merely to write, but more particularly to earn some 'easy money' on the part of hundreds of individuals who never could write were they to live a thousand years. The gift of writing can be developed, but the initial impulse must be one of individual originality, else the writer can never get out of the rut of common clay.

"The average script received comes from persons who are so-called 'picture fans,' and who derive their ideas from what they see on the screen, rather than from what comes from any original thought. It is a strange fact, on the other hand, that the trained magazine-writer does not seem to make the best scenario-writer. An entirely new school has been developed, and the best scripts submitted and produced are those coming from authors who have developed their talents solely along this particular line. Undoubtedly, the best scripts are those written by trained scenario-writers directly connected with the motion picture concerns. There is no question regarding the vast improvement in the Universal program, and the majority of scripts produced by the Universal have been written by staff authors. In the Eastern department only $200 worth of scripts have been bought during the past five months. Hundreds of passably good stories have been submitted during this time, but of all these passably good stories, few were really worth purchasing. Most of them contained the same old plots, situations and ideas that have been used again and again. Originality must, therefore, be the watchword of any author seeking success in the photoplay field.

"Regarding the present tendency of increasing the product of the multiple reel, there seems to be little doubt but that its development is showing a tendency of being overdone. A one-reel story stretched out to a two-reel length never makes a good picture. The photoplay is different from a drama if for no other reason than for its lack of dialogue to carry the plot. A play, therefore, that has been a remarkable success in three or four acts will not necessarily make a successful photoplay in three or four reels. There is a big question as to whether the movement for the production of famous plays will be as successful as many seem to think. Some have already fallen by the wayside.

"As a parting advice to the amateur writer, one maxim may well be followed: leave so-called schools for the instruction of photoplay writing alone, they do not teach originality. If the author feels that he has original ideas, develop them along original lines. The technique or form of writing scenarios will be furnished by any company purchasing scripts of the outside market. The author should never attempt a two-reel story until he has succeeded in selling a one-reel story."

A Few Comments

We believe that a gradual change is taking place in the form of scripts. As stated previously in this department, the wiser editors are permitting more latitude in detail, and welcome consistent and helpful suggestion or detailed action when written in the script. As Mr. Johnstone points out, form is not everything; it's the original idea that counts. The technique can be attended to by the purchasing company. Nevertheless, it is a fact that unless the author's technique is well-nigh perfect the market price will be cut for him. Two years ago Giles R. Warren, then writing the scripts which made Florence Lawrence famous, told us that he preferred scripts written out fully, with all helpful business and suggestions. Scripts we have furnished Mr. Warren were written very completely, some of them containing several thousand words. One reason the present form of outline is so strictly demanded is that, should it be otherwise ruled, an avalanche of essays and short stories might be inflicted upon the scenario-readers. A script written out fully does not mean a verbose script nor one containing fine writing.

Not a Success

The other day there appeared in a magazine a long story in which a writer told all about himself. The story, possibly, was of absorbing interest to the author. It went on to tell how many magazine stories he had written in so many days. It was certainly a record breaker for rapid writing. This sort of stuff is not good for the beginner. Do not see how many stories or moving picture plays you can write in a day, see how few you can write excellently well in a week. There is too much of the hurry-up work in all branches of literary endeavor.

The Two-Reel Plots

The two-reel picture plays are losing in popularity in the Middle West. Exhibitors are hearkening to the murmurings of the theatre fans. We differ from Mr. Johnstone, of the Universal, regarding the field for famous plays that are filmed. Past reputation will generally make them drawing cards. Two reels of classical subjects are also holding their own. It is the ordinary every-day two-reel release that is causing the objection. There are too many of them. Nearly every program nowadays consists of a two-reel melodrama and a one-reel comedy. Reverse the program. Give the moving picture patrons an abundance of two-reel comedy and less long-drawn-out melodramatic misery. It is a fact that theatre-goers in many cities are shunning the programs where the two-reel tragedies are announced. Again we urge the authors to stick to the one-reel stories. There will be a greater market than ever for them in the very near future.

The Latest Entrant

"The Blank System of Writing Photoplays" is a new concern coming into the "college" field to skin the credulous. "We are in a position to furnish film manufacturers with anything they want," reads the business card of the concern forwarded us by the editor of a film company. He wished us to keep an eye on the new concern. We will.

Hopp Hadley's Reasons

Editor Hopp Hadley, of the Reliance Company, will tell you next week just what writers of photoplays should be given credit on films and posters. Do not miss this "chat."

A Little Discouraged

Extract from a letter written us by a discouraged photoplaywright of New York City: "I have ideas jotted down for fifteen other photoplays. But I must confess that I hesitate to go on. I realize that my product may be devoid of merit. But I have been informed on several occasions of late that film companies rarely accept plays from "outsiders," that the best ideas therein are usually noted, and the script returned. I have invariably dismissed these arguments and have held to my belief that the companies are square. Is there really a market for photoplays written by the 'outsider?' Am I justified in continuing to plug away, with the hope of eventual success if the merit warrants it?"

A Christmas photoplay rejected was the final straw with this writer and we announced in plenty of time not to send holiday plots to any company. If you send plots to "wildcat" concerns you do it at your own risk. If you submit your stories to the established concerns you can rest assured of honest treatment. Because a beginner has eight, or even eighteen, scripts returned, perseverance may win for him. We wrote twenty scripts before making our first sale. There is a market for good original work be the writer on the "outside" or on the "inside."

The Hall of Fame

Miss Maibelle Heikes Justice's short serial in Cosmopolitan, "The Other Man," has been dramatized by Edward Poland, of the Lambs' Club, New York. Poland, an excellent actor, will take the part of Bleeker, the butler. The story has been arranged in one act and will become a vaudeville headliner.

Clarence A. Frambers, of Chicago, sold nine scripts in one week in September (they were not all written in a week) because he kept them swinging in all directions. He has some good ideas and, best of all, did not become discouraged when he failed to sell nine in a year.

E. H. Lynde Denig, who was formerly "The Film Man" of the Dramatic Mirror, has gone with Pathe Freres. He is to arrange, verify and supply sub-titles to their releases. Trade journalism suffers a distinct loss with Denig's departure.

No One-Reel Plots

Mrs. Louella O. Parsons, Essanay editor, writes to one of the News readers that Essanay is now buying only two-reel stories and is not now in the market for single-reel plots.

Geographic Inaccuracy

Be careful with your geography. We read a script the other day in which the heroine sailed for Europe via the Philippines! Fact, we assure you. Literary workers must constantly watch the little things and, in so doing, the big things will often care for themselves.

The Time Limit

Mr. Herman E. L. Beyer, in that breezy publication, Town Talk, writes: "In writing photoplays do not forget the time limit. In a regular play on the stage the acts vary as to duration. This will never do in photoplay. A reel is one thousand feet, and the arithmetical photoplaywright fares better than the guesser who merely constructs scenes without regard to the limitations. In a letter received from Richard Willis, that well-known writer says that the script presented was 'well put together,' but being a subject which they do only in two reels, the script would not 'stretch to it.' A sale spoiled by not acting the plot with a stop watch in one hand and the scenario in the other, and manipulating an adding machine with the toes of one's left foot while rocking baby with the other.

"The author of 'Bought and Paid For,' George Broadhurst, took seven years to write a play that took two hours and twelve minutes to produce. The average photoplaywright takes a few hours to do his work and then kicks because the editor criticises it. Get down to brass tacks. Translate the action into minutes, allow as many feet of action as it takes seconds for you to 'act it out mentally,' and then add as many feet of film as it takes seconds for you to slowly read your sub-titles. Leave some leeway for title, characters and censorship tag. Learn to count in the exact time of the ticking off of seconds and you can time your little play without the use of the watch."

We might add that practice makes perfect and that the experienced playwright can usually hit off the proper length of action almost by intuition. Some of these days we'll have Mr. Thanhouser's "natural reel." Then a good plot running twelve hundred or fifteen hundred feet will not be padded by "stretching" nor ruined by the chalk line and spirit level method.

The Proper Caper

The magazine that started off with a "photoplaywright association" and virtually told the critics they were dead wrong, has evidently arrived at the conclusion that the critics were right. The "association" idea was conspicuous by its absence from the current number. The proper caper "associations" with "membership fees" and "dues" are not beneficial to the struggling writer.

The Civil War Story

Put the soft pedal on the Civil War plot. It is doomed to go into the discard together with the story of the bandy-legged red man. Every possible angle by which the brave lieutenant is captured within the enemy's lines, and is rescued by the brave gur-rl, has been exhausted and the people are rising in the might of protest. Two years ago Kalem began filming war stories and the others soon followed suit. They were then new and novel. They were expensive to produce but they were popular. They are losing that popularity.

Who will be the pathfinder to blaze the way for a new and popular type of play? The time is ripe. Booth Tarkington is opening a new field of fiction by reviving an old one. He is reviving the boy type of Mark Twain's "Tom Sawyer," and his stories are published in the Saturday Evening Post and Cosmopolitan. Maybe the boy hero, from the viewpoint of the adult, would prove an innovation in Filmland, what?

Deserved Promotion

The thousands of friends of Editor C. B. (Pop) Hoadley will be delighted to learn that he has become editor-in-chief of the scenario department of the new Biograph-Klaw & Erlanger Film Co. Mr. Hoadley has been connected with the Universal Film Mfg. Company for a number of years, and that company regrets to lose his services. The fraternity will wish "Pop" good luck in his new position.

WILD ANIMAL FILM SOLD

Midgar Exhibiting Company Purchases Rights for Greater New York

Midgar Features announces that the rights for Greater New York on "How Wild Animals Live," with an option on some additional territory, have been purchased by a syndicate.

Mr. Middleton, of Midgar Features, states that this syndicate will probably operate under the name of the Midgar Exhibiting Company. The syndicate contemplates sending four companies on the road of "How Wild Animals Live," although no definite action has been taken on this matter, pending several contracts for exclusive State rights in certain territories.

Mr. Burton, of the Exhibiting Company, says he is enthusiastic about these pictures, and is firmly convinced that they will be a huge success wherever shown.

"How Wild Animals Live" is a six-act feature, accompanied by a lecture.

The Coliseum Theatre, 5911-17 Market street, Philadelphia, has been sold by Abraham Steinfeld for approximately $140,000. Building is 60x226, and seats 1,500. This is one of the largest theatres in West Philadelphia.

Griffith and the New York Motion Picture Corporation

Mutual Director Has no Connection with Kay-Bee, Keystone, Broncho or Domino Productions

OFFICIAL denial is made by the New York Motion Picture Corp. of the statement printed by several publications, not including The Motion Picture News, that D. W. (Larry) Griffith, late chief producer for the Biograph Company, will have entire supervision of the brands released on the Mutual program.

The New York Motion Picture Corporation produces the Kay-Bee, Keystone, Broncho and Domino brands. It is the largest producing firm releasing through the Mutual program. With its products Mr. Griffith will have nothing to do.

Thomas H. Ince, the vice-president and general manager, has entire charge, as ever, of the Kay-Bee, Broncho and Domino brands, and Mack Sennet, vice-president and general manager of the Keystone Film Company, continues to supervise the production of Keystone films.

Lubinites Dine Athletics

Film Folk and Champion Baseball Players Meet on Common Ground

ACTORS, producers and scenario-writers of the Lubin Manufacturing Company met celebrities of a different kind over the coffee cups recently, when a dinner was tendered the members of Philadelphia's champion baseball team by the Lubin folk.

Clay Green, of the Lubin Company, was toastmaster, and eulogized the athletes in a catchy poem. Among those present from the Lubin plant were Charles Goldsmith, secretary of the Lubin Company; Ira Lowry, the general manager; Earle Metcalf, leading man; William Carey, Henry Nugent, George Terwilliger, Lawrence McCloskey, E. C. Hall and Shannon Fife, of the scenario department; Joe Smiley, Harry Myers, John Ince, Edgar Jones, Isidor Schwartz, Tom Hopkins, William Hopkins and several more photographers and actors.

After the dinner the guests were shown several Lubin comedy pictures and also a one-act subject, introducing the Athletics.

The ball players also proved themselves speechmakers. The silver-tongued were Danny Murphy, Ira Thomas, Harry Davis, Chief Bender and Eddie Collins. The other guests were Ben Shibe and his two sons, Tom and John, vice-president and secretary of the club; Plank, Baker, Barry, McInnis, Eddie Murphy, Strunk, Schang, Bush, Brown, Wyckoff, Lapp, Oldring, Walsh and Pennock.

MAKING TITLES UNDERSTOOD BY ALL

Wilfred Cook Suggests Esperanto for the Purpose

THE film producer who will invent a system of titling and subtitling films which all people may understand will achieve a great practical advance in the art. Wilfred Cook, in "The Bioscope" (London), has some suggestive reflections on the subject. He points out that:

One of the greatest difficulties which producers have to contend with is that they are compelled to cater for tastes and ideas as diverse and various as are the races in the world. Some are pleased. Many are displeased. Films obtain the greatest popularity amongst races of the same origin as that of the producing company. It could scarcely be expected that a drama, however good, revealing the intrigues of the French and Italian Courts at the time of Catherine de Medici would be thoroughly appreciated by, say, a pastoral population living in Canada. It might be a pretty film, well staged and acted, but the patrons of a theatre in a Western rural district in all probability would not understand it.

Generally speaking, European races may be divided into two classes—the Latins and the Teutons. To the former belong the French, Italians, Spanish, Portuguese and some Swiss, whilst the latter class consists of English, Dutch, Germans, Austrians, Danes, Norwegians, Swedes and the remaining population of Switzerland living on the German border. There is another division existing in Europe—namely, the Slavs—to which belong Russians, Finns, Bulgars, Servs, Roumelians, Montenegrins and Galicians.

THE dividing line between Latins and Teutons, both as regards manners and customs, as also appearance and ideas, is sharply drawn. On the other hand, the Slavonic races merge gradually into the Teutonic.

A film which has been entirely produced by any one of the above-mentioned Latin races will find favor amongst the others, because these races are allied to each other and have similar tastes, ideas and thoughts. In the same way, a film produced by any Teutonic race is readily understood and enjoyed by the others.

In the early days of the motion picture the Latin class of film was predominant, and everyone will remember the difficulties which the public experienced in endeavoring to follow the stories which were told at that time on the screen.

To cite one instance—namely, the custom of living in France in blocks of flats and the little oddities in connection with the concierge (janitor). Of course, by this time the public has become accustomed to the concierge, though he never looks anything else but strange and foreign, and the best name which title-writers have been able to devise for him is "house porter," which after all is about as near a description as "mammal" would be for a kangaroo.

BUT since the advent of Teutonic films, and especially German films, we are enabled to see pictures rivaling the Latin productions in every respect, and yet more according to our own ideas and customs, for our "cousins across the North Sea" are indeed our relatives, springing, as they do, from the same original stock.

No stronger evidence of this can be found than the similarity between the English and German languages, whilst Dutch is midway between the two. Below is a short list of words to illustrate this assertion:

English	Dutch	German
Glass	Glas	Glas
Man	Man	Mann
House	Huis	Haus
Fish	Visch	Fisch
Sea	Zee	See

The natural result is that the English-speaking public is more "sympathetic" to German films. They do not feel outside their own sphere whilst watching them, and consequently enjoy them the more. Furthermore, pictures which are not entirely in sympathy with the spectators must be explained, either, as in Japan by a "lecturer," who stands by the screen and shouts out the various phases and developments of the plots, or, as in England, by a multitude of sub-titles.

The better the film, or at any rate, the more nearly that it approximates the ideas of the people who are looking at it, the fewer sub-titles will be required.

UP to the present practically only scenics and comics have enjoyed the unique distinction of carrying only a main title, but now we are shortly to see a film, produced by the Deutsche Bioscope Company of Berlin, called "Landstrasse" ("On the High Board"), who unfolds its own story as clearly as a book, though the plot is by no means weak or simple, and this with only the following titles to explain it: "The Story Commences," "Time Passes," "The Story Ends."

The attention, therefore, is not distracted by the flashing on to the screen every few moments of a line or so of reading matter; the spectator feels himself carried away by the story; he unravels the plot for himself.

It is probable that films which circulate between allied races will before long be shown without explanatory sub-titles, but it is difficult to believe that this can be done with pictures produced by one race and circulated amongst another, though perhaps it will come to pass in the days of universal peace and language.

II. SOURCES OF INSPIRATION

TAKING up the theme which we opened up last week, that of fresh sources of inspiration for motion pictures, we think it of sufficient importance to devote a second article to it. Turning over the pages of our artistic contemporaries devoted to the motion picture in Germany, we perceive that the ideas we are here expressing are felt there, namely, that good, still pictures may be made the motives or inspirations of motion pictures.

There is, for example, a reproduction in one of these papers of the famous painting "Napoleon" on board the Belleroppon. This picture is by Orchardson. It depicts the little corporal in the hands of his captors on board ship. Evidently our German friends have taken this single theme to build a picture and probably in the film you will see a reproduction of the still painting. But here a difficulty presents itself. The copyright in Orchardson's picture has not expired and that being the case, if you make a motion picture of a copyright still painting, you are liable to be sued for damages.

There is no doubt in our minds that alert American producers will soon be making motion pictures around these inspirational ideas. We think they are wise in their doing so. It should put a new complexion on the business. We should then be assured of pictures wholly or in part—PICTURES.

This copyright difficulty is one which all interested in the art and industry should keep in mind. It has, as we have pointed out before, great importance in view of its possibilities. If you show a motion picture in your theatre, part of which includes action from a copyright play or part of a copyright picture or part of a copyright novel, you are liable to be proceeded against. Plays and novels have been pirated wholly or in part by film makers. In the natural order of things, it is the turn of the picture, but we shall, in the interests of the art and industry, try to avert anything of the sort, and so we publish these warnings.

The Motion Picture News is the only publication of its kind, at any rate on the American Continent, which is constantly calling attention to the film makers and exhibitors who are continually running risks in respect of copyright matters.

THE FEATURE FILM OF TO-MORROW

By EDWIN L. BARKER
Of I. H. C. Service Bureau

THE industrial and the educational are to be the feature films of the future. Is that a surprising statement? It's true, just the same, even though many manufacturers and exhibitors smile and shake their heads. It is the way of all things. They start as amusement and develop into things more practical and worth while.

The phonograph began as an entertaining toy. It has become a necessity in everyday business and education. The automobile was a luxury—a pleasure car. Now it is playing an important part in the world's business.

Interesting as they may be, one cannot grow over-enthusiastic over little photoplays. The industrial and educational pictures are sure to rise from the split reel to a feature position. Not all educational pictures are industrial, but all industrials are educational.

After all is said and done, in this age of big business, the tariff, and the high cost of living, there are no subjects closer to the people than the why and the how of the things we eat and wear and use. We all want to know—that is a human instinct as strong as life itself. Children want to know and so do grown-ups. The older we grow the more we want to know, and then after we know we are not satisfied. The motion picture can be made a great satisfier of curiosity.

We sometimes say to ourselves that we are pretty well educated. But many of us are woefully ignorant. All our lives we have been wearing clothes and shoes, yet how many of us know anything about clothes and shoes? Do we know how the wool is grown and the leather tanned, and how clothes and shoes are manufactured? Not one person in a thousand has any idea of the processes through which clothes and shoes must pass before they reach us ready to wear. We live in rooms filled with furniture, yet we know nothing about furniture; nothing about its history or how it is made. We eat bread three times a day, but what do we know of the story of bread?

At every turn of our day's work we are face to face with the unknown. It is true that we might read about how the things we eat and wear are manufactured, but we do not. We are too busy, or too lazy, or do not think about it.

The motion picture is an easy way to knowledge. The motion picture saves the time of reading, and it brings us face to face with the actual working facts. We see, and to see is to know. Many of the industrial pictures may be neatly tucked into a story; in fact, I think this is just where the big feature industrial picture will find itself. It is the industrial story that will figure in future releases.

A little more than a year ago I wrote "Back to the Old Farm" for the Essanay Company. This contained a human-interest love story, nad at the same time it contrasted the old, hard-working days on the farm with the easier methods of the present, and, incidentally, it showed many of the big, modern machines at work in the fields. This was an industrial story picture, and its success proves that the public appreciated it.

Here is a fact that may be of interest to the exhibitor. A few months ago a friend of mine saw at a downtown theatre an interesting industrial picture. He was so impressed with its educational value that he asked the manager of a picture house in his neighborhood to secure it. At the same time he suggested to the manager the idea of mailing out post cards to announce the date the film was to be run. The manager did this, and it resulted in more than a hundred extra admissions. This gave the manager encouragement, so from that time on he has made a specialty of industrial and educational films. He has raised the tone of his theatre, has substituted real piano music for rattlety-bang noise, and to-day he enjoys the largest patronage of any theatre in the neighborhood. He boasts of his automobile trade, and automobile trade is something to boast of. Instead of losing those who applauded the love stories and the stories out of the fuzzy west, he has held them, every one. In fact, their number has increased, and what is still better, other people drop in who never dropped in before.

This is always the way—it is the way to success. We want to go where the crowds go. Last week a man from a small country town in Wisconsin told me that his picture theatre lost money up until the time he put on some pictures of educational value. Since then his patronage has increased, and every Wednesday and Saturday night the theatre is crowded.

Two years ago the International Harvester Company of America sent out a film, "The Evolution of Harvesting." This film is still doing service. I kept close tab on its success, and a number of theatres that took it for one night kept it for three nights.

We have found that the interest in industrial pictures is very large, and we do not believe that is especially true in our case simply because our pictures show farm scenes. There is a fascination about the farm for most people, but we believe the public to be just as much interested in furniture, or sugar, or salt, or lead pencils as in anything else, if only the subject is presented in the right way.

It is up to the film manufacturers and the exhibitors to raise the motion picture to a high point. You will remember that a few years ago there was no vaudeville. Then they called it "variety." Women and children seldom attended the performances. But the managers got together and started in to improve things. To-day variety is a thing of the past and vaudeville has

Address: Music Department, The Motion Picture News

WHY have we so many defective theatres, such ill-mannered ushers and such poor music to accompany the pictures?

Because too many persons go into the motion picture show business with no experience whatever, and the belief that anything is good enough.

The comments heard and the inquiries received show that the exhibitor is taking much interest in the different departments of The Motion Picture News and is eager to receive helpful information.

Finds Few Organs or Orchestras

In Pittsburgh, Columbus, Springfield and Dayton I have found that most of the theatres, especially the best known houses, have not adopted a full orchestra or pipe-organ, but give very good and appropriate music with a pianist and drummer

In Cincinnati I called at the Family Theatre, where I was surprised to find a pipe-organ. I say surprised because I cannot see the need of such an expensive musical instrument when the house, with its 1,200 seats, has to keep patrons standing in the lobby. I did not like the pipe-organ, as I do not believe that the melodious tones and celestial notes of such an instrument fit a drama of the character of "The Switchman's Mistake."

From the size of the audience at the supper hour I would judge that the pipe-organ does not increase the receipts, as last January and February and at the same hour, the audiences were as good if not better than today. I will admit that it was a cold, damp day, which might have kept some patrons at home.

Here follows a letter from Mr. L. Shaw, Jr., which emphasizes many of the points I discussed in these pages:

Mr. Manager: Do you realize what an important factor music is to your business? Do you realize that music, inefficient and non-appropriate, can ruin the interpretation of your pictures? Are you trying to save a dollar on cheap talent? If so, you are an enlisted member of the "Penny Wise, Pound Foolish Club."

What jars the human system more than, for example, a piano smasher—who was designed to move pianos instead of playing them—a man or woman who pounds ragtime incessantly and unmercifully during the entire performance, whether it be a death-bed scene or a strong dramatic photoplay, that calls for nothing but classic and descriptive music.

Some so-called "artists" have as much conception of playing for motion pictures as I have in flying from here to Europe (or Hoboken).

One must be an artist to play to motion pictures. And an "artist" calls for good remuneration.

The writer has had a long experience in this branch as a pianist, and is in a good position to talk on such a subject intelligently.

"Playing to the pictures" is the keynote to a good motion picture musician, and in order to accomplish this feat one must have a large repertoire of international and descriptive music, and it is not usually the man or woman who values their services at a low figure who accomplishes the feat. Like everything else in life, good goods must be bought at a good price, and purchasing of cheap talent is false economy.

Ability to Improvise a Good Asset

Where there is nothing else to play for but motion pictures, it is my opinion, and I believe that of many others, that a so-called "ear" musician (providing he or she has a pleasing touch and a good repertoire) is a very superior type of artist for that kind of work.
